She remembered that a photographer had once told her that she wasn't really bad looking when she smiled. She decided that she would cultivate the habit of smiling, whether her heart felt like it or not. She soon discovered that the smile worked. Bored office boys and indifferent agents who had previously dismissed her with a curt "Nothing today" began to act a little more human. And finally, the miracle happened. An agency called her about a job.

It was for extra work only, but Norma was grateful. The story of that first movie job has been told before. Many times, in fact. But because it so aptly illustrates her mental alertness and resourcefulness I am going to tell it again.

WHEN she reported at the studio she found that some fifty girls had been called and that only a dozen were needed. Breathlessly, she watched the assistant director weed them out, picking the prettier, more experienced girls. Norma had been crowded to the back of the room. He hadn't even noticed her. Finally, he had selected nine . . . ten . . . eleven girls. Norma saw her first big chance slipping through her fingers. Suddenly, she coughed. The sound caught the man's ear and for the first time he looked in her direction. She flashed him her most charming smile.

"Okay," he grinned. "You'll do."

If Norma Shearer had not been wholly sincere in her determination to become an actress she would never have survived the hardships and discomforts of those first days in pictures. The studio was in Mt. Vernon, some distance from New York. This meant that she had to get out of bed before it was daylight, swallow a cup of coffee and dash across town—she walked to save car fare—to the Grand Central station to catch an early train.

The studio was a huge, barn-like affair and all of the girls dressed in a big unheated room. Sometimes they sat around all day, shivering in paper thin costumes, waiting to be called on the set. Nearly always it was midnight before Norma got back to her shabby little room and fell into bed.

For a time she worked more or less steadily. Eventually she graduated from extra work to bits. The world was beginning to look rosy again.

"My biggest problem was clothes," says Norma in speaking of those days. "I felt that an actress must have eye-compelling clothes. And since it was winter and I couldn't afford a good looking coat I conceived the idea of wearing a mannish overcoat, a man's felt hat and carrying a walking stick. I felt that such a costume would at least attract attention because it was different. It did. When I walked along Broadway people turned to stare at me. I was naive enough to think that I was making an impression. I know now how ridiculous I must have looked."

AFTER months of intermittent extra work and bits, through some miraculous stroke of luck Norma was given the leading rôle in a picture called The Stealers. Her spirits skyrocketed. She was practically a star! But, paradoxically enough, in spite of the fact that the director told her she was good, with the conclusion of that picture her luck seemed to take a holiday.

She was shrewd enough to know that after playing a leading rôle it would be professional suicide to revert to extra work. But after weeks of living from hand to mouth, making the endless rounds of the studios and agents' offices in all sorts of weather, carrying a package of worn stills under her arm, seeing about rôles which somebody else always seemed to get, she would have been only too glad to accept extra work. But she couldn't even obtain that.

Finally came the day when Norma knew that they were at the end of their rope.

"It's foolish for us to stay on here," she told her mother. "I guess I just haven't got what it takes. If we're going to starve we'd better do it at home."

The memory of that humiliation—going back home licked—is still vividly etched upon Norma Shearer's mind.

Her enthusiasm at low ebb, she sought work in Montreal and through sheer persistence succeeded in getting a job posing for a commercial photographer. It was far from realizing her ambition to be an actress. Destiny was beginning faintly to weave its pattern, to lay a foundation which was later to serve her well.

Next month's story will tell of the spin of the wheel of fortune which took Norma back to New York . . . and eventually to Hollywood. Watch for it in SCREEN BOOK.

is the hero, who started out to be an annoyance.

CRITICAL COMMENT: Sketchiness of ideas, a hastiness of treatment, gives this film the tone of having been rushed through as a programmer. It is entertaining enough, but cannot be classed as a gigantic. MacMurray's personality lifts it from dullness.—Produced by Paramount.

Little Miss Nobody

FAMILY FARE—Horatio Alger, Jr., would have glorified in the plot of this slim, exciting story of orphan life, had he been concentrating on tomboyish girls instead of youths with a purpose.

Here Jane Withers, in cute impudence enthusiastically leads a feud against a grumpy marketman with parentless kids being championed by her. Since Jane crusades for justice, even though her approach appears wrong, there is pathos, bathos and humor enough in this concoction to meet the needs of those who dote on juvenile stars carrying adult responsibilities.

Jane nobly sacrifices chances of adoption in favor of a little friend, played by Betty Jane Hainey, but Author Frederick Hazlitt Brennan sees to it that Jane Withers is rewarded at the end of the scenario.

After watching Bonita Granville, Shirley Temple, Jane Withers, et al, one is led to endorse the old adage, "and a little child shall lead them."

every costume design. Once he decides upon a motive from some particular country, accessories, even colors, are carried out in a manner characteristic of that country, down to the most minute detail. Thus is simplicity given a glamorous subtlety.

By studying the methods of this successful designer the average woman is able to harness her intelligence to her economy and achieve a smart simplicity in her dress that sparkles with good taste. Architects dig deeply into the past for their structural ideas. Lange reflects this influence for at one time his interests were along that line. He was born in Warsaw, Poland, but the greater part of his life was spent in Paris. After traveling around the world he decided to settle in New York where he opened an exclusive shop on Park Avenue.

Lange will be remembered in fashion circles as the originator of the still highly popular shirtmaker dress which he designed for the actress Hope Williams. He also created the first tailored evening gown and started the fad of pleated skirts for formal evening wear. For three reasons this designer was costume stylist for the Earl Carroll Vanities.

Columbia Studios brought Lange to Hollywood for the Frank Capra picture, Mr. Deeds Goes to Town. The studios saw in him what they sorely needed, a creator who could give the screen clothes that were smart, individual and yet extremely practical and wearable—a tremendously difficult combination to find in one mere human.

His first great secret of success lies in the fact that his clothes are youthful.

Because Lange's clothes are creations you and I would not only want to wear but COULD wear without feeling theatrically dressed, I have chosen the wardrobe he designed for the charming Columbia star, Fay Wray, to wear in Roaming Lady. They are summer clothes and it would be difficult not to enjoy a summer in them.

new American slang. They were his pledge pin, his insignia of admission into the lordly fraternity of he-men.

Having settled that, Freddie went on to show Hollywood that he could also dish it out. He's a young gentleman of determination, is Mr. Bartholomew. No one needs tell him to obey that impulse. He usually does. If it involves heaving a brick through an arc light, well . . . the brick is likely to be heaved. As a matter of fact, the brick was heaved.

The time was July, the fourth. The occasion was a party at the home of Kay Mulvey, popular Hollywood publicist. It had been an exciting day for Freddie, the crowning event, for him, consisting in the fact that "Cis" had consented to his staying up for the shooting of the fireworks. Freddie isn't often allowed to stay up after eight, and, to quote him, staying up is "my very fondest form of fun." No wonder that he felt he owed a debt of gratitude to those fireworks.

The party assembled on the lawn, and the first rocket was set off. It proved a disappointment. Somehow, it didn't seem as bright as it should be. The second proved equally dim.

"It's the arc light," someone finally discovered. "It's so bright that it dims the fireworks."

"Ha!" exclaimed Freddie, jumping up and down in his excitement. "So it is! Well, I'll fix that." Freddie bent to the ground, and picked up a brick, and a moment later the disturbing arc light bit the dust, victim of a well-directed throw. Freddie looked around triumphantly, blissfully oblivious that he had been guilty of a crime against law and order. The business at hand was shooting sky rockets, and he had overcome the last obstacle to its success.

When David O. Selznick chose Freddie to play Fauntleroy, Hollywood became suddenly aware of the similarity between the histories of the little Lord and the little actor. As Freddie himself put it after the suggestion was made to him.

"Why, yes! We are alike. Ceddie was a little American boy who went to England to be an Earl, and I'm an English boy who came to America to be an actor. He had his Dearest, and I have my Cis, and we both like to ride horseback!"

There was one point of resemblance that Freddie overlooked. Fauntleroy was noted for his unstudied ability to win the affections of those with whom he came in contact. Hollywood has many stories to tell, and tells them, of hard-boiled actors, directors, and interviewers who, after seeing the Bartholomew boy, walk away with rapt looks in their eyes, whispering to themselves, "That child!"

There is something about Freddie that gives one the feeling that this child is made of clay a bit finer than that used in the manufacture of ordinary humans. Noble is a word that might describe Freddie; yet his ancestry is of average, middle-class English stock. Perhaps the Hindu seer who wrote a fan letter to Freddie has the explanation. He said that he believed that many centuries of reincarnation were required before a perfect human could be born, and that

Freddie Bartholomew Can Take It!

Freddie was undoubtedly a finished product, a climax to which the centuries had been building. Such a theory might be put in the file marked "cockeyed" by the skeptical, but anyone who has met Freddie loses any skepticism that might exist that this is a child of destiny.

During the filming of Little Lord Fauntleroy, someone suggested that this was really a story of friendship. We wanted to know what Freddie's idea of friendship was.

"Well," he pondered, "A friend is not a fellow who comes up to you and says, 'Here's a nickel. Now can I be your friend?' No sir! A friend is a person who likes you, and when he gives you something, it's because he wants to."

WE ASKED Freddie what he would do if, like little Fauntleroy, he were given all the money he wanted. (Freddie's salary when he came to Hollywood was $125.00 a week. He received a nickel a day as his allowance. His weekly salary now is $1,000.00. He still rates his nickel a day. The rest goes into a trust fund.)

Some of his imaginary plans for the spending of the money were typically childish. He would buy a steamboat for his grandparents, a Duesenberg for Cis.

"And," continued Freddie, "I'd take care of all the children that play extra parts in pictures. I'd see that they were paid two weeks salary every month, whether they worked or not."

"Why only two weeks salary?" we wanted to know.

"Well," Freddie explained, looking at us in some surprise. "I'd want them to look for work the other two weeks, you know. It wouldn't do for them to become absolutely lazy!"

Freddie's idea of a career we discussed one night in the gracious comfort of the Bartholomew home on the beautiful Beverlywell Drive.

"I want to write," Freddie advised us. "I think I'd like to write historical novels, laid in about the sixteenth century. That's my favorite period of history . . . when things were turbulent, you know, and modern ideas were just beginning to come in. I'd like to write just as I please about the things I'm interested in, and not have anybody saying, 'Now you write like this . . . or else!'

"In the sixteenth century a man wrote a book, a sort of prophecy. It was all about houses on wheels, and traffic in the air, and that sort of thing. It's all come true. But at that time, most people thought he was touched here." Freddie tapped his forehead significantly. "However, that man had knowledge. And foresight. That's what I want to get. It's something no one can take away from you. If I have it, I'll be a good writer, and then I can take care of Cis in her old age."

A white-capped negress, the Bartholomew's one servant, interrupted Freddie's confidences.

"Eight o'clock," she announced.

"Will you excuse me, please?" the future novelist asked ruefully. "I'm afraid I'll have to scram."

His voice came back as he pattered down the hall.

"Lily, don't you love 'scram?'"

She has what it takes except one thing

She's pretty . . . .

She's lively . . . .

She's a snappy dresser . . . .

She has plenty of what it takes . . .

And yet the men "side-step" her. The other girls ignore her. For the best reason in the world!

A girl can have everything else it takes to be a favorite, but if perspiration odor makes her unpleasant to be with, she cannot hope for popularity.

It's unpardonable, these days, for any girl to carry the ugly odor of underarm perspiration on her person and her clothing. For it's so easy to prevent!

It takes just half a minute to make your underarms fresh, free from odor all day long. With Mum.

That's the nice thing about Mum. It's so quick and easy to use, and you can use it any time—before dressing or afterwards. For it's harmless to clothing.

And it's soothing to the skin. You can shave your underarms and use Mum at once.

Another thing about Mum — it doesn't prevent natural perspiration. It prevents only the disagreeable part of perspiration —the odor.

Don't risk letting this fault shut you out of popularity. Get the daily Mum habit, then you'll always be safe! Bristol-Myers, Inc., 630 Fifth Ave., New York.

Jean Arthur Defeats Her Jinx!

desperately to get away that I left that night. The trip back to the mainland will always remain a nightmare. A storm was blowing up and the boat tossed about like a tiny cork. Added to my other grief, of failing in my work, I had to get seasick. I lay over a barrel, I remember, and cried all the way across the channel, pitching back and forth with the movement of the boat. I must have been a pretty sight! I've never been so miserable in my life." Jean smiles now, but the recollection is a sad and rueful one.

"After I finally got home, and sobbed out my failure to my mother, I didn't go near the studio for days. I was too ashamed and embarrassed from having been taken out of my first part even to show my face."

THAT experience kindled in Jean the spark of inferiority that was to besiege her for so many years. Instead of forgetting that dismal picture debut, dismissing it and thinking only of the future, it preyed upon her overly-sensitive mind to so great an extent that for nearly ten years it influenced her life. Had she "clicked" with the director in that initial film rôle, gone through the picture without his harsh criticisms, this story doubtless never would have been written.

Realizing that she lacked the proper dramatic background, Fox placed her in a number of comedies to teach her the rudiments of acting. Although she apparently acquitted herself satisfactorily, she could not expel from her consciousness memories of those first days in Hollywood . . . and time only aggravated that inferiority complex that now held her steadfast in its deadly grasp.

Only her mother knew of the struggle that was raging in Jean's over-wrought mind. She pleaded and coaxed and argued with her daughter, but so deeply had the roots been imbedded that her words of wisdom were of no avail. As the years passed, Jean found herself sinking still further in the mire of despond.

To Hollywood, she presented a superior attitude that at once made her resented. The colony thought she was putting on "an act." Adjudged a capable enough actress, Paramount placed her under long-term contract and assigned her to various leading rôles. But even her success in such pictures as The Greene Murder Case and The Saturday Night Kid did not materially affect her state of mind. Those of you who suffer from this malady will readily understand Jean during this period.

Finally, taking the bull by the horns, as it were, she deserted Hollywood and trekked eastward to New York. A plan had been crystallizing in her brain for some time. If she could only leave Hollywood and its associations that constantly reminded her of her first failure as an actress, she might regain control of herself once more. A theatrical career, she thought, might solve the problem. Acting upon this scheme, she walked out on an industry that still offered her a handsome livelihood.

In New York, a pleasant surprise awaited her. The name Jean Arthur, she found, held recognition for many and scarcely had she been in town a week than a stage producer summoned her for a part in Foreign Affairs, co-starring Dorothy Gish and Osgood Perkins.

Although the rôle was not overly large or important, it stood out. In an appealingly dumb characterization of a scullery maid she won favorable notices from every critic in New York and applause from the audience.

FOLLOWING a series of other plays on Broadway and in summer stock at Southampton and Red Bank, her entire attitude gradually changed. A fluency of style on the stage made her a favorite in every play in which she appeared . . . and the timid little mouse began to acquire a normal, healthy outlook upon life again. Closely analyzing herself, she discovered a devil-may-care spirit that she didn't even suspect she possessed.

Visiting her parents over the Christmas holidays in Hollywood, Columbia prevailed upon her to enact the leading feminine rôle with Jack Holt in Whirlpool. Here was her chance, then, to test herself, to prove to herself that she no longer was imbued with that shadow of inferiority that had been her nemesis so long. The results scored in that picture sent her soaring, for without exception reviewers hailed her as one of the season's most promising younger dramatic actresses.

As I say, today this actress, who once was cursed with the worst case of inferiority in Hollywood, stands on top of the world, literally swinging it by the tail. One glance at her on the screen, in such films as Diamond Jim, The Whole Town's Talking, Public Hero No. 1 and Mr. Deeds Goes to Town, and in her flip manner, her perfect possession of herself, is conclusive proof that she is complete mistress of herself. Jean Arthur's triumph over herself forms one of the great success stories of Hollywood.

Model Your Way To Fame

features? "Only one out of one thousand have them. Anita Counihan is one out of a half-million. When a girl first comes to us, she may have no posture, no carriage, no grace, no charm—but if she has perfect features, she still is a possibility. Age? We have models of all ages. Height? . . . This is unimportant. Fashion models usually are tall and willowy, yes. But the illustration type can be of any height . . . Figures? We don't demand anything more than the average. But facial features—there we do demand perfection. The kind of perfection that is natural, not the product of make-up magic.

2. Are you intelligent? "Intelligence—this is just as important as fine features. Many of our girls are college graduates. But when a girl comes in and wants to be a model, we do not ask to see her diploma. All we do is talk with her. Five minutes of desultory conversation can tell us all that we need to know about her intelligence. We have an index to her alertness, her ability to concentrate, her ability at self-expression, the variety of her interest, the application she gives to her tasks."

3. Do you have a good disposition? "A keen sense of humor is always an asset, and good humor is a necessity. A model has to be willing to work long hours, with a smile. She has to be able to take criticism with her chin uptilted. She has to be able to adjust herself to all types of people, not expect them to adjust themselves to her."

4. Do you give an impression of being fresh and wholesome—or do you give an impression of being sophisticated? "We like girls to be fresh and wholesome. Those qualities are irresistible, photographically perhaps because they are rare. People are always attracted to the beautiful girl whose beauty looks non-artificial, whose interest in life looks natural. That's why I say that the New York model has more chance to become a movie star than a Hollywood actress has to become a model."

5. Are you self-reliant? "Self-reliance is very important. A model must have an aptitude for facing situations that may arise. She is the kind of girl who can answer 'yes' to the question: Is every new situation a source of new interest? She is so full of youth that nothing fazes her. Audiences, certainly, don't faze her. Self-consciousness isn't one of her liabilities. She has the knack of feeling at ease—or, at least, looking at ease—in any setting. She gives an immediate impression of intelligence, of quick adaptability."

6. Are you self-critical? "If a girl cannot analyze her bad points, herself, she is futile as a model. She will not be able to differentiate between constructive, helpful suggestions and criticism that should be tossed out of the window. Every model knows that the cry is constantly for 'new faces.' If she is self-critical, she can figure out new ways to arrange her hair to make her look like a different person—new ways to dress to enhance her attractiveness. She sees how she can improve her posture, her carriage, her walk. Photographers and art directors constantly give a model hints about self-improvement, if they feel that the hints won't be wasted. A successful model is one who hasn't wasted them."

The Best GRAY HAIR REMEDY IS MADE AT HOME

YOU can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy, by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded, or gray hair, makes it soft and glossy and takes years off your looks. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

7. Do you have photographic proof of your modeling possibilities? "What a mirror tells, and what a camera tells, can often be two totally different things. Beauty doesn't always photograph. Personality doesn't always photograph. But if you have proof that the camera is kind to you, the road to modeling is just that much smoother."

THESE, then, are the seven all-important questions that you should ask yourself—and be able to answer with a high rating—before opening the door of John Powers' office and, possibly, the door of movie fame and fortune.

It's a rare girl who becomes a model by sheer luck, as Anita Counihan did. This pretty daughter of a well-known cartoonist, Bud Counihan, went with a girl-friend to a models' agency while the girl-friend applied for work. While the other girl was being interviewed, a photographer entered the reception room, took one look at Anita, and told her that she was just the girl he wanted for a fashion portrait that afternoon. She took the job. (The other girl, who thought she had modeling possibilities, did not make the grade.)

"To be a model," Anita says, with refreshing candor and a total lack of false modesty, "a girl should have a very clear skin. An olive complexion is an asset, because it is soft. High cheekbones and thin faces are much easier for a photographer to light than round faces are. Green or blue eyes are much easier to light than are brown or light blue. And good teeth—even and white—are a necessity. The requirements are more severe than they are for the movies.

"The life of a model is a short one. Photographers are constantly looking for new faces. I realize the danger ahead of me when someone told me she had seen my picture four times in one magazine. 'This will never do,' I told myself. 'People will soon get tired of seeing the same girl constantly.' So now I spend half my life changing my coiffure and plotting new ways to look different for the next sitting. Unconsciously, I guess, I noticed that this was what movie stars do. Incidentally, you fare better if you have bobbed hair.

"The fees of a model? Five dollars an hour for ordinary photographic work—more for color work or posing for artists. Nudes? No girl has to pose in the nude unless she wants to do so. It pays higher, of course. Personally, I have never done any—because I felt it would cheapen my value as a fashion model. Are we protected from unwelcome advances? Yes. If any photographer or advertising agency man makes such advances, all a model has to do is to report the incident to John Powers—and that photographer or that agency can never employ a Powers model again.

"We get many of our clothes free—sometimes for modeling them in photographs, sometimes for wearing them to night-clubs and restaurants, where they will be seen and commented upon. It's a glamorous life. But now I'm ready for something new. I've done about everything I want to do in commercial work—and the movies offer a new interest."

As Anita Counihan says, it's a glamorous life. And it can lead straight to the movies.

Thousands gaining 5 to 15 lbs. with new "7-power" yeast tablets

IT certainly seems a crime against yourself to remain "skinny" and unable to attract friends when thousands have gained pounds of solid, naturally good-looking flesh this new easy way—in just a few weeks!

Doctors now know that the real reason why many find it hard to gain weight is that they do not get enough Vitamin B and iron in their daily food. Now with this new "7-power" discovery, which combines these two vital elements in little concentrated tablets, hosts of people have put on 5 to 15 pounds, normal curves—in a very short time.

Not only are thousands quickly gaining normally attractive pounds, but also naturally clear skin, freedom from miserable indigestion and constipation, new pep.

7 times more powerful

This amazing new product, Ironized Yeast, is made from special cultured ale yeast imported from Europe, the richest known source of Vitamin B. By a new process this yeast is concentrated 7 times—made 7 times more powerful. Then it is ironized with 3 kinds of strengthening iron.

If you, too, need Vitamin B and iron to build you up, get these new Ironized Yeast tablets from your druggist at once. Then, day after day, as you take them, watch skinny limbs and flat chest round out to normal attractiveness, skin clear to natural beauty—you're an entirely new person.

Money-back guarantee

No matter how skinny and rundown you may be from lack of enough Vitamin B and iron, this marvelous new Ironized Yeast should build you up in a few short weeks as it has thousands. If not delighted with the results of the very first package, your money instantly refunded.

Special FREE offer!

To start you building up your health right away, we make this FREE offer. Purchase a package of Ironized Yeast tablets at once, cut out seal on box and mail it to us with a clipping of this paragraph. We will send you a fascinating new book on health, "New Facts About Your Body." Remember, results with very first package—or money refunded. At all druggists. MESSAGE TO GARCIA—Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles and Wallace Beery portray a famous old story in modern tempo.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

SINGING KID—Broadway jilts Al Jolson and he fights his way back to fame with song.—Warners.

KING OF THE DAMNED—Conrad Veidt and Helen Vinson reveal another side of prison life, with some thought spent on rehabilitation of criminals.—G-B.

SMALL TOWN GIRL—Full of chuckles, some pathos is Janet Gaynor's plight as small town gal who marries charming Robert Taylor. Lewis is father-in-law and Binnie Barnes the other girl. —Metro.

BIG BROWN EYES—Joan Bennett, manicurist who knows all the answers, and detective boy-friend Cary Grant round up gang of murderous jewel thieves. Full of good wisecracks and exciting action.—Wanger-Paramount.

THE UNGUARDED HOUR—Strong mystery story revolving around man-and-wife Loretta Young and Franchot Tone, who is arrested as murder suspect. Tone gives topnotch performance and Roland Young deftly handles comedy relief.—Metro.

SNOWED UNDER—George Brent, playwright with only two acts, is snowed under with work, hero-worshipping Patricia Ellis and two ex-wives, Genevieve Tobin, No. 1, and Glenda Farrell, No. 2. Lively comedy farce.—Warners.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS—Many laughs in this mystery when the great detective takes wife and fourteen children to circus. Up to standard of Chan series with Keye Luke trying to help his dad.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

YELLOW DUST—Richard Dix in a gold-quest film. He comes west, saves the life of a prospector, fights stage-coach bandits and shoots it out with Onslow Stevens, a gambler, for the love of Leila Hyams.—RKO-Radio.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED — George O'Brien shows how the Canadian police work. Irene Ware and Stanley Fields help.—Sol Lesser.

MURDER BY AN ARISTOCRAT—A flock of murders are solved by Marguerite Churchill and Lyle Talbot. Uninspired, but will appeal to lovers of horrific drama.—Warners.

HELL SHIP MORGAN—Tuna fishing as a sport and an industry, told nicely by George Bancroft, Ann Sothern and Victor Jory.—Columbia.

THE LEATHERNECKS HAVE LANDED—And the Marines get into trouble again. Lew Ayres —one of them—is saved by Isabel Jewell.—Republic.

BOULDER DAM—Against the background of the great engineering project of the west a cowardly boy gets courage through a girl's inspiration. Ross Alexander is the boy and Patricia Ellis, the girl.—Warners.

GIVE US THIS NIGHT—Jan Kiepura is a singing fisherman and Gladys Swarthout romances with him. The plot is dull.—Paramount.

THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND CANDLES—Irving Pichel does some nice work in an international spy ring. Exciting.—Republic.

THREE GODFATHERS—Desert rats adopt a baby.—Metro.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND—and there is no stopping the tune in this tale of a small show Harry Richman joins to escape problems of a big-time actor. Rochelle Hudson is the answer.—Columbia.

WALKING DEAD—If the name does not slay you, Boris Karloff probably will, as a musician electrocuted and brought back to life.—Warners.

YOU MAY BE NEXT—Radio engineer is kidnaped by gangsters. New twist on G-Man story, with Lloyd Nolan and Ann Sothern.—Columbia.

F-MAN—Soda jerker is too stupid to be a G-Man. He's Jack Haley.—Paramount.

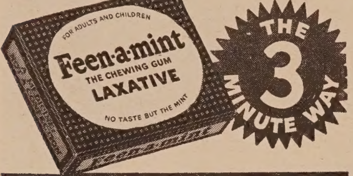
"3 MINUTES AT NIGHT KEEPS ME RIGHT"

I used to take jolting "all-at-once" cathartics—because I thought I had to. But now I've found the three-minute way. And what a difference it makes. At the first sign of trouble, I chew FEEN-A-MINT, the chewing-gum laxative, for three minutes; and the next morning I feel like a new person. And, best of all, with FEEN-A-MINT there are no griping pains—no nausea—no unpleasant after-effects. It's easy, pleasant, and thoroughly satisfactory. Children love its delicious chewing-gum flavor. 15c and 25c a box.



THE CHEWING-GUM LAXATIVE

takes on new color

(FREE Test Shows Way)

No matter whether your hair is all gray or only streaked with gray, you can transform it with new radiance. And it is so easy. Merely comb Mary T. Goldman's clear, water-white liquid through your hair. Gray strands take on new color: black, brown, auburn, blonde. Will not wash or rub off on clothing . . . Hair stays soft, lustrous—takes wave or curl. This way SAFE. Sold on money-back guarantee at drug and department stores everywhere.

Test it FREE ~ We send Test Package. Apply to single lock snipped from hair. See results first. No risk. No expense. Just mail coupon.

Save Hollywood's Glamour

ideal they have of her. Stars are the public's idols . . . because they are different. Because they bring romance, beauty, release—to drab lives. The screen stars are the fairy princesses of the public's dream world. Then they see a picture of their favorite frying eggs! They read of how she peels her own potatoes!

"The start of this campaign 'be human?' I do not know how it started. This edict . . . 'fill your wardrobe with such clothes as only the average woman can afford' . . . where will it lead us? I know its continuance is robbing the stars of their own glamour and is robbing the fans of romance. Don't you agree with me?"

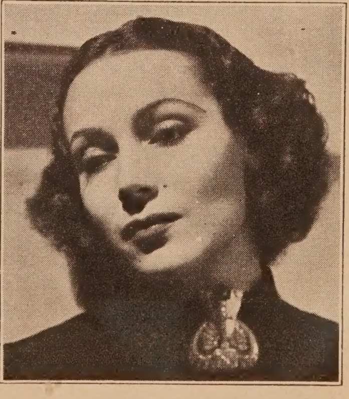
I DO agree with her. I am a movie fan too. When I go to a picture, I want to get away from the things which happen every day. I want beauty and romance. I want the hunger of my eyes filled when I put my unromantic little quarter on the box office sill. I want for the next hour to be free from reminders of my workaday life with its problems and fears and its wonder about the future. Those whom romance has passed by, can buy it for a quarter.

So I left this glamourous lady in her exquisite home, surrounded by the beauty which is hers. Left her there with her eagerness to please her fans, carrying with me the violence of her plea for them.

The sunset was challenging the grey fog of Santa Monica. Its challenge changed that fog to a cloud of rose. The heavy fragrance of gardenias and magnolias in Del Rio's garden clung to my nostrils. The fog closed in, blocking out the shining copper of her house, making ghostly shadows of the majestic cypress hedge, but as I looked back before turning up the hill a truant sun's ray hit the shining chromium of the gateway to her home . . . it shimmered like polished platinum through the fog. So does the glamour of Del Rio shimmer in our darkened world.

She is beautiful, and gracious, and unafraid of living.

She will keep the faith.



Sultry Dolores Del Rio wears the chic clip of enormous size at the virginal neckline of her attractive afternoon gown my colleagues did also. Miss Lombard's article was so plain and simple, yet filled with welcome advice and truth. Since introducing the "Guest Editor" series for SCREEN BOOK, the people who once "looked down" on Hollywood have learned that the city isn't merely made up of beauty, laughter, noise and good times, but also of down-to-earth people with real intelligence. Please let us have from time to time in the future other guest editors who may give us interesting and inspiring contributions.—Charles Wade Jackson, Edison, Ga.

Chaplin and Nijinsky

TRUST Charlie Chaplin, even in this blasé era, to be different and be it better in a big way. I never saw Nijinsky. I wish I had. But since I saw Charlie Chaplin roller skate ballet in Modern Times, I don't feel so badly. For sheer grace and poetry of motion—not to forget incidental thrills when he skims to the edge of an opening to the floor beneath—It leaves nothing to be desired. I think Nijinsky would have been first to congratulate Charlie on the act. Now I'm hoping Charlie makes another picture before I go blind with old age.—Marie Brennan, 4094 Wilmington Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Annoyed Movie-Goer

ALTHOUGH I enjoy pictures very much, there are times when I am annoyed by trivial errors in some scenes. One scene I recall before the French revolution showed on the mantelpiece an alarm clock manufactured by Big Ben. In Bill Boyd's picture recently a band of outlaws only guard the trail from the south, leaving the north open for invasion. Would a leader of this band who classed himself with Napoleon be so thoughtless? Please don't misunderstand me, but I think that on the whole they could be more careful.—Edward Ratcliffe, 299 Coronado Bldg., Denver, Colorado.

Colbert Clicks

I AM a sincere admirer of Claudette Colbert. She is so perfectly natural in her rather whimsical situation as a bride in It Happened One Night, She Married Her Boss and The Bride Comes Home. She may have been "dragged" as a bride over numerous doorways, but I say we need more like her. She possesses a very real sense of humor which we need so much in this old world of ours.—Mrs. Roy Caverly, 303 W. Washington, Howell, Mich.

If You Took A Screen Test!

hired Hal to make news reels for his programs.

Later, in Hollywood, Mohr worked as cutter, cameraman, and director. He photographed super-specials for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. He directed Harold Lloyd comedies. He photographed Outward Bound, one of the early talkies.

He met Evelyn Venable as cameraman on David Harum, in which she appeared. Will Rogers acted as matchmaker and repeated to Evelyn Hal's remark that she had the most perfect face he had ever photographed.

Most faces, you see, don't match! One side is always a little different from the other. You don't notice such tiny imperfections in real life, but the camera exaggerates them so that a lovely girl may become a monstrosity on the screen!

That's why so many famous women come to Hollywood to enter the movies—and then go back home! They may be society leaders, heiresses to million-dollar fortunes, and Broadway favorites—but something about their features refused to register properly with the cameras!

Another difficult assignment was testing the colored folk for The Green Pastures. Some of them had never done picture work before and they became stiff with self-consciousness.

"We were looking for simple, unaffected types," Hal explained, "and it was difficult to get them to act that way before the cameras."

After the picture started, Hal discovered with amazement that one of the biggest problems of Marc Connelly, the director, was in persuading the colored folk to use the "dialect" white people expect of them.

"Actually," Hal said, "most of them speak perfectly natural English, like you or me."

We interviewed him on one of the sets of this picture, and watched him take the scene where the old negro preacher explains the Bible to a group of little colored children in Sunday School.

The natural delight of the youngsters in acting was amusing to watch. Utterly without self-consciousness, they were in deadly earnest about the business of becoming picture stars!

"If every newcomer who made a test could attain that same freedom from nervousness," Hal remarked with a smile, "the statistics on successful tests wouldn't be so discouraging."

Out of the thousands of newcomers Hollywood tests every year, he told me, only one in a hundred receives a contract. Only one in a thousand is an Olivia de Havilland, starred in her first year.

Only one person in a bigger group than that has an instinct for projecting his own personality in such a manner that the camera can capture its essence. Usually there is a latent quality that must be developed.

"If more of them would learn something about picture work—if they'd watch pictures actually being filmed—or perhaps try extra work for a time—the list of failures wouldn't be so big," Hal added.

For movie tests, whether haphazard, carefully conducted, or painfully rehearsed, are still the only way to contracts, leading rôles and stardom in Hollywood!

"Dentyne Takes Double Prize —For Aid to Mouth Health—For Fine Flavor!"

DENTYNE—FOR A HEALTHIER MOUTH. Our early forefathers' teeth were kept in good condition by natural means — by foods that required plenty of chewing. Our foods today are soft — we need Dentyne because its special firmness encourages more vigorous chewing — gives mouth and gums healthful exercise and massage, and promotes self-cleansing. Dentyne works in the natural way to keep your mouth healthy — your teeth splendidly sound and white.

INEXHAUSTIBLE FLAVOR! You can't chew it out. Smoothness with a tang — a breath of spice — Dentyne's distinctive flavor is an achievement in sheer deliciousness. You'll appreciate the shape of the Dentyne package, too — smartly flat (an exclusive feature) — just right to slide handily into your pocket or purse.

Keeps teeth white —

RELIEF FROM PSORIASIS with DERMOIL

Make THE ONE SPOT TEST

©1935 LAKE LAB.

Dermoil is being used by thousands of men and women throughout the country to secure relief from the effects of this ugly, stubborn, embarrassing scaly skin disease which often causes humiliation and mental agony.

Apply Dermoil externally. Does not stain clothing. Watch the scales go, the red patches gradually disappear and enjoy the thrill of a clear skin again.

J. F. "Suffered for nine years. Had spots on my scalp, forehead, arms, legs and fingernails. Nothing I ever used before has worked like Dermoil. You cannot see the places where the scales were".—H. S. "I have suffered from psoriasis for eleven years. My condition now since using Dermoil seems almost impossible to believe. Prior to that time a cup to a cup and a half full of scales formed every day".—M. N. K. "I am rolling up my sleeves for the first time in fifteen years as my arms are entirely cleared up".

Dermoil is backed with a positive guarantee to give chronic psoriasis sufferers definite benefit in two weeks time or money is refunded. Your word is final. Prove it yourself. Send 25c for generous trial bottle to make our convincing "One Spot Test". Booklet and proof of results FREE. Don't Delay. Write today. No obligation.

Art Bows to Utility

While fundamentally, there are only three outfits in addition to the evening gown and play combination, actually they unfold into a complete layout to serve every summer purpose.

WE WILL begin with the play suit which is made in an extremely smart material, Javanese print. Remember we said before that Fay's dark type of beauty called forth the Far East influences? If you are a blonde try only to emulate the style not the fabric for as you can see from the sketch you are offered a new idea in design which would be equally smart in another material perhaps more adaptable to your type.

Next in line is a sports outfit. Fay is seen wearing just the thing for active outdoor play—a culotte skirt! Fay's culottes are navy blue sharkskin, a color and material that combines beautifully with various blouses, sweaters or short sports jackets. Two different blouses are pictured. The first is sharkskin, the same fabric as the skirt, and worn for spectator sports wear.

THE second blouse is for less dressy occasions and is made of a very light weight wool. It is seamed front and back giving the diagonal stripes the effect of a single herringbone. The background is white with stripes in red, green and blue. This blouse has a youthful pointed collar and a wide red suede belt worn laced together in front á la gaucho. Lange designed as an accessory a large navy blue chiffon handkerchief that may be worn folded triangularly under the collar. With this blouse the same hat and shoes are worn thus saving on that item.

Outfit number two in Congo beige sharkskin is worn without the coat for active sports and with the coat at any smart afternoon affair. Again we have the culotte skirt, this time combined with a Javanese print. The halter gilet features glorious shades of earth red and Indigo blue. Fullness is obtained through the bust line by small high placed inverted pleats. The halter ties at the neck in back and wraps around the waist to end in a nonchalant knot in front. A new idea that we haven't seen before is the low center point cut of the blouse that comes well over the top of the skirt.

The next picture shows Fay wearing a short bolero jacket made of the beige sharkskin. This features the wide square collar line, short sleeves and an upward swinging tilt to the waistline. With the jacket are worn two wide bracelets, a tremendously chic Javanese draped turban, blue gloves, bag and shoes.

For the afternoon teas and cocktail hour Fay poses in a new coat dress. The skirt with inverted front pleat is brown velveteen, which Lange claims, is as smart for summer as it is for winter wear. The jacket is an Indian print in red, gold and green on a light beige background. Square padded shoulders are a new style note and are achieved through intricate gathers placed on top of the armholes. Self-covered buttons march down the front to the flared peplum. High wide revers and a small collar of velveteen are important. A bag of the Indian print, chamois gloves and brown shoes and hat complete a very fetching and practical gown for informal wear.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c at all drug stores. © 1935, C.M.Co.

Farmer In The Dell

COMEDY—Fred Stone must make up his mind whether he is to be an imitation of his friend, the late Will Rogers, or step out as himself—one of the great entertainers of the twentieth century.

Stone, an Iowa farmer, sells his holdings and moves to California where his wife, Esther Dale, sees film opportunities for their daughter, Jean Parker.

Casting directors think Miss Dale camera-fodder. Results are that the wife gets very snooty, nearly wrecks domestic tranquility until the old man gets hold of himself and puts her in her place. Daughter Jean returns to her grocery clerk boy-friend and the wife reforms.

Frank Albertson, as the boy-friend, and Moroni Olsen, as a director, contribute outstanding performances.

CRITICAL COMMENT: Fred Stone will grow tiresome if he continues a doddering type of movie personality. There is not enough definition to any of the characters to sustain interest. Some responsibility for this weakness rests on the author.—Produced by RKO.

Robin Hood Of El Dorado

EARLY CALIFORNIA ROMANCE—Joaquin Murietta, romantic bandit of 1848, central character of countless legends, is given to the screen through the brilliant personality of Warner Baxter.

Not of epic magnitude, this film has a certain majestic sweep in the outdoor scenes to give it quality above the average run of summer releases.

Joaquin suffers at hands of American settlers until in desperation he retaliates in the manner he understands best. The Gringos had killed his friends, mistreated his blind mother and his bride, had humiliated him by a public whipping for a wrong he did not commit, and hanged his brother.

Thus justifying the bitterness in the heart of Joaquin, his biographer, Walter Noble Burns, has his bandit-hero die from wounds upon the grave of his beautiful bride, although there are actually so many legends about the robber's death that it is optional with the theatergoer to accept or reject the authenticity of this one.

Baxter gives a stunning performance of the character. He has fierceness in dealing with his enemies and tenderness in his treatment of women. He is the cast, although here and there a face appears, such as Eric Linden's in a brief interlude dealing with the American viewpoint during pioneer days.

J. Carrol Naish occupies second spot in importance to the star as a three-fingered bandit. Bruce Cabot, Paul Hurst, George Regas and Francis McDonald are the important male players.

Margo is the bride, a splendid characterization is hers. She dies all too soon. Of course, Soledad Jiminez is there and Ann Loring is victim of a bandit's bullet.

CRITICAL COMMENT: Lovely photography, a fine cast, but Director William A. Wellman hasn't captured the color of early California life, even though he succeeds in achieving screen entertainment.—Produced By John W. Considine, Jr.

MINNESOTA'S COOL NORTHWOODS

THE best features of nearly every vacation spot in the country are rolled into one glorious paradise of sport, freedom and relaxation up here at Breezy Point. WHY MEN GO

Science Finds Easy Way to Remove Germ In Superficial Layers of Scalp and Stimulate Dormant Roots to Promote Hair Growth

(Read Free Offer)

A germ called "Flask Bacilla of Unna" gets deep into the scalp skin in many cases of abnormal hair deficiency, causing a most dangerous type of dandruff. It clogs up pores and hair follicles, causing itchy scalp, falling hair, baldness and prevents dormant hair roots (papilla) from growing hair. Washing and shampooing does not remove the cause. It merely cleanses and treats the surface, rolling off the outer skin like water off a duck's back. No wonder baldness is increasing.

Now a new method enables people who have dandruff, falling hair, thin hair and baldness to easily remove the congested, thin outer layer of scalp skin. This permits opened pores and follicles to absorb air, sunshine and a blood-stimulating compound to activate the smothered, dormant hair roots in promoting hair growth as nature intended. It is all explained in a new treatise called "HOW HAIR GROWS," showing anatomy of your hair and tells what to do. This treatise is now being mailed FREE to all who write for it. Send no money, just name and address to Dermolav Lab., Desk 127-A, No. 1700 Broadway, New York, N. Y., and you get it by return mail free and postpaid. If pleased, tell your friends about it.

Fred Astaire Gives A Dancing Lesson!

yourself to music through it is when you come to the real joy there is in dancing. And it's only then that you ever find out if you've the stuff it takes to make people go out and buy it.

"Trying hard is half the battle. But, there must also be in a person an inherent desire to continue struggling along the line to a definite goal. It is sometimes an instinct to rest after we reach a certain stage in progress, but the battle only starts when you reach that particular place where all looks easy to you. That's when one's troubles really begin.

"It is also true that many persons will perfect themselves in one phase of a career, concentrating on what seems to be the hardest part, while sluffing through that which seems easiest. That's why some of the most difficult tasks to execute have a suave, definite polish and the least complicated tasks take on an air of difficulty.

"This is where the true student continues his grind.

"If you're lucky enough to get out there and sell them something new that they like—in other words if they like the person you're expressing through your educated feet and all the rest—then you will learn if all the work you have done has been worth it!

"BUT, again, if you put it on the basis of trying to pass that certain something on, I feel as though I am up against a stone wall. It's certainly not secretiveness because anyone can watch a film or study action snapshots, but that won't be very much immediate help until they have put in the serious work I've mentioned here first.

"So 'tis that I can only answer, 'I don't know!' and I'm awfully afraid that some of them will think I'm just evasive. But I've been dancing for a considerable time and, frankly, I've grown so unconscious of fundamental technique that it startles me. Put yourself in the position of the man who was called upon to describe a horse to another who hadn't even seen a drawing of one and trying to come through with a recognizable verbal picture. In a lesser degree I'm in the same spot. I know what a horse looks like and what goes into a good step, but, truthfully, I'm darned if I could give a decent descripiton of either.

"I'm painfully conscious that what I've tried to say about dancing now is similar to saying that the horse is big, has four legs and a funny looking head—but it's all fundamentally right.

"But there's a strange tag to all this. When the same people who write me for 'steps' have put in the time and work to learn how to actually execute those apparently simple movements—they won't be writing me for advice! They won't need it! They'll have reached the point where they are creating their own dance story, the continuity that makes a dance mean something.

"They'll be saying, "Imitate Astaire's stuff? What for? I've got an idea or two myself! He's got his methods—I've got mine. And good luck to him! He'll need it because now I'm coming through . . . Gangway!"

Secrets from the Kitchen of Anita Louise

sugar mixture into a feathery golden mass. A rotary beater will substitute very satisfactorily, Miss Welker tells me, but it requires more than triple the time to get the same feathery results.

Fresh Strawberry Jelly—made just the day before—makes the filling for this particular jellyroll. (The jelly recipe is easy and luscious. We'll be glad to send you a copy.) But any type of jelly, jam or cream pie filling, may be used.

In rolling the cake, Miss Welker turns up the cake edge about 1 inch, then lifts the cloth high enough to raise the turned edge off the table. This starts the cake rolling. Then she lifts the cloth higher and higher, using the left hand to lift and the right to guide the rolling and keep the cake straight. When the cake-end is directly underneath, the cloth edges are tucked round to keep the cake rolled. Onto a rack, and into the window it goes. Then out of the cloth and onto the doily lined plate it is whisked, just as Miss Anita comes through the swinging doors.

Other jellyroll fillings which these two particularly like, are:

LEMON-COCONUT FILLING

Combine ½ cup sugar, 4 tablespoons flour and a dash of salt in the top of a double boiler. Add ⅓ cup orange juice, 3 tablespoons lemon juice, 2 tablespoons water and 1 well beaten egg and cook for 10 minutes, over rapidly boiling water, stirring constantly. Remove from water. Add 2 tablespoons butter and 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind. Then fold in ¼ cup grated coconut, cool slightly, and spread on freshly baked jellyroll.

FRESH STRAWBERRY FILLING

Wash, hull and cut in halves, 1 pint of fresh strawberries. Fold into 1 cup of sweetened stiffly whipped cream, and spread on fresh jellyroll, which has been allowed to cool for just 2 minutes before being rolled.

RASPBERRY CREAM FILLING

Fold 1 glass of raspberry jam and 2 teaspoons lemon juice into 1 cup of stiffly whipped cream, and spread on freshly-baked jellyroll.

CALIFORNIA CREAM FILLING

Combine ½ cup sugar, 5 tablespoons flour, ⅛ teaspoon salt and 1½ cups milk, (or 1 cup evaporated milk and ½ cup hot water), in the top of a double boiler. Add 1 tablespoon lemon juice, and 1 tablespoon orange juice mixed with 2 well-beaten egg yolks, and mix thoroughly. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly, until thick. Remove from fire. Add ½ teaspoon vanilla. Cool until not more than lukewarm. Spread on fresh jellyroll. Top with chopped nuts and quartered seeded dates, and roll.

And now get down your mixing bowl, and beat up a Jellyroll! Easy to make and easy to eat! You'll love it, and so will the family!

Robert Taylor's Ideal Sweetheart

big dramatic production on the campus was to be Journey's End it seemed at last as if fate were being kind . . . There wasn't a woman in the cast! I played the part of Captain Stanhope and fate was kind in a far different way than I imagined. Ben Piazza, casting director for M-G-M at the time, was in the audience that opening night. A few days later I had signed a contract with the studio and a few weeks later I was in Hollywood . . .

"HOLLYWOOD—and the Russian Lady. Somehow, they're strangely related in my mind. She was the first professional actress I'd ever known. Dark and exciting and sophisticated. She'd been married and divorced twice and very likely I amused her. I wasn't in love but I was very proud to be seen with her. Nothing makes a fellow feel so good as being seen with a smart looking girl. And the Russian Lady was that. She wasn't actually beautiful but she knew how to make the most of her appearance—which is probably the same thing. Her sophistication was real, the kind that comes with assurance and poise and a rich interest in life. And immediately I endowed the girl of my future with a degree of sophistication. Enough to give her self-confidence so that she wouldn't get flustered easily. Fluttery females are not the kind that men prefer!

"The little Russian did a lot for me in the way of knocking off rough edges. My social life was still at the sophomore stage when I met her. I had never gone in for it very strongly and it lacked—well, finesse . . ." Bob laughed and the corners of his eyes crinkled. He re-lit his pipe. "In the small matter of ordering dinner, for example. I was darn' self-conscious about it the first time I took her to the Russian Eagle. But in a subtle way she taught me how to go about selecting the right sort of meal-for-two. It was Trina, too, who taught me that it's quite possible to hold an intelligent woman's attention throughout a whole evening without flirting, or flattering her. She had a genuine understanding and sympathy that's a tonic to anyone.

"Voice, hair and eyes . . . I believe those are the three things about any woman that impress a man first. If her hair is nicely kept it's bound to make her look neat. And eyes—Personally, I prefer the kind that don't sparkle and don't tell all. I go for the slumbrous kind that keep things half hidden—a la Marlene Dietrich! Of course there are a good many imitations, the Tenth Avenue Greta Garbos, but you can spot them as fake a mile away. A fellow appreciates a girl who is natural and doesn't strike poses. Perhaps," he added, "I should have headed the list with that . . . I'll tell you who has these qualities as much as any girl I've ever known. That's Irene Hervey."

IRENE, the very charming young person who was placed under contract by M-G-M about the same time as Bob. Who was in Oliver Hinsdell's dramatic school with him there in the studio . . . who buoyed him up when Bob was so discouraged he asked Louis B. Mayer for a release from his contract.

HAIR on LIPS

Made Invisible with Oxygen

Thousands who formerly suffered the embarrassment of ugly hair on lips, chin and other parts of the face, now use Dioxogen Cream and have a skin lovely to look at and lovely to feel.

Oxygen is nature's safe bleach. It is not drying to the skin. The fact that Dioxogen Cream actually makes face hair invisible, shows that it really does things which ordinary creams cannot do. Dioxogen Cream clears out the pores, refines coarseness, lightens spots and breaks up the greasy substances that cause blackheads.

Start using Dioxogen Cream and within 24 hours you'll see a surprising improvement in your skin. Within 30 days you'll have the kind of complexion you've always dreamed about. Sold at 50¢ and $1 by dep't stores and druggists.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking acids and wastes out of the blood. A healthy person should pass about 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, this waste stays in the body and may become poisonous. It may start nagging backaches, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Don't let it lay you up.

Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills — used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

Finds Way To Have Young Looking Skin at 35!

SMART, modern women no longer submit to the tragedy of "old skin" just because they are 30, 35, 40! A wonderful new creme, applied at night like cold cream, acts a scientific way to free the skin of that veil of semi-visible darkening particles which ordinary creams cannot remove after a certain age. So gentle and quick—often only 5 days is time enough to bring out a glorious rose petal softness and fineness and white, clear look of youth. And, the way it eliminates common surface blemishes—ugly pimples, blackheads, freckles—is a revelation! Ask for this creme—Golden Peacock Bleach Creme at all drug and department stores.

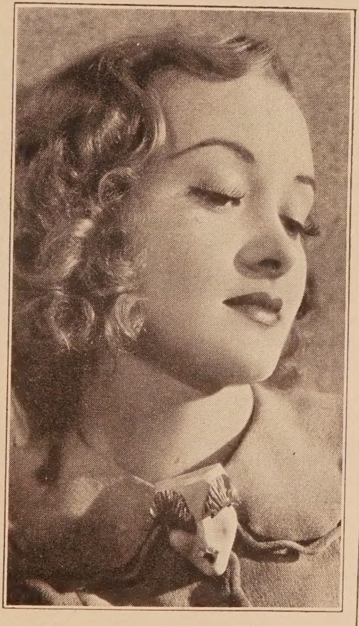
They have been something more than casual sweethearts. During almost every picture Bob has been in rumors have spread about his devotion to the leading lady. It began with Jean Parker in Murder in the Fleet . . . followed through to Virginia Bruce in Society Doctor . . . and recently reached a new high with Janet Gaynor with whom he's currently playing in Small Town Girl. But his friendship with Miss Hervey continues. . . .

As a matter of fact, if the Ideal Girl did happen along right now she'd find our Mr. Taylor slightly weary. He's been working for a year without much time off for social trimmings.

"If most men hate to wait as much as I do, then every Ideal Girl is punctuality itself!" he affirmed. "Incidentally, I don't want my ideal to be the playgirl type. You know—the type that feels she has to be out every night with someone whether she really likes him or not. And I don't want her to have an ingenue complex. Flowers in the hair and ruffles and frills are out as far as I'm concerned.

"Wasn't it Maurice Chevalier who said that most women work too hard to be charming? I think that's true. They'd be a lot more attractive if they'd just forget their nose was shiny and didn't bring out the lipstick every five minutes. After all it's an interesting personality that counts most. . . . And if it's interesting enough, a girl can make a man forget even his ideal!"



MARIAN MARSH, appearing in Columbia production, "Queer Money" dotes on seeking attractive and original gadgets. This time she has selected a mask clip with long bizarre metal eye lashes and a smug sophisticated mouth, to contrast the solid color of her sports costume. The mask was designed by the Gardner family of artists who last season launched the Schiaparelli masked fan. Those interested in this latest fashion fantasy may write Sally Martin, Fashion Editor, care of SCREEN BOOK, 7046 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood, California.

Surveying the newest screen developments

Olivia de Haviland will be seen in Anthony Adverse, a lengthy picture which inaugurates the new era in movie presentation

THE theater is coming back!

The theater that America loved and lost when the talkies came, is being brought into small towns and big cities by the motion picture industry!

And, Florenz Ziegfeld is bringing this change to pass!

Ziegfeld, who never took his glittering confections of entertainment on the road; Ziegfeld who typified, more than any other man, perhaps, the haughty sophistication and isolation of New York; Ziegfeld reaches from the mists of the past and glorifies the American movies!

Climaxing a trend for longer feature films, The Great Ziegfeld, which takes three hours to screen, now definitely gives to the amusement devotee an entire evening in the theater.

● It will mean that certain houses will be dedicated to presenting spectacles of merit for those who like their film fare unbroken in continuity and distinctly away from what the trade refers to as "program pictures."

The three-hour film is not a new idea but rather a revival of what the master showman, D. W. Griffith, inaugurated with The Birth of a Nation two decades ago.

King of Kings and Way Down East were presented to audiences like the legitimate plays when road-shows were the thing!

A party spirit pervaded the theater on such a night. There was anticipation in the gay hurry and bustle of the lobby before show time! Theater-going was an event to be planned for!

While these films in no way detracted from the charm of houses that showed smaller and less important productions, there was a dignity about the motion picture edifice that featured big-league productions.

● Indicative of a return to prosperity is the wisdom or foresight of major studios that include in their 1936-'37 schedules powerful and luxurious photoplays where the essentials of the story command more time in the telling of it than 85 minutes.

So get out your best bib and tucker—the movies are going places!

It was Radio who really started the movement for longer pictures with Little Women. Audiences were so delighted with it that time fairly flew past while Katharine Hepburn, Joan Bennett, Jean Parker and Frances Dee provoked laughter and tears by their charming performances.

David Copperfield, A Tale of Two Cities, Captain Blood, Mutiny on the Bounty as well as A Midsummer Night's Dream were all considerably longer than the average picture.

Now comes Columbia's Mr. Deeds Goes to Town with more than two hours of enchanting romance, comedy and high ideals.

In the van will be Anthony Adverse, which Warner Brothers spent a fortune in making; The Good Earth is one of several lengthy pictures from the M-G-M lot, the most discussed promise being Romeo and Juliet with Norma Shearer as the fair Italian maiden who loved a romantic youth in Verona.

Mary of Scotland undoubtedly will run longer than usual Radio pictures.

Under Two Flags is a Twentieth Century-Fox film for Ronald Colman that will command more than the average attention.

Universal's Show Boat and The Green Pastures are of more than ordinary length.

Cecil B. DeMille's Buffalo Bill falls in the category of three-hour productions.

● Will this venture by Hollywood producers appeal to fans accustomed to an assortment, almost a vaudeville program, of films? Will dull, uninteresting "fillers" be eliminated?

Will picture goers prefer double-bills with novelties frequently screened to make up for a structural weakness in the entire program?

Or, will those who just want to drop in for part of a show, while waiting to kill time turn their thoughts away from the movies by this arrangement, which will have definite curtain time?

Lengthening a bad picture will not improve it, but it is also true that some great literary works have been forced into an unnatural condensation in order to meet what seemed an arbitrary allotment of time in which to enact the story.

But, won't it be fun to dress for the theater again?

Won't it be thrilling to sit in your favorite picture house before the curtain goes up and wait for the magic moment when swelling notes on the sound track blast into the theater announcing another epic is about to unfold?

● SCREEN BOOK is interested in knowing just what its readers think of the new order of presenting Hollywood's most formidable pictures.

SCREEN BOOK would appreciate opinions of film-goers who have ideas on this subject.

Would you like to sit through a film that takes three hours to unreel?

Write in your ideas on this subject, will you? We are anxious to know your reactions and your favorite film stars feel the same way about it.

Remember, it is your opinions which in the long run dictate all of Hollywood's policies. Too often by not communicating your desires to Hollywood's producers through one medium or another, you leave those men, whose sole desire it is to produce entertainment tailored to your needs, completely in the dark.

But, in the meantime, we must all look forward, with keen anticipation, to new ideas that will be revealed on the screen with favorite stars of long standing holding their own against the onslaught of newcomers, like Errol Flynn for instance.

It is as if Ziegfeld, who glorified the American girl, and who gave up to Hollywood some of his most beautiful discoveries, has not lost his faith in the theater or his belief that eventually the two would be blended into one glorious medium to meet the wants of those who love all the arts, including that which is Hollywood's.

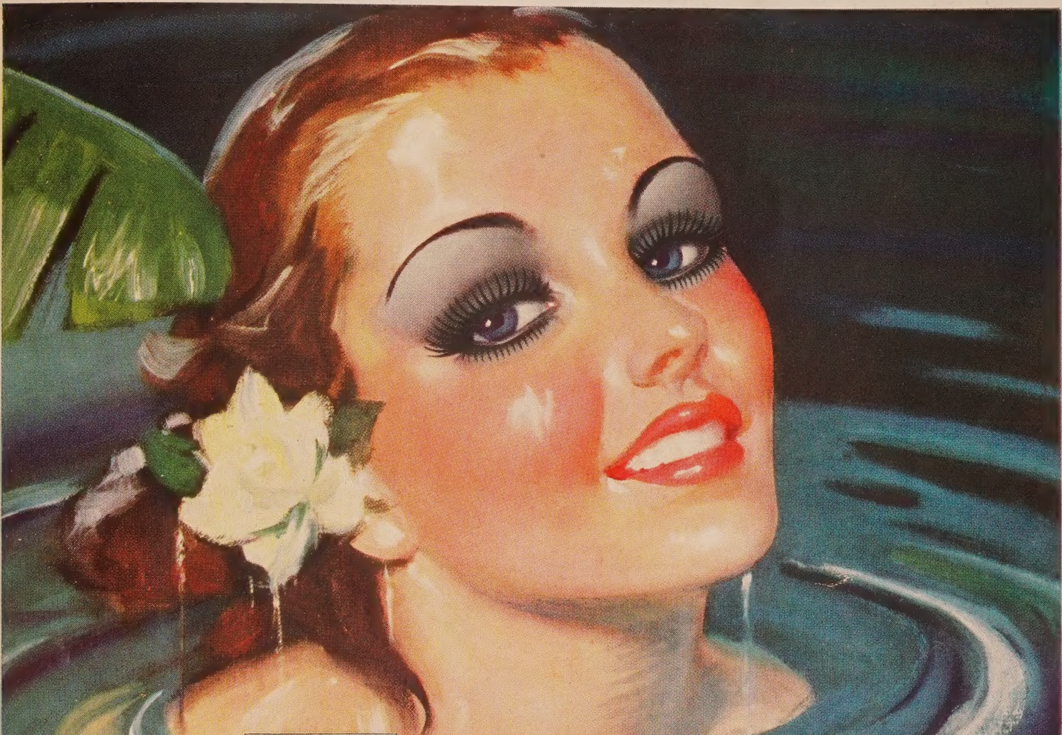
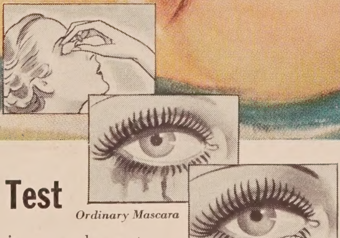
NEW CREAM MASCARA

Truly waterproof—far easier to use—because not mixed with water when applied



Waterproof TATTOO*... the South Sea maiden's own secret of enchanting eyes*



Ordinary Mascara

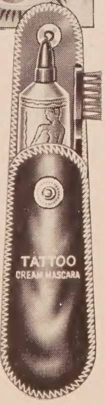
Tattoo

Make the Eye-Cup Test

Instead of waiting for tears, rain, or a plunge to show you, in a tragic way, that your mascara isn't safely smear-proof, make the eye-cup test . . . with an eye-cup full of water. If your lashes are covered with old-fashioned mascara they will likely become a sticky, "runny" mess . . . showing how easily the charm of your eyes can become a disillusioning smudge upon your cheek.

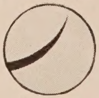
Then . . . tattoo your lashes with Tattoo Cream Mascara . . . let it dry . . . and make the eye-cup test. TATTOO cannot run or smear . . . you'll be delighted to discover that each tattooed lash, regardless of the drenching bath, remains beautifully tattooed!

The two little circled pictures at the right show another reason why you will become loyal to TATTOO once you have tried it. In the top circle you see how a tattooed lash is smoothly and evenly darkened from base to tip. Obviously, such lashes appear entirely natural and a thousand times more entrancing than lashes from which hang beady clods of lumpy mascara.

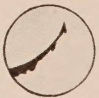


TATTOO's smoothness likewise makes TATTOO extremely easy to apply—far easier to apply than cake mascara. Simply whisk it on. Your very first try will yield a perfect result. Instantly your lashes will become exotically dark; they will look twice their real length, and will have a lovely, coaxing curl. TATTOO is non-smarting—non-irritating—and absolutely harmless. TATTOO your eyelashes once and you'll never go back to old-fashioned mascara.

Black, Brown or Blue only 50c . . . complete with brush in a smart, rubber-lined satin vanity . . . at all toilet goods counters.



Showing how evenly smooth a tattooed lash would look under a microscope . . . the reason why tattooed lashes are more alluring.



Lashes coated with ordinary mascara look like this under a microscope . . . rough, lumpy, unattractive.

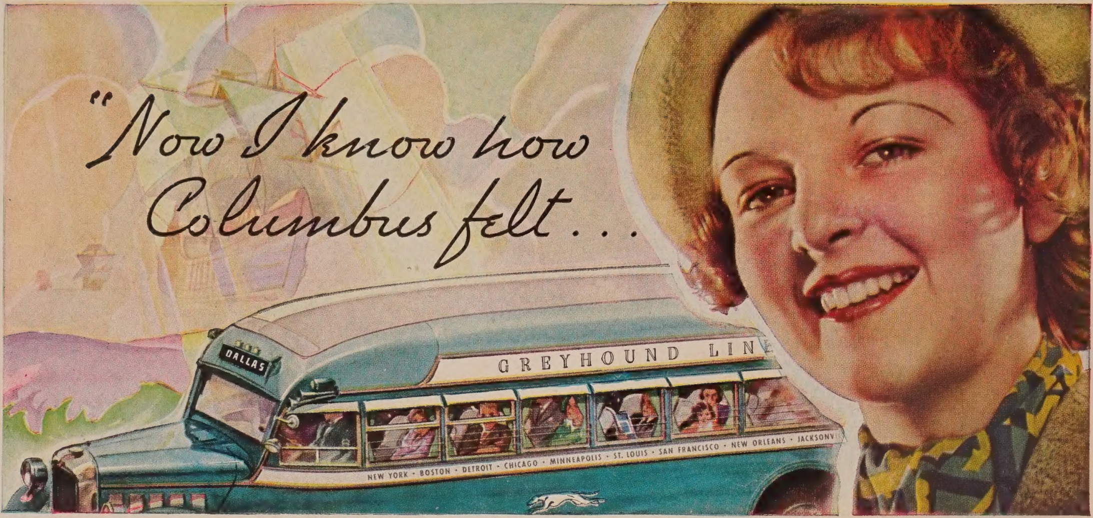
When SHIRLEY Grows Up —by HER MOTHER



"Now I know how Columbus felt . . .
DALLAS
GREYHOUND LIN
NEW YORK · BOSTON · DETROIT · CHICAGO · MINNEAPOLIS · ST. LOUIS · SAN FRANCISCO · NEW ORLEANS · JACKSONV

I'VE DISCOVERED AMERICA !"

"'See America first!' I've heard that phrase all my life—but it was just another slogan until I made this memorable Greyhound bus trip. Starting on the east coast, we swung clear around the continent, westward by one great highway, returning east another—and this was only one of several coast-to-coast circle tours that Greyhound offered me!

"Now I've revised the old slogan . . . for you 'See America BEST' when you travel by Greyhound! I've met and made friends with the real America—its kindly, interesting people, its surpassing natural beauty, its mountain grandeur and desert magic, huge cities and charming country towns.

"And what a comfortable way to explore—in a big Greyhound motor bus, among congenial fellow travelers, with one of America's finest drivers at the wheel. The cost of my trip was less than gasoline and oil for a small private auto. Let me mention just a few of my delightful memories:

"Our big bus paused in the Delaware Water Gap while passengers marveled at the towering mountain walls—the sparkling ribbon of river below us.

"Everyone smiled when that starry-eyed young couple got off the bus at Niagara Falls. As if we didn't know all the time where they were bound!

"From the Greyhound Terminal in Cleveland, we could clearly see the Great Lakes Exposition—so we stopped over for an exciting day.

"What a thrill—when a tiny fawn burst from the woods, scampered across our highway, and went splashing through a Minnesota stream!

"Yes, sir, the bears ate right out of my hand, in Yellowstone National Park! I wouldn't have missed that short side trip for anything in the world.

"When we stopped in a grove of giant California redwoods it took fifteen of us stretching our arms wide, to circle one of those tremendous trees.

"As our bus was ferried across San Francisco's Golden Gate, we could look up and see workmen spinning the cables of the world's mightiest bridge.

"Imagine—masts of a ship sticking out of a grassy hillside, with sailors at work in the rigging! Crazy? No, just a movie location near Hollywood.

"Of course, we stopped off for a day at the San Diego Exposition—even lovelier this second year—and Agua Caliente only a few minutes away.

"I can never forget that wrinkled old Indian woman who sold me the clever little hand-woven basket, beside the Apache Trail of Arizona.

"We actually visited a foreign land! Stopping at El Paso, we couldn't resist crossing the Rio Grande bridge into glamorous old Juarez.

"The romance of the real West came to life again at Dallas—where we spent many fascinating hours at the Texas Centennial Exposition.

"Grand old southern melodies! They came floating through the star-filled night as we stopped for dinner near an Alabama plantation.

"Our Greyhound bus actually passed right over the top of Virginia's amazing Natural Bridge—in beautiful Shenandoah Valley.

"As we rolled down Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington, a brilliant military parade swung along, only a few feet from our bus windows."

"So there are some of the highlights of my Greyhound trip. Why don't you plan just such a journey of exploration for yourself? Whether you travel a few miles or a few thousand, Greyhound offers the most interesting way, and by far the most economical." *The coupon below will bring complete information on any trip you may plan—or you can step into the nearest Greyhound office, (or telephone) to secure rates and schedules. "Barbarous!"

SAYS HOSTESS

A HOSTESS AND A DENTIST BATTLE OVER A T-BONE

"Intelligent!"

SAYS DENTIST

(But the civilized way to build firm gums is IPANA and MASSAGE)

HOSTESS: "Your picture is disgraceful. No girl with a spark of intelligence or breeding would ever eat like that." (But your dentist disagrees—emphatically.)

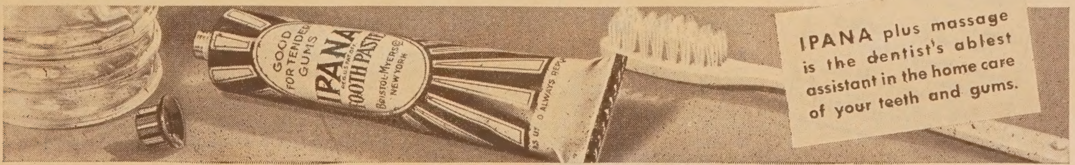
DENTIST: "That picture is a perfect lesson in the proper exercise of teeth and gums. I hope millions of people see it. If more people chewed as vigorously, there would be far fewer gum disorders—fewer evidences of that dental warning 'pink tooth brush'."

Check up on your own menu, and you will see the dentist's point. The modern menu is a soft-food menu. It deprives teeth and gums of the work and exercise and stimulation they need. No wonder gums grow weak and tender—no wonder "pink tooth brush" is such a common warning.

"Pink Tooth Brush" is serious

The first sign of that tinge of "pink" calls for a visit to your dentist. You may be in for serious trouble. But he is far more likely to tell you to take better care of your gums, to give them more stimulation, more exercise. And he may tell you—he usually does—to switch to Ipana Tooth Paste and massage. Follow his advice. Rub a little extra Ipana into your gums every time you brush your teeth! For Ipana is especially designed to help your gums as well as clean your teeth. You'll soon notice an improvement in the health of your gums. New circulation wakens lazy tissues. Gums grow stronger. They feel firmer. They look better.

So switch to Ipana today. The first ten days of Ipana and massage will show an improvement. And thirty days will convince you that you should have changed to this modern, sensible health measure long ago.



IPANA plus massage is the dentist's ablest assistant in the home care of your teeth and gums.

THE WINNER!

METRO - GOLDWYN - MAYER

We're taking space in this magazine to tell you to keep your eye on Leo, the M-G-M Lion!

He's had the best year of his career what with grand entertainments like "Mutiny on the Bounty", "China Seas", "Broadway Melody of '36", "A Night at the Opera", "Rose Marie" and all the other great M-G-M hits! And of course there's "The Great Ziegfeld", now playing in selected cities as a road-show attraction and not to be shown otherwise this season.

But (pardon his Southern accent) Leo says: "You ain't seen nuthin' yet!" . . . On this page is just part of the happy M-G-M family of stars. Look them over. You'll find most of the screen's famed personalities and great talents on Leo's list. They will appear in the big Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions that are now in the making and planned for months to come.

Ask the Manager of the theatre that plays M-G-M pictures about the marvelous entertainments he is arranging to show. And when Leo roars, settle back in your seat for real enjoyment!

Her Tennis Stroke is Correctly Timed

—too bad her laxative wasn't!

HER SWING is a marvel of precision and timing . . . What a pity she didn't know that correct timing is vital in a laxative, too!

You see, when you take a laxative into your system, you can't afford to take chances. Look out for harsh, over-acting cathartics that might upset you, nauseate you, cause stomach pains, leave you weak and dragged down. Such laxatives abuse you internally. Their after-effects are unpleasant, sometimes dangerous.

DEMAND CORRECT TIMING

Just what is meant by correct timing in a laxative? Simply this: a correctly timed laxative takes from 6 to 8 hours to be effective. Its action is gentle and g-r-a-d-u-a-l, yet completely thorough.

Ex-Lax is just such a laxative. It won't throw your system out of rhythm. No stomach pains, no nausea. No unpleasant after-effects of any sort. Ex-Lax works so naturally that, except for the relief you enjoy, you scarcely realize you have taken a laxative.

PLEASANT TO TAKE

Ex-Lax is not only kind to your system —it's kind to your taste, too. Its flavor is just like smooth, delicious chocolate. All druggists sell Ex-Lax in economical 10¢ and 25¢ sizes. Get a box today!

BE A VACATION-TIME BEAUTY

Simple to follow are these make-up tips which will make your summer holiday an interlude of delightful romance

"Step-up" make-up for outdoor months if you want to look the rôle of gay summer girl

By FRANCES

HIGH spot of the year! That's vacation time. And did we learn some exciting new tricks to add a beauty thrill to it!

By "we" I mean that scintillating gal, Wendy Barrie, and me, the powder-puff chaser.

You see, Wendy was going to do a little vacationing after working in eight pictures in a row and topping them off with Speed at M-G-M. So, knowing her Hollywood, she said, "Let's go see Max Factor." Because if there's any person in the world who can give you pointers on keeping your good looks above par even when the temperature hovers around 110 degrees, it's this same Mr. Factor.

"I expect to get a nice coat of tan within the next few days," Wendy explained. "What change do you think I ought to make in rouge, powder and lipstick?"

The stars, you see, don't believe in any haphazard over-the-counter buying of cosmetics of a shade that looks nice or comes in a certain box. They want to

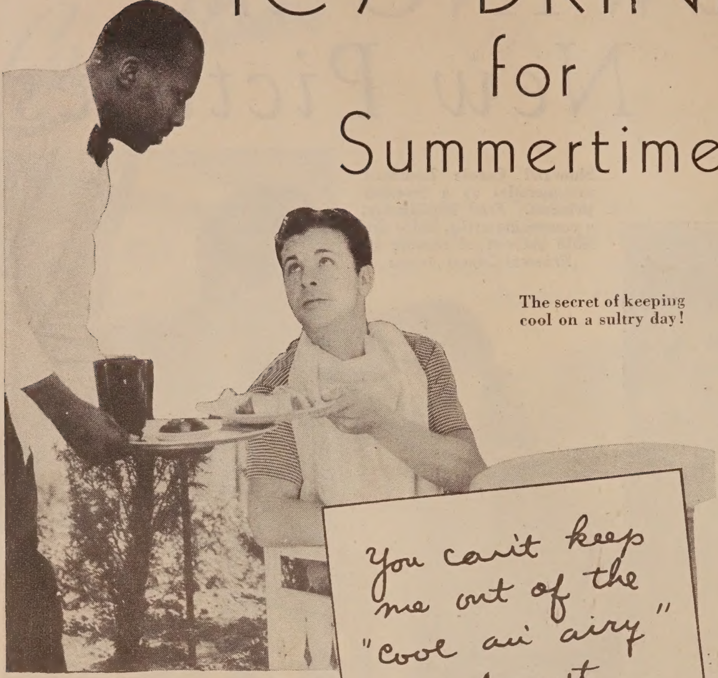
ICY DRINKS for Summertime

By Joan Davis



The secret of keeping cool on a sultry day!

You can't keep me out of the "cool an' airy" department.
• Dick Powell

SWELTERING heat pouring down from the relentless sun—shimmering out from the studio arc lights—and nine times out of ten, the actresses swathed in furs—these are the problems with which the film stars have to contend during the hot months.

They have found a solution, however—icy drinks in long tall glasses! The stars slip over to the dressing rooms at each opportunity and find ice cubes and the ingredients for a "thirst quencher" in a tiny refrigerator. The less fortunate players carry a thermos, filled with a refreshing beverage, to the studio in the morning.

Many of these drinks are made with tomato juice as the basis. We less glamorous souls may "wilt" if need be, but not the picture celebrities. They must be buoyant and on their toes every minute. Hence, they chase the elusive vitamins religiously. They have learned their "ABC's" over, not for education, but for health's sake. The stars have found that fruit drinks of all descriptions are health-giving the year around, and what a "picker-upper" in summer! Tomato juice contains these vitamins, especially vitamin C, and that's the little fellow we all need, as it supplies pep and vitality, and who doesn't enjoy the lively tang of this drink? Here are a few tomato juice recipes which I know you will enjoy:

SHAKER COCKTAIL

2 cups tomato juice
⅓ cup cucumber juice
1 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon prepared horseradish, strained

Place grated cucumber in sieve and use ⅓ cup of the juice which comes out. Combine all ingredients and chill in refrigerator. Shake in a cocktail shaker before serving in glasses.

GINGO

Chill canned tomato juice and bottled gingerale in refrigerator. Combine equal parts of the two ingredients and pour over ice cubes in glasses.

TOMATO HOTSY CHILL

1 pint tomato juice
1 tablespoon lime juice
Salt to taste
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
Dash of cayenne
1 tablespoon spicy flavored catsup

Combine all ingredients and chill to almost a freezing point. This mixture is so spicy it is best to serve it in a small glass.

The popular hostess has learned to keep canned and bottled juices, along with carbonated beverages, on her kitchen shelves and fresh fruit in the refrigerator with which to concoct a delicious surprise for the unexpected guests who drop in on a sultry afternoon or evening. Sipping a cooling drink and reveling in its icy depths, they forget the fatiguing heat and go forth refreshed.

Canned unsweetened Hawaiian pineapple juice comes into its own in various ways. Try these for variety:

COLUMBINE

1 cupful canned unsweetened pineapple juice
Juice of ½ lemon
1 tablespoon sugar syrup

Combine the ingredients and pour an equal amount into three tall glasses, add ice, and fill glasses with dry ginger ale.

CURRANT PUNCH

2 cups melted currant jelly
1½ quarts boiling water
2 cups unsweetened Hawaiian pineapple juice
2 cups orange juice
½ cup lemon juice
2 pint bottles of gingerale

Melt the jelly and add the boiling water. After cooling, add the rest of the ingredients, except the ginger ale. Just before serving, add ice and ginger ale. This will serve about ten persons.

Have you ever thought of adding a delicate color to the prosaic white ice cubes? It's easily done by adding a little vegetable coloring matter to the water before freezing. Fruit juices may be frozen in place of water also, and as the cubes melt, they add a flavoring to the already perfect drink!

Try some of these tested and tasted recipes and those irritable, disagreeable moments will melt away, even as you had been doing.

PARTY PUNCH

- 1 tablespoon finely chopped mint
- 1 cup strong green tea infusion
- ¼ cup lemon juice
- ½ cup orange juice
- ½ cup of sugar syrup
- Few grains of salt
- Rind from one cucumber
- 1 pint loganberry juice
- 1 pint ginger ale
- 1 pint carbonated water

Pour strong tea over mint. Add lemon juice, orange juice, sugar syrup, salt, and the rind from a cucumber, cut in long strips. Let mixture stand until cool, then strain and chill. Just before serving pour into a pitcher containing plenty of ice. Add the loganberry juice, ginger ale, and carbonated water. Garnish with thin slices of orange and a few sprigs of mint.

LIME SPECIAL

- 1½ cups water
- ¾ cup sugar
- Rind of one lemon, cut in thin strips
- 4 whole cloves
- 1 inch stick of cinnamon
- 1 inch stick ginger root
- Juice of four limes

Combine all ingredients except the lime juice, and boil five minutes. When cool, add the lime juice. Color a light green with vegetable coloring and strain the mixture. Add one quart of ice water. Garnish with sprigs of fresh mint. This recipe serves six.

THE LOVELIER WAY TO AVOID OFFENDING

Her voice gone, her plans shattered, Frances Langford passed through one of the most agonizing experiences which ever befell a singer. Dick Powell

The Tears Behind the Smile of FRANCES LANGFORD

By Sada
Cowan

HOW much do you know about Frances Langford?

Perhaps you have heard how she sang at a costume ball in Florida, one night several years ago, and was heard by Eli deWitt, the millionaire cigar manufacturer, who placed her under contract to sing on his radio program. Perhaps you know how she met Rudy Vallée, and through his aid and encouragement became one of radio's greatest stars. Certainly you know how, during the past year, she has won a brilliant position on the screen.

But the chances are that you've never been privileged to glimpse another side of her life—a chapter which verged so closely on tragedy that it may account for those tears which seem always to hover behind her smiles and her songs. Frances Langford doesn't talk a great deal about that near-tragedy—can't talk about it. It hurt too much.

This is the story behind the success story which you have already heard. To make a beginning let's turn back the calendar some ten years:

In a Southern garden, sweet with the odors of oleander and jasmine, stood a young girl—scarcely more than a child—happy, care-free, with all of her life ahead of her. The song of the birds fell upon her ear and was answered by another song, not only in her heart but in actuality.

For the girl's high, clear, soprano tones were unrivalled by the birds themselves and her gift was as natural as theirs. She had never taken a lesson (nor has she to this day). Yet everyone knew what future lay ahead for the little Langford girl. Opera, without a doubt. Later, as soon as she had finished high school, and

Dear Dick
Greetings and lots of success to my favorite editor
Your Pal
Frances Langford

Smith Ballew and Frances Langford in a scene from Palm Springs

if that good looking boy Billy Chase didn't persuade her to elope with him, she would go abroad with her mother, and, after a few years of intensive work—the world would be at her feet.

A happy girl . . . dreaming her dreams!

YET, there was no reason in the world why those dreams should not materialize. Her voice was of amazing range and clarity. She sang easily all of Marian Talley's songs, buying her records and patterning after them. Her father was one of the wealthiest men in Florida and could well afford the musical education she would need. He had bought up a large portion of available real estate just before the boom and was holding it for an ever-increasing profit. But, unfortunately, he held it too long!

The boom went—bang! The bubble burst—and Frances Langford and her family were stripped almost penniless!

But the dreams of youth die hard. And Frances dreamed on. Her mother, a concert pianist, backed up those dreams and reinforced her daughter's spirits whenever they showed signs of faltering. Mr. Langford felt, too, that shortly he would get on his feet financially again. Other men had. And he was still young.

The loss of money was followed by a second misfortune, which so outweighed the first that it paled into insignificance. Frances was taken ill with a serious throat infection and a throat operation was imperative. In spite of intense suffering, she objected to the operation, fearful that it might affect her voice. But she had no choice. Her very life hung in the balance.

When it was over and she was taken home from the hospital, she sensed that something was wrong with her family. Something disturbing was on their minds.

TODAY'S GOSSIP

By the Star Reporter

News bits gathered in all the Hollywood rendezvous

Fred MacMurray started his career as a saxophonist. Between scenes of Princess Comes Across he horns in on the set musicians

Joan and Franchot enjoy the last dance of the evening. Did you know Franchot wears a wedding ring?

GINGER ROGERS disappeared mysteriously—and for four hours her mother, husband Lew Ayres, the house servants and the studio tried frantically to find her. Kidnaped? That was what they feared when their countless telephone calls to all her friends and business acquaintances revealed no trace of her whereabouts. She had called the studio from home, informed them she was leaving immediately for rehearsals with Fred Astaire on Never Gonna Dance. But a half hour elapsed . . . an hour . . . two hours . . . three hours. Had she been in an automobile accident? . . . hospitals and the police knew nothing. Four hours gone. By this time a number of people had broken out in a rash from anxiety.

Then Ginger hurried on the set . . . her face scratched, her clothes torn and hair wildly on end. But she was grinning and had a cocker spaniel puppy in her arms . . . and he was grinning, too. It seems that Michael is a kind of canine Christopher Columbus and when Ginger was putting him into the car to take him with her he decided to explore the hills behind the house—so he leaped away into the brush, barking joyously, and for four hours Ginger tried vainly, in turn, to coax him back . . . then to run him down. It was a long, hard chase because those hills are covered with stones and brush and stand steep and tall. Ginger didn't realize that so much time had elapsed and apologized to the waiting company—then she took her cue and went into her dance. The adventure in the hills apparently was just a warming up.

Perhaps the studio had better put an anti-puppy clause into her contract, for when a fellow luncher commented hesitantly that the red marks on Ginger's arms looked like tooth marks, Ginger said, "The puppy is cutting his teeth on my arm."

UNTIL a national magazine told the story only the family of the late Will Rogers knew that he had bought and paid for a seat on the first trip of the China Clipper to the Orient.

That trip will be made in July, but the lovable Will won't be on it.

It will be interesting to see who does use it.

WITH the arrival in Hollywood of the mother of Freddie Bartholomew, seeking to gain control of her son whose salary is $1,250 per week it was revealed that his salary, under present contracts is split three ways. The boy gets one-third; the aunt one-third and the boy's grandparents one-third. Out of the boy's third must be paid any expenses in connection with his studies, etc.

THIS temporary flareup over little Freddie Bartholomew, of Little Lord Fauntleroy fame will be cleared up and all concerned made very happy. Studios have a way of handling such things and Freddie's family will be taken care of and his picture work go on uninterruptedly.

SPEAKING about dictatorship brings to mind the name of Carole Lombard. Carole does not mind Paramount loaning her out to other studios but when it does here is what Carole demands—and gets. She must have her own writer revise any story; she must have her own cameramen, her own portrait man, her own hair dressers and make-up girls and, positively, her gowns must be created and made by Travis Banton, fashion creator for Paramount.

Aside from that Miss Lombard will co-operate in every way.

THEN there is the item of fur coats. In the film colony Lupe Velez is rated as having more fur coats in in her wardrobe than any other filmite. Nineteen to be exact. Marlene Dietrich has a dozen and when she tires of some of them she has them made over into bed coverings. Mary Pickford has a sizeable collection, including eight which never come to Hollywood. Miss Pickford keeps them in cold storage in New York. When she goes there on a trip she has them taken from the vaults, returning them when she leaves for Hollywood. Don't know what Lupe does with hers.

One of the most democratic and unassuming stars the movie colony has ever known is Ginger Rogers. She likes to pilot her car into a drive-in restaurant and munch a hamburger—even as you and I

THERE was a new and very dramatic angle to the old adage of "the show must go on" at the Los Angeles premiere of The Great Ziegfeld.

In a press seat, not recognized nor noticed by those in her immediate vicinity, sat a young girl, there to write a review of the picture for a small community paper.

When the picture ended the girl mingled in the throng and disappeared in the night.

The young reviewer was Patricia Ziegfeld, daughter of the man the picture glorified. The paper she represented was the Beverly Hills Citizen. The publisher and editor of the Beverly Hills Citizen is Will Rogers, Jr., son of the beloved Will who was a Ziegfeld star of stars.

There was drama for you!

FRED ASTAIRE'S indifference of interviewers was not because of high hattedness. The real reason is that Fred figured there was no use giving away what you could sell. In other words Astaire has been secretly working on a book "How To Dance" which will shortly be published. The book answers all the questions the average interviewer might be inclined to ask him.

NEVER will it be said of Mae West that "they laughed when she sat down to play, etc." Meaning that there has been doubts that Mae's playing of the trap drums a la orchestra was anything else but a gag. Well, in her next picture Mae will give visible and audible proof that she surely is an artist at trap drumming. She has her routine perfected and will you be surprised?

LITTLE OLYMPE BRADNA, a beautiful French actress and very clever, too, certainly does not get the best of the breaks. Under contract to Paramount she was idle for six months through difficulty in casting her. Then Ray McCarey youthful director had an ideal spot for her in Three Cheers for Love. She was assigned the rôle. The day she was to appear on the set she was stricken with influenza.

WHEN Poppy comes to the screen, starring the lovable William C. (Bill) Fields you will see Fields at his funniest despite the fact that he suffered excruciating pain during the entire making of the picture. Unless Bill improves in the near future it is doubtful if he will make another picture.

WHEN Shirley Temple first clicked as a screen wonder, about every mother in Hollywood could be seen parading Hollywood Boulevard or hanging about the studios with a child prodigy of her own dressed like little Shirley.

Clark Gable is amused by his own lines as he reads them for broadcast. Leo Carrillo can't help smiling, too

The fad has passed on but there is a new one in vogue now, this time the male sex. Eager mothers are hounding the studios with their little boys dressed in Eton costumes and affecting the Oxford accent Freddie Bartholomew uses. Outside of Paramount in one day last week there were three boys, two of whom had come all the way from Australia. No bids yet.

YOU'VE probably heard of the "suicide song" the title of which is Gloomy Sunday, and you must have read that in Hungary in one week seventeen people committed suicide after hearing the song.

None other than Jack Oakie affirms and insists that the song does not cause suicide. On the Paramount lot the other day Jack wandered up and down the corridors past the offices which house song writers and gag men, sang the song lustily for an hour and nothing happened. He thought the song had clicked when he opened one office and found Mack "Killer" Grey, stretched out on the floor—but he was just asleep.

WHEN Jack Benny arrives in Hollywood to start work on The Big Broadcast at Paramount his stipend, which seems a modest name for it, will be $10,000 per week.

QUIZZED on his reported romance with Carole Lombard, Clark Gable said "I'm too busy planning to do things I have wanted to do solo for years, hunting, fishing, etc., to have any time for affairs of the heart."

So you can pick it up from there, folks!

A BURNED child dreads the fire, so 'tis said, and on the same basis Al Jolson dreads the stock market which got him once, so much so that, they say, practically the entire fortune of Jolson, well over a million, is hoarded in cash and in safe deposit vaults.

The leading man and the leading lady of the Showboat troupe (Allan Jones and Irene Dunne) marry as Cap'n Andy, played by Charles Winninger, looks on approvingly

Show Boat

THERE'S never a dull moment in this entrancing musical drama which has a full quota of comedy, action, music and visual beauty. Irene Dunne is superb in the rôle she loves so well; her voice is lovely and her comedy antics come as a delightful surprise, the goofy dance drawing gales of laughter.

Deserving of special mention is Paul Robeson, his delivery of "Old Man River" being one of the most stirring pieces of singing ever presented on the screen. He does another number which will probably start everyone quoting the tag line of the song, "Ah Still Suits Me."

As captain of the Showboat, Charles Winninger is a lovable character. A more hilarious sequence than his solo delineation of a fight between Parson Brown and the mustachio-ed stage villain has not been seen on the screen in many a day.

Allan Jones sings admirably and is wholly acceptable as Gaylord Ravenal. Helen Morgan does all that she ought with the character of tragic Julie—there is tense drama in the scene where she admits that she has colored blood and consequently is forced to leave the Showboat. Others in the cast, notably Sammy White, Helen Westley, Harry Barris, Donald Cook, Queenie Smith, help to keep the film in the upper brackets of entertainment. Director James Whale rates orchids. If you doubt that all these superlatives are warranted, go to see Showboat as soon as you can.—Produced by Universal.

The Ex-Mrs. Bradford

BILL POWELL is up to the tricks which made The Thin Man such a scintillating piece of crime detection. The plot is only incidental, providing a background for the fun between society doctor Powell and his writing ex-wife, Jean Arthur, who is determined to marry the man again—strictly against his wishes. They divorced because she brought mysteries into his life, and solving them left no time for medicine. Now she brings home a lulu, and while the corpses collect the laughs pile up. The initial victim is a jockey who has a big-money race almost won. There are several fallacies in theory of the black-widow spider killings—but they won't impair your enjoyment in the least. Much suspense in a thrilling race sequence. Excellent comedy support by Eric Blore, Lucille and James Gleason, Ralph Morgan, Robert Armstrong.—Produced by RKO-Radio.

Accused murderess Madeleine Carroll loves prosecutor George Brent

The Case Against Mrs. Ames

YOU shouldn't miss Madeleine Carroll's and George Brent's performances—nor the story, intelligent and engrossing, which begins where most courtroom dramas end. Acquitted of murdering her husband, Madeleine offers $25,000 to prosecuting attorney Brent if he can prove her guilty. She goes on trial again for the custody of her child, whom her mother-in-law (Beulah Bondi) wants to adopt, thus strengthening Madeleine's desire to clear her name of suspicion of guilt—and doubling suspense and interest. Brent is at his best as the sardonically humorous lawyer. The dialogue is exceptionally good. Fitting their rôles well are Arthur Treacher, Alan Mowbray, Alan Baxter. Don't pass it up if you want to see something different in entertainment.—Produced by Walter Wanger.

Lady Esther

See if the Shade You Are Using Is Really the Right One for You!

By Lady Esther

You're pretty sure about the shade of face powder you use, aren't you? You're quite certain it's the right shade for you.

What would you say if you were to find out it was the wrong shade entirely for you? Don't be so sure that this isn't the case. As any artist or make-up expert will tell you, many women use the wrong shade of face powder entirely. The result is, they look years older than they really are.

The reason so many women use the wrong shade of face powder is that they select their shades on the wrong basis altogether. It's a mistake to select your shade of face powder according to your so-called "type." You are not a "type." You are an individual.

One Way and Only One!

There is only one way to tell your most becoming shade of face powder and that is to try on all five basic shades. Any other method is only theory and guess-work.

To make it simple and conclusive for you to ascertain your right shade of face powder, I have invented a game called: "Find Your Right Shade of Face Powder." It's as enlightening as it is fascinating. Here's all you need do: Just send me your name and address and by return mail I'll send you all five shades of my Lady Esther Face Powder, free of charge. Take the five shades and sit down before your mirror. Start with the shade you think least suited to you and try that on. But don't stop at any one shade. Go through all five and observe the effects in your mirror in each case.

You don't have to be any seer to recognize instantly that one of these five shades is more suited to you than any other. You will see immediately that one shade, more than any other, makes you look your youngest and most attractive. What that shade is, neither I nor anybody else, can tell you. You must see for yourself.

A Surprise May Be in Store for You!

Maybe the very shade you think least suited to you, the very one you would never think of using is actually your most becoming shade. Thousands of women have been amazed with the results of this test.

Decide today that you are not going to be in the dark any longer as to the shade of face powder you should use. Decide today that you are going to know once and for all which is your most becoming shade. Mail the coupon today and play the game that tells—my game of "face powder shades."

This story

will interest many Men and Women

NOT long ago I was like some friends I have...low in spirits...run-down...out of sorts...tired easily and looked terrible. I knew I had no serious organic trouble so I reasoned sensibly...as my experience has since proven...that work, worry, colds and whatnot had just worn me down.

I had been listening to the S.S.S. Radio Program and began to wonder if my trouble was not lowered strength in my blood...I started a course of S.S.S. Tonic Treatment...at the end of ten days I noticed a change...I followed directions faithfully...a tablespoonful before each meal.

The color began to come back to my skin...I felt better...I did not tire easily and soon I felt that those red-blood-cells were back to so-called fighting strength.

The confidence mother has always had in S.S.S....which is still her stand-by when she feels run-down...convinced me I ought to try this Treatment...it is great to feel strong again and like my old self.

Much more could be said...a trial will thoroughly convince you that this way, in the absence of any organic trouble, will start you on the road to feeling like yourself again. You should soon enjoy again the satisfaction of appetizing food...sound sleep...steady nerves...a good complexion...and renewed strength.

There is no guess work in the S.S.S. Tonic Treatment...decades of popular acceptance and enthusiastic words of praise by users themselves speak even louder than the scientific appraisal of the progressively improved S.S.S. product which has caused millions to say to their friends—

SSS TONIC

Makes you feel like yourself again

Claudette Colbert toys with the affections of Victor McLaglen and Ronald Colman

Under Two Flags

THERE are several agreeable surprises in this thrilling production: one is Claudette Colbert's performance as the fiery, passionate Cigarette, the other the change in Ronald Colman. Instead of his usual portrayal of the meticulous and quiet gentleman, here he is brash and audacious. The story, which seems a bit slow in getting started, is laid in Algiers. Colman is an English nobleman who joins the Foreign Legion, imposing the exile upon himself to save another. He becomes infatuated with Cigarette but turns his attentions to handsome and aristocratic Lady Venetia, played (and so well!) by Rosalind Russell. This switch of affection is a bit puzzling and constitutes a fault, but it is the fault of the old Ouida novel from which the film was made. Victor McLaglen is magnificent as the brutal officer who loves Claudette and hates Colman, believing that the Englishman stands in the way of his own triumph with the French café girl. The photography is exceptionally good, scenes showing Arabs surrounding Legionnaires, scenes of desert outpost forts and native bazaars are unforgettably beautiful. There are outstanding contributions from the supporting cast, some of whom are Gregory Ratoff, Herbert Mundin, Nigel Bruce, C. Henry Gordon, Onslow Stevens, Fritz Leiber.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

George Brent sneers at Bette Davis' nobleman, Ivan Lebedeff

Joe E. Brown is a doughboy—Joan Blondell has a French accent

The Golden Arrow

NOT a believable story but an entertaining one, and a chance for Bette Davis to show her ability with comedy. The humor isn't of the most adult variety but it is lightly handled and the lines are bright. Bette, hailed as one of the richest girls in the world is really a restaurant cashier, stooge for a campaign to advertise a cold cream. George Brent, a $30-a-week newspaperman, marries her merely to help her ward off the fortune hunters who seek to wed her, and remains aloof despite her sly hints—until the exposé of the publicity stunt. Carol Hughes and Eugene Pallette are swell. See it if you're looking for something light.—Produced by Warner Bros.

JOE E. BROWN scores again as an actor who is dragged into the army. "Over there" he finds his former valet, Eric Blore, has become a hardboiled sergeant who gives Joe "the works." Joe falls for Joan Blondell who is decked out with a fetching French accent, he breaks every army regulation and is arrested. Escaping, he finds himself in the front lines where single-handed and goofily he captures a machine gun nest and brings back to his own lines a regiment of enemy forces who insist on following him, despite his protests. There is a hilarious gag Apache dance by Joe and Frank Mitchell. Good support is supplied by G. P. Huntley, Wini Shaw, Craig Reynolds and Beverly Roberts.—Produced by Warner Bros.

Reporter Brian Donlevy and Claire Trevor listen to managing editor Alan Dinehart

Human Cargo

COMBINE murders, smuggling, raids, the rivalry between a man and a woman newspaper reporter and you have exciting entertainment, with plenty of comedy interpolated. Claire Trevor (an heiress bent on showing her papa she can buy her own cakes) and Brian Donlevy are rival news-gatherers who become involved in a smuggling ring that brings thousands of foreigners across our borders, then bleeds them of earnings. Our reporters go to Canada and reenter the States as smuggled aliens, which proves to be a very dangerous business. Alan Dinehart is good as a bellowing managing editor. Helen Troy deserves attention for her comedy—she is credited with devising the switchboard operator character and dialogue.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Ida Lupino slaps Francis Lederer's face when he kisses her

One Rainy Afternoon
★★½

THE first picture brought out by the new Pickford-Lasky producing combination is gay and nonsensical, Continental in theme. The story concerns Francis Lederer, who is keeping a tryst with a married woman, gets his theater seats mixed, and kisses Ida Lupino in the darkened playhouse. She is angered and there is an uproar. Lederer is seized upon by the press as a monster—a romantic one, however—and he becomes a rage of Paris. Busybody clubwomen cause his arrest as an insulter of women and he is brought to trial—a trial which is wholly and delightfully ridiculous—a satire on courts and professional moralists' meddling. Lederer is perfectly suited to his romantic rôle. Ida Lupino scores with her characterization of the indignant girl who relents when she hears the "monster's" gallant defense. Such fine comedians as Roland Young, Hugh Herbert and Eric Rhodes add to the fun.—Produced by Pickford-Lasky.

Kelpamalt Company,
"Dear Sirs:

"I am 5 ft. 5 in. tall. Before I was married I weighed 110 lbs. That wasn't much, but better than the 94 lbs. I've weighed ever since my boy was born 5 years ago.

"I was always active in out of door sports and in dancing, but honestly, I've been ashamed to put on a bathing suit or an evening gown for the last 4 summers. Being so skinny actually changed my mode of living.

"Last August I was visiting my mother-in-law. I came to lunch in a sun back dress with straps over the shoulders. Mrs. H. looked at me and said: 'If I had shoulders that looked like yours, I certainly would wear a high-necked dress.' Can you imagine how badly I felt. I was glad when the summer was over and I could wear a sweater and skirt.

"Now, thanks to Kelpamalt I'm looking forward to spring. I have taken just 100 tablets and I've gained 7 lbs. Think of it. Seven pounds in 16 days. Believe me, I've sent for another bottle. I feel so well, too, and my friends are remarking on my looks. My only regret is, that I didn't start taking Kelpamalt sooner. Three cheers for Kelpamalt! The best beauty product on the market."

Film More Books

IS IT as good or better than the book? Movie audiences are demanding this excellence of adaptations of books and they are getting it. Formerly it was impossible to recognize more than the title in a movie supposedly made from a book. But today these picturizations are faithful presentations. They may not slavishly follow the book in every detail, but they do present it in this new medium so that it will be essentially the same story and leave the same impression as the original.

A Tale of Two Cities is the finest example of adaptations we have had. Even ardent Dickensians admit that the few changes made were improvements, making the picture a classic in its own right. These noteworthy changes included:

1—Omitting the improbable coincidence employed by Dickens when he made Carton and Darnay physical doubles. This change made the story more plausible and more clearly delineated the character of Barsad when he changed his testimony because he was outwitted by Carton.

2—Combining the last two trials which resulted in artistic unity and showed what a large part fickle mob rule played in revolutionary "justice."

3—Ending the picture with Carton's sacrifice, the real end of the story.—Mrs. Herbert F. Young, P. O. Box 1798, Pittsburgh, Pa.

A Quack for Donald Duck

IT SEEMS as if the cat got Mickey Mouse, but who cares as long as we can have that scintillating personality, Donald Duck. Donald is a weather-beaten, depression-torn guy who fits in with the times. In spite of his ups and downs, he dusts off his tarnished feathers and keeps on going. Naturally we have more in common with poor Donald Duck than we had with that capricious Mickey Mouse. Whenever Donald struts his stuff at our neighborhood movie, I'm always there with a big quack.—Carol Evans Miller, 620 North Graham Street, Charlotte, N. C.

Education for Children

I'VE heard so much discussion as to whether the growing child seems more of the type of film that will demoralize him than of the ones which have a tendency to elevate him that I should like to give my opinion. The movie-going youngster is an educated one, notwithstanding the oft-made remark that movies are for morons. He learns voice and perfect diction—how to be well-groomed, how to be at ease in any situation and how to be a gentleman in behavior at least.

For his education and entertainment there are travelogues and Strange as It Seems shorts, and others of that type, along with the day's news events which keep him in touch with the world today; the musical shorts featuring artists whom the majority of children would never see in person. Then there are the shorts on golf, tennis and other popular sports shown as they are played by experts. In this way the child acquires a fair knowledge of and an appreciation of the game.

Lastly, in seeing the feature pictures I agree that he sees portrayed every strata of society to the lowest dregs of humanity—but what child, with even a small amount of pride and common decency would care, after having seen the two types contrasted, to emulate the latter unless he was naturally bad—in which case the movies do neither harm nor good. In conclusion may I say "more power to the movies."—Jack Shepard, Texon, Texas.

Applause for the Supporting Cast

SOME of us living far back in the hinterland often wonder if the casting directors in Film Town are not a much-imposed upon group. Numerous times I have seen pictures in which the leads were so noticeably mis-cast that it is more than apparent that some kind of pressure is often applied to alter the sound judgment which most directors undoubtedly have. Surely most theatregoers of adult age would rather see a comparatively unknown actor play a rôle in which he is convincing than to see the same rôle played in mediocre fashion by some well-known star whose only justification for having the part is the fact that he is already established or, possibly, may have a pull with some studio official.—*Fred J. MY FOUR YEARS in Hollywood

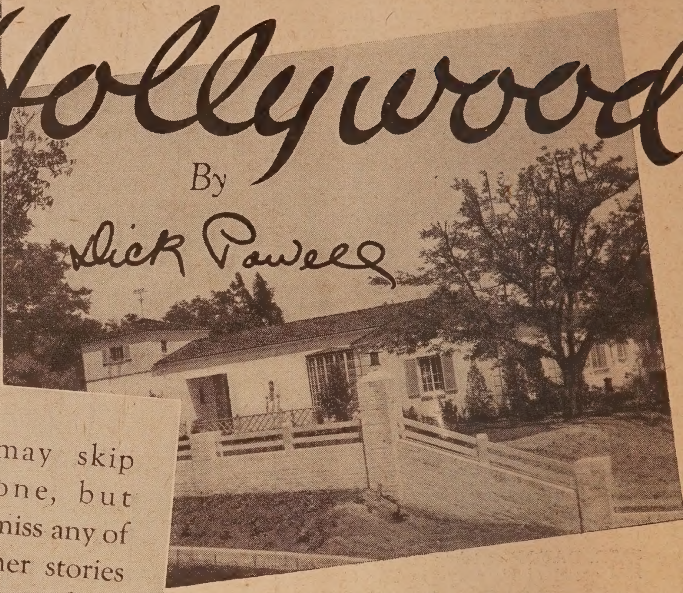
By Dick Powell

Just in case you don't like my editorship—or perhaps I should take up long-distance sprinting!



Home, sweet home, in the Toluca Lake district outside of Hollywood. Players on the adjacent golf course complain bitterly about the loud singing coming from "that white brick house"

> You may skip this one, but don't miss any of the other stories fore or aft
> —Ye Ed. Powell

FOUR years in Hollywood (the most eventful years in my life) began when I left a pleasant master of ceremonies job in a Pittsburgh theatre and grabbed the movie contract offered to me—even though that contract called for less money each week than I was making as an m. c.

I went to Los Angeles by train but sent my car—a bright, canary-colored roadster that could be seen two miles away—ahead of me. Not many people knew I was coming and fewer cared. Regis Toomey, a great fellow and a fine friend, kept my arrival from being a complete bust. He met me and his smile was warm enough to make up for the absence of hundreds of other people. Millions of others, in fact.

It was April 30, 1932. I put up at the Hollywood Athletic Club and wrote my mother that I liked Hollywood very much. I haven't changed my mind, either.

As soon as I was settled—and that didn't take more than twenty minutes—I started calling up the Hollywood people I had met in Pittsburgh when they came through on personal appearance tours. I telephoned Jean Harlow, who was kind enough to say she did remember me and who asked me to dinner. Everyone was friendly. Joe E. Brown in particular. I had met him on the Pittsburgh stage and he welcomed me almost as one of the family. He helped me materially all through my first year in Hollywood.

At the studio the next day there were introductions all around, papers to be signed, tests for my first rôle and portraits. "Make a lot of pictures," the publicity director told Elmer Fryer, chief studio portrait photographer. "Powell may sign a long term contract." But I saw him hold up three fingers when he thought I wasn't looking.

We made the portraits—three of them as ordered and one extra for good measure out of the kindness of Fryer's heart.

I remember I wore a yellow sweater and knickers. Everyone looked at the knickers and grinned. It didn't take me long to note that in Hollywood, at least, men didn't play golf in knickers.

On the way from the studio, still driving my bright yellow car, I picked up several studio workmen who were waiting at the gate for a bus to take them into Hollywood. I think I learned more about pictures from them in the next fifteen minutes than I have ever learned in any other like amount of time. It gave me an idea and almost every day after that, on my way to and from the studio, I picked up passengers: carpenters, painters, greenhouse men, plaster workers, studio policemen and representatives of hundreds of the different trades represented on studio payrolls. It was a liberal education because I asked them all as many questions as they could answer and I made many friendships inside the studio that have been particularly valuable and enjoyable.

The first picture I worked in was Blessed Event and I was the slightly "sissy" crooner who made things unpleasant for Lee Tracy and Mary Brian. When it was finished I was to go back to Pittsburgh and be a master of ceremonies again and I realized suddenly, that I wouldn't have much to show for my stay in Hollywood. Nothing, in fact, except my four portraits by Fryer and a rôle in a picture that was to be released sometime in the future.

So I got my courage together and asked George

Then she asked permission just to watch Reinhardt rehearse his production in Hollywood, instead was given a second understudy rôle of Hermia when luck played into her hands and eliminated the two ladies above her. STAND ASIDE,

That's what male stars' wives would like to be able to say when predatory females leap at their husbands

By Charity
Chase

Betty Montgomery jollies husband Bob about the lady who claimed she was Cleopatra to his Marc Antony in a former life

For some women, wives of the men they admire just don't exist . . . so learned Mrs. Pat O'Brien not long ago

IN EVERY woman's life there comes a black day when she has to stand by and watch her husband being cooed over by some vivacious female whom she would like to choke—and not out of jealousy either—but simply because her vanity tells her that other women, observing the spectacle, are busily drawing all the wrong conclusions.

The wife of a Hollywood star has to throw this particular feminine vanity away if she wants to retain her title. One of her first lessons is to learn to sit quietly back and say nothing when a lady admirer suddenly leaps out of nowhere and falls on her favorite hero with yaps of joy. It's part of the job of being married to a screen personality. But sometimes these occurrences call for almost super-human tact and self-control.

There was the predicament of young Mrs. Jack Oakie—and on her honeymoon, too! The spotlight was not new to her. And she realized that she was marrying a popular movie favorite—but she didn't expect to have a strange woman jump out of the shower bath and proclaim in no uncertain terms that she felt that Jack should belong to her.

Venita was inexperienced. She hadn't realized how determined a lady fan can be. "I've never seen her before in my life," moaned Oakie frantically, but his bride had already begun to pack her clothes. Here was one situation even Jack Oakie couldn't laugh off.

The woman was finally identified as a love sick chambermaid who had got the job after learning that Jack was to stay in the hotel. Evidently she had hoped to get a chance to persuade Jack he had made a great mistake in having married anyone but her.

Mrs. Oakie says that now she's prepared for anything. She's not afraid that Jack's head ever will be turned after watching his helpless smile in the face of the lady's enthusiasm, his feeble: "It's CREATURE!

Sometimes police protection isn't available to movie heroes appearing in public. Then buttons are torn off, locks of hair snipped and neckties filched for souvenirs awfully nice of you but I'm afraid I'm tied up," while beads of sweat poured from his agonized brow.

Mrs. Bob Montgomery says that her motto is the same as that of the famous duchess. "Hell," said the Duchess who up to this point had taken no part in the conversation. "That," says Mrs. Montgomery, "is a perfect description of the chit-chat allowed a star's wife, when she is unlucky enough to encounter a lovely woman who admires her husband."

Perhaps she was thinking of the southern girl who was "just simply wild about Mistah Mon'gomy!" She was an exotic dame, not too young, but pretty intense when it came to Mistah Mom'gomy and herself among the higher spiritual reaches. She met the Montgomerys at a party, and she had very little use for Mrs. Montgomery, whom she looked on as some childish mistake of Bob's youth.

In fact she made such a pest of herself that everyone was poking fun at her, and giggling at her efforts. Bob was pretty bored, and when she suggested that she had met Bob before in a former life, he began to get a bit caustic. The lady, it seemed, believed in reincarnation. She was so highly developed she said, that she could remember all her former lives.

"When I saw you on the screen for the first time," she rhapsodized, "I felt as if I had come on an old, old friend, for we were assuredly together in a former stage." And she turned to the rest of the company. "Oh, I can assure you that we were!"

"When I was a tadpole and you were a fish," said Bob lightly.

"Ah, no. You are joking. But seriously. I was Cleopatra. And you—"

"Don't tell me, don't tell me," said Bob. "Marc Antony?"

The lady was in ecstasy. "You do remember!"

Suppressed titters were going all around the room. Chester Morris said with great composure: "It's an extraordinary thing, but whenever anyone tells you of his former lives it always turns out that he remembers being Napoleon, or somebody else famous. Everyone can't have been Napoleon. There must have been a few unknown people in ancient times. Personally I have a strong conviction that I was a mule driver!"

The lady turned on him indignantly. "The reason only famous people are remembered is that only highly developed souls are able to remember. Bob and I remember because we are both highly developed souls."

Afterward Betty said that if she hadn't had her long years of training in being a star's wife, she certainly would have said, "I can remember too—when I was an asp!"

But she didn't say it, because a star's wife had to have self-control, and be ten times sweeter than any human women ever could be—unless she practiced. And a star's wife gets lots of practice.

There is the story of the wife of an English star [Continued on page 75]

WHEN Shirley GROWS UP—

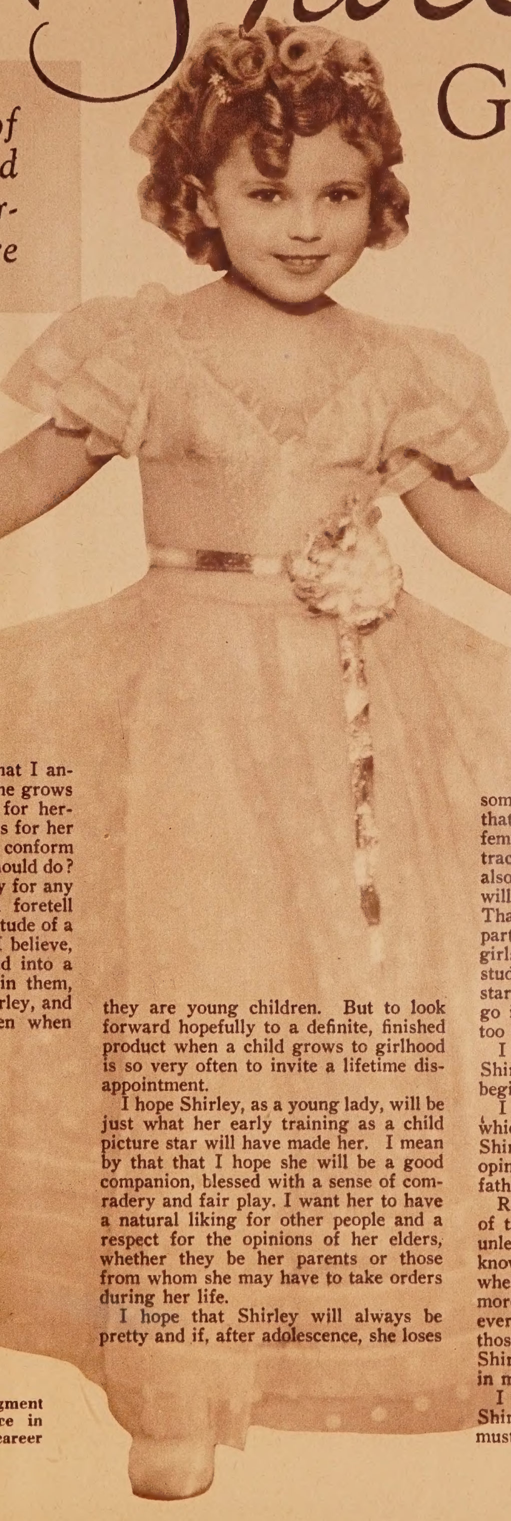
The mother of America's child sweetheart surveys the future

By
Mrs. Gertrude Temple



PEOPLE have asked me what I anticipate for Shirley when she grows to girlhood and faces life for herself. Have I made definite plans for her future? Will I force her to conform with my own idea of what she should do?

That would be dangerous folly for any parent, I think. No one can foretell along what lines the natural aptitude of a child may develop; no parent, I believe, has the right to force any child into a particular mould. We can train them, just as I have tried to train Shirley, and we can reason with them, even when they are young children. But to look forward hopefully to a definite, finished product when a child grows to girlhood is so very often to invite a lifetime disappointment.

Mrs. Temple's care and judgment have been of vital importance in guiding Shirley's phenomenal career

I hope Shirley, as a young lady, will be just what her early training as a child picture star will have made her. I mean by that that I hope she will be a good companion, blessed with a sense of comradery and fair play. I want her to have a natural liking for other people and a respect for the opinions of her elders, whether they be her parents or those from whom she may have to take orders during her life.

I hope that Shirley will always be pretty and if, after adolescence, she loses some of her babyish good looks, I hope that she will use all the artful little feminine beauty helps to make her as attractive a debutante as possible. But I also hope her studio training as a child will teach her not to over-do on make-up. That is an error I see every day on the part of high school girls. If only these girls realized the trouble and effort studio make-up artists go to to have a star appear "natural" they would never go in for those heavily rouged lips and too much mascaraed eyelashes.

I suppose the most important phase of Shirley's girlhood will arrive when she begins to have "dates" with boy friends.

I am not very fearful of those years which bewilder other mothers, for Shirley has learned already to respect the opinions and judgments of both her father and mother.

Right now, Shirley would never think of taking a piece of candy from a box unless she first asked my permission. I know that the problem of obedience, when her own will begins to assert itself more forcibly later on, will be a problem every mother faces, yet I am unafraid of those years because I firmly believe Shirley will have complete confidence in me.

I shall never attempt to choose Shirley's friends for her. That, she must, and will, [Continued on page 87]

STARDOM—and STOOGES

Which reveals how Merle Oberon discovered that stardom too often results in the loss of some valued friendships

by
HENRY LANGFORD

MERLE OBERON had vanished! There was the banquet table, in one of the private dining rooms in one of London's ritziest cafes. Around it, the people who'd been invited—(and scrambled for the invitations)—to meet Merle Oberon, British girl, newest sensation of the films. There were titles there—Lady So-and-So, Lord This-and-That. They talked, while they waited, of the crashing success Merle had made in Uhmeddicuh, which is the British way of saying America, and how thrilled they were to have this opportunity of meeting her. And they waited. . . .

Bye and bye, they began searching for her. She had arrived at the cafe, they knew that, but where was she? What had detained her?

The answer came when one of the men handling the affair popped into the little cocktail lounge of the establishment.

There was Merle, perched on one of those stools before the bar. There wasn't a drink before her. But there was Peter. Peter (I haven't the slightest idea what his last name is, if he has one) is the bartender who mixes the cocktails that make London's Cafe de Paris famous. He and Merle were chattering away like two long-lost friends.

As a matter of fact, that's what they were.

Several years before, Merle had been one of the "hostesses" at the cafe—a sort of glorified taxi-dancer there. Her name wasn't Merle Oberon then; it was still Estelle Thompson, which is the name she was born with. She hadn't become famous then; she used to wonder, now and then, whether that last shilling'd stretch to next [Continued on page 67]

DUCK for DINNER

"Pinter, Joseph—Hungarian, en route Detroit," read the tag pinned to the coat of wee cross-eyed Joe Penner when he reached Ellis Island some twenty years ago

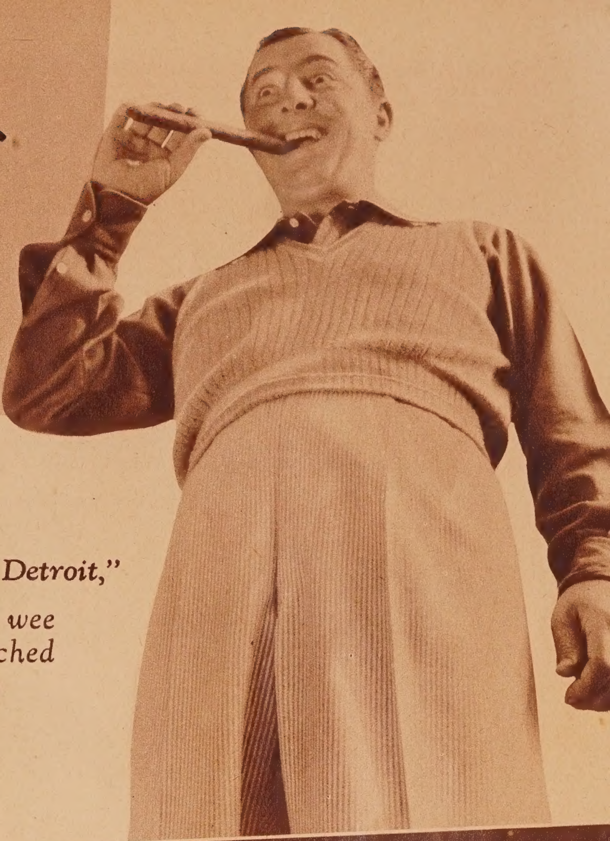
By Harry Lang



Wed eight years ago, Eleanor and Joe Penner are still ideally happy. Their first "date" was Christmas dinner in St. Louis

LOOK!—for his favorite dinner, would you believe it, what Mama cooks for Joe Penner?

Listen—it's a Duck she cooks him!!!

She gets it young, and then she ties it to a stake in the yard, by a short cord, so it can't waddle around and get thin. And every day, it gets stuffed, via forcible feeding, with corn and salt and lard. The corn makes it strong; the lard makes it fat and saftig, and the salt flavors the flesh through and through. And then Mama cooks it for Joe, in the old, old Hungarian style . . .

And Joe, he loves it. Joe's crazy about it. Although he came to America when he was just a kid in short pants, Joe has never lost his liking for rich Hungarian cooking. And best of all, he likes Mama's Hungarian duck—so long as he's sure it isn't Goo-Goo that's been cooked . . . !!!

You know Goo-Goo, don't you? Goo-Goo's the most famous duck in the world. Joe made her that way. If you don't know about Goo-Goo, you might just as well skip this story, because Goo-Goo and Joe are inseparable in thought, even though there's 3,000 miles between them as this is written. Goo-Goo is Joe Penner's original duck—the original duck of Joe's immortal "Wanna-Buy-A-Duck?" gag.

Goo-Goo's sort of old-ladyish, now. As ducks go, she's a great-great-great-grandmother, and then some. She used to make personal appearances with Joe, night after night, show after show, and she loved it. She used to travel from town to town with him, and she loved it. She used to get a bath every day, to remove the train-soot and B. O., and she loved it. But now she's old and she can't stand excitement any more, and she couldn't stand a 3,000-mile train trip.

So Joe keeps her on the Long Island estate that he bought with some of the proceeds of "Do you wanna buy a duck?" And out in Beverly Hills, where he's living now, he sits in the back yard and sadly contemplates the gorgeous swimming pool, which he bought with more of the proceeds of "Do you wanna buy a duck?"

And every once in a while, he sadly shakes his head, as he considers the swimming pool, and mutters: "Gee! GEE!—wouldn't THAT make a swell bathtub for Goo-Goo, now?"

You can't blame Joe for being gooey about Goo-Goo, though. Goo-Goo is actually the symbol of Joe's success and prosperity. Goo-Goo marked the turning point of as bizarre and at the same time Horatio-Alger-like a success-story as you've ever heard. Listen—

It was in a town in Hungary with the horrendous name of Nagd Bechkereck that Joe Pinter was born. Uh, huh, I said "Pinter"; that's his real name. The little hut where he was born was just one of life's dark

I'm having trouble with my precocious son Bill Powell and his fast-stepping wife Eleanor Powell. They have their woes, too, and we're calling for help. Help!
Dick Powell

THE GREAT

By Dick Mook

IT WAS not so long ago that Dick Powell and I sat in the theater watching one of his pictures. In front of us sat a couple of women who gabbed with more enthusiasm than knowledge. As Dick appeared on the screen one of them leaned over to her companion. "That's that cute Dick Powell," she said. "He used to be married to Carole Lombard and how she happened to let him slip through her fingers I'll never know."

"Yes," the other encouraged her. "He has a ten-year-old child, too."

The exchange of confidences went on until I could stand it no longer. I tapped one of them on the shoulder. "Pardon me," I said with the famous Mook smile which many people have said would frighten Karloff, "it was William Powell who was married to Carole Lombard. It's William Powell who has the son. Dick isn't married."

My gratuitous information was received with a look that fairly withered me. "Don't pay any attention to that busy-body," she advised her friend. "I know what I'm talking about. It was Dick who married Carole Lombard. I'm sure of it because I wrote a letter to his sister Eleanor and she told me!"

I gave up. Eleanor, Dick and Bill have long since given up. Fans marry Eleanor first to Dick and then to Bill with indiscriminate abandon. It's sort of like the old gag at the county fair—"You pays your money, you takes your choice!"

In the beginning all three of them used to attempt to answer such letters and set their admirers straight in regard to their relation—or lack of it—to each other. But it was a losing fight.

The aggravating mystery of the three Powells is one of those things the fans will never permit to be solved. They get too much fun out of mixing them up.

Quite without their volition, the Powell theme song has come to be one for all and all for one. What makes it more amusing

I'm going to hide behind this thing—and a lot YOU care!—until I quit getting bills for Eleanor's dancing shoes and notes from Willy's teacher. Foolin' aside, I enjoy playing my part in Unscrambling-the-Powells contest in which we three are entered to the bystander and more aggravating to them is that the three P's of the movies are not related, they have never appeared in a picture together and they aren't even especially close friends. But all that makes no never mind to the fans. They blithely accuse Dick of having played Bill's rôles, they announce with gusto that William Powell's voice in his last picture was not so good as in his earlier ones—and Eleanor! Well, she just gets bills for neckties, athletic aids, mustache waxers and trumpets. She knows no more about trumpets than you or I. In fact, I've been told on reliable authority the only thing she ever plays is the races.

The confusion grows apace. Only a few days ago I was out at Dick's house, helping him with his mail when he let out a whistle the Angel Gabriel must have heard. "What's up?" I asked.

Dick tossed me a letter. It was from some shoe concern calling his attention to the fact that they had—quite unsolicited—sent him six sample pairs of their tap dancing shoes. They had had no response and unless the shoes were either returned or paid for immediately their lawyer would take steps.

"I got the shoes," Dick confessed with a grin, "but my secretary must have got the letter that came with them. They were women's shoes and I thought somebody was playing a joke on me—either insinuating I was a little flossy in my last pictures or else giving me a gentle hint that I might learn to dance as well as sing."

It wasn't until several days later that the mystery was unraveled. The letter had gone to Eleanor but the shoes had been sent to Dick. A difference of opinion, you might say, on the part of the sales and shipping departments of the shoe concern.

Eleanor, on the other hand, is not without her troubles. She got a fan letter informing her that the writer had enjoyed her tap dancing in Shipmates Forever but suggesting she might give her brother a tip and advise him to use Dr. Zeno's throat lozenges which had been of inestimable value to the writer's mother—also a self-admitted great singer.

We'll leave Dick for a moment with his six pairs of girls' dancing shoes and Eleanor with her suddenly acquired brother.

Far away in the baking desert, the sun blistering a little adobe shack, Mr. William Powell is resting from the labors of his latest picture. Don't ask which one. He's making pictures with both hands these days and only his agent knows the name of the latest.

He is far from a telephone and the postman always rings twice—a week. Mr. Powell is in old white ducks and his beard quit speaking to his razor weeks ago. All is peace and quiet. Nothing disturbs his serenity. Nothing, that is, until on one of the postman's bi-weekly visits a notice is put in Bill's box that there is a package for him at the express office, some thirty miles away.

The supplies are getting low and Mr. Powell thinking his rations have arrived, sighs regretfully, piles himself and his several-weeks-old beard into his car and, like Mae West, he really goes to town.

The fans recognize him despite the fact that he seems got up for a rôle in The Passion Play and they besiege him for autographs. Mr. Powell sighs. The only reason for the trip was a burning, consuming desire to get away from it all. Far from the madding crowd.

He forces a smile to his weary lips and, eventually, makes his way to the express office. Instead of some Kansas City steaks he'd ordered, instead of the limes and lemons, what do you suppose was in the package?

No steaks, my pets, no limes and no lemons. Just a set of kettle drums. Mr. Dick Powell might have appreciated the drums. He might even have thought them worth the thirty mile trip to town. But every hair in Mr. William Powell's beard rose on end in his wrath.

What happened to the drums no man knoweth. Dick continues to get bills for them—but he's never got the drums.

The material things one gets bills for when one of the others gets the goods is not the only annoying phase of this unrelated trio's existence. There is the spiritual side of things. And the spiritual, of course, includes the domestic.

Dick and Bill have both recently built homes for themselves. Bill's is the last word in pretentiousness. Nothing more formal has been seen in Hollywood.

Dick's house is as informal in character as Dick himself. For a long time it was laughingly referred to around Hollywood as "The Arkansas State House." Visitors from Arkansas swarmed there in droves. Never was one turned away from the door.

People whom Dick had never met and who knew him only by reputation would arrive on Sunday afternoon, take a swim and remain to dinner.

That was all right as long as they got the right Powell. But when suddenly some Arkansans arrived at the home of William Powell and demanded admittance on the grounds that they had lived next door to him in Little Rock, things came to a head.

Dick can't say "No" to anyone but Bill is not a man to be put upon. When the visitors became insistent, even going so far as to call the butler a liar when he told them Bill had never lived in Little Rock, Bill appeared on the scene.

That fine scorn, that supercilious air that characterizes his work on the screen can be carried over into private life on occasion. This was an occasion. The Arkansans understand now that Bill and Dick are not one and the same person. And when they pass Bill Powell's house nowadays they sadly shake their heads and whisper, "Dickie doesn't live there any more."

Eleanor, of course, being relatively new to pictures, is not bothered so much in that respect. As a matter of fact, she lives in an apartment. But Dick and Bill are frequently confronted by fans who insist that Eleanor is the wife of one or the other. They demand to see her on the grounds that they are schoolgirl chums.

POWELL MIXUP!

When Barbara Learned LOVE DOESN'T LAST!

Barbara and Bob Taylor tour the Hollywood nightspots. Formerly a semi-recluse, Barbara Stanwyck has now become a gay social gad-about

Being a fighter, Barbara Stanwyck struggled to preserve her marriage—defeated, she found a strange new happiness

By Don Marvin

THERE is no more colorful story in the annals of Hollywood than that of Barbara Stanwyck. Few scenarios can equal her life story for stark, poignant drama—the story of an orphan who fought for an education, fought for success, achieved both, met and married the man she loved, fought to make that marriage a thing of lasting beauty, fought to make her career in pictures last, lost both fights and then picked up the loose threads of her life and knotted them together. She still goes on fighting with no other comment than, "I'm not being gallant. I never was!"

My first meeting with Barbara and Frank Fay occurred shortly after her arrival in Hollywood. A mutual friend took me to call on them. On the way to their home he cautioned me, "Don't pay too much attention to Stanwyck. Fay's pretty jealous."

I thought he meant jealous, as a husband, of another man's attentions to his wife. It wasn't that at all.

I was introduced to them and spent four or five hours with them. The greetings over, Barbara retired to a corner and listened politely, attentively to the conversation without contributing anything to it. She knew Fay—realized he wanted to shine—and was content to sit back in worshipful adoration.

It wasn't until we had left the place that I realized Barbara hadn't advanced an opinion the entire evening. Her whole conversation had been restricted to a single anecdote, related when Fay turned to her and said, "Honey, tell them what you said to those two women in the show the other night."

It seemed a couple of women behind them were talking so loudly that what was being said on the screen couldn't be heard. When she could stand it no longer, Barbara, in a few terse but well chosen phrases requested them to keep quiet. I wish I could recall her exact words. I can't. But I remember the gist of them, and the incident is as characteristic of her as anything anyone could tell. Outspoken, forthright.

Our next meeting occurred a few years later in the large house they had purchased in Brentwood and which they were remodeling continually. At the moment every bit of plaster in the place was being ripped out and black walnut paneling installed in its stead.

We sat in the reception hall—the only room in the place, apparently, that wasn't torn up. The floor was tile and the walls dark, gleaming walnut. We sat on stiff chairs facing each other across a refectory table. Out- [Continued on page 65]

From EXTRA GIRL

By Grace Mack

The first honeymoon snapshot taken of Norma and Irving Thalberg after their marriage in 1927

FOREWORD: Last month's chapter told of the collapse of the family business, after which Norma sold her piano to obtain funds to go to New York. Ziegfeld told her she had nothing to offer the theatrical world but, undefeated, she secured "extra" work in early-day films. Unable to support herself in that way, she returned, sad and disheartened, to the city where she was born . . .

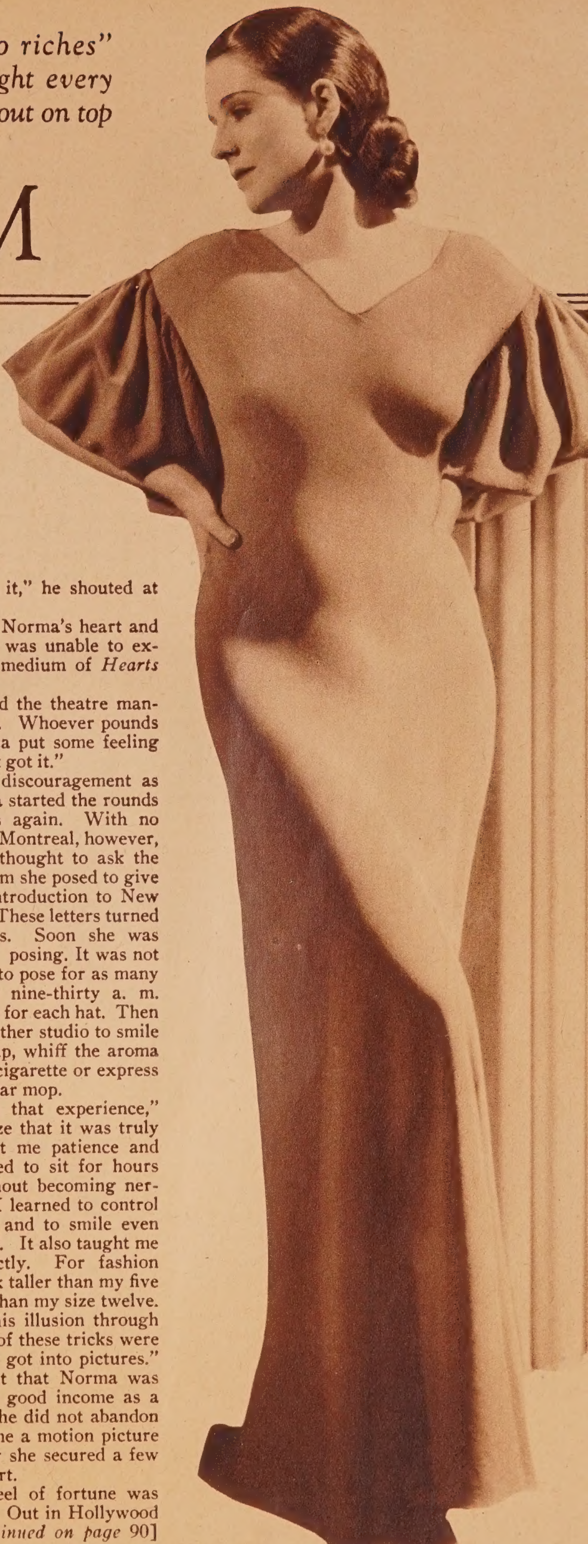
"The wheel of fortune spins!
Round and round it goes . . .
and where it will stop, nobody knows."

Several years ago, before the advent of daughter Katharine, the Thalbergs with Irving, Jr., holidayed abroad to recoup the health of hard-working producer Irving, Sr.

Now at the zenith of her long and happy career, Norma brings to the screen tragic, young Juliet in the much-played tragedy, Romeo and Juliet

to STARDOM

Concluding a real "rags to riches" story about a girl who fought every discouragement and came out on top



After doing moderately well as a leading woman, Norma's popularity skyrocketed when she suddenly switched to ultra modern, sexy rôles in such pictures as The Divorcée and Let Us Be Gay

WHEN Norma Shearer returned to her home in Montreal, after her initial bout with Lady Luck, she was convinced that the wheel of fortune, so far as she was concerned, had definitely gone into reverse. To be sure she had a job, posing for a commercial photographer, and that in itself was something to be grateful for; but when you've aimed at a peak it's tough to have to compromise on a little insignificant knoll. And then . . . one day Norma received a telegram which completely changed the complexion of things. It was from an agent in New York asking her to return immediately and saying that he had a contract for her.

Convinced that her number was up at last, Norma and her mother rushed back to Broadway. This time there would be no pounding of pavements looking for work; no cooking breakfast over a tin of Sterno; no sleeping in a bed that shook and shimmied each time an elevated train roared by. No, indeed. This time things would be different. Norma had a contract!

They secured a room at a good hotel and Norma phoned the agent to tell him that she had arrived and was ready to begin work.

"I've got some bad news for you," he said. "That contract I wired you about fell through."

"Fell through?" gasped Norma.

"Yeah—just one of those things. At the last minute they decided on another girl. But don't worry. Something else will turn up in a day or two."

Norma's bubbling hopes went as dead as uncorked champagne. Being a practical person, however, she didn't waste time in regret. Instead she went right into action. First, she moved into a cheaper room. Then she started looking for a job. She had heard that a little motion picture theater on Eighth Avenue needed a pianist. She hurried over there to see the manager.

"I gotta high class audience," he told her, "so I want high class music."

The young lady from Montreal assured him that she could furnish it and seating herself at the piano she started to prove it. The manager listened to a few bars and then said disgustedly: "That won't do. I want something classic—like Hearts and Flowers."

Norma swung into Hearts and Flowers.

"Put some sobs in it," he shouted at her.

But the sob was in Norma's heart and try as she would she was unable to express it through the medium of Hearts and Flowers.

"Sorry, sister," said the theatre manager. "You won't do. Whoever pounds these ivories has gotta put some feeling into it. You just ain't got it."

Camouflaging her discouragement as best she could, Norma started the rounds of the agents' offices again. With no luck. Before leaving Montreal, however, she had had the forethought to ask the photographer for whom she posed to give her some letters of introduction to New York photographers. These letters turned out to be life savers. Soon she was working steadily . . . posing. It was not at all unusual for her to pose for as many as forty hats before nine-thirty a. m. With a different smile for each hat. Then she would dash to another studio to smile at a cake of toilet soap, whiff the aroma of a certain brand of cigarette or express delight over an O'Cedar mop.

"Looking back on that experience," says Norma, "I realize that it was truly invaluable. It taught me patience and self-control. I learned to sit for hours before a camera without becoming nervous or distraught. I learned to control my facial expression and to smile even when I was dead tired. It also taught me how to stand correctly. For fashion modeling I had to look taller than my five feet three and larger than my size twelve. I learned to create this illusion through correct posture. All of these tricks were helpful when I finally got into pictures."

In spite of the fact that Norma was now earning a fairly good income as a photographic model she did not abandon her ambition to become a motion picture actress. Occasionally she secured a few days' work in a bit part.

Meantime, the wheel of fortune was slowly spinning . . . Out in Hollywood a young chap [Continued on page 90]

DAISY Tells ALL!

Joan Blondell's secretary gives us some gay confidences about his unpredictable employer.—Dick

Having traveled 'round the globe in her early theatrical days, Joan now is entirely happy in a devoted mother rôle opposite son Norman Scott Barnes, who receives a full measure of maternal attention

By Maurice Leo

DO ANY of you remember . . . or are all of you too young except me . . . how the world was brightened one day several years ago, when Clara Bow, having come to the parting of ways with her then secretary and more or less boon companion, one Daisy DeVoe, brought that young lady to trial? That young lady, being the species of Daisy that would tell, afforded the newspapers of the land the opportunity of coming out with the screaming headline: "DAISY TELLS ALL!"

Daisy, having been Clara's secretary and probably closer to her than anyone else at the moment, could tell plenty . . . and did. Well, all you who are reading, that's me! Daisy is a girl after my own heart! And being Joan Blondell's secretary, and having been afforded this opportunity to talk, I am here, like Daisy, to TELL ALL! The dirt is going to fly!

The only difference between Daisy and me is this: Daisy was brought to trial and THEN talked. I am going to talk and will then probably be brought to trial. Watch for photographs of me on the stand! Women have got away with murder by just crossing their legs and dangling them before pop-eyed jurors. There are women on the jury now, and I'm no fool. I shall wear a conservative dark suit of knickerbockers and dangle my own legs before the jurors . . . the feminine section. If I go to jail I'll at least know that I can't depend upon my legs any more, and keep my mouth shut.

Before I'm locked in that cell, though, I want to tell Dick, as guest editor of this month's issue, how much I appreciate his letting me do this article on Joan, and I hope the day arrives when I can return the favor. I could really crucify him!

I have been Joan's secretary for two years now. I have been her intimate friend for seven years. Since being her secretary I have [Continued on page 72]

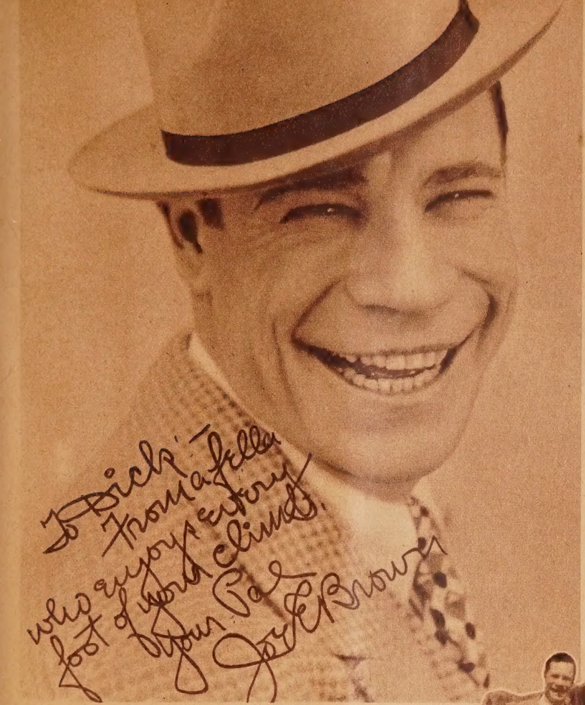
JUST a KID AGAIN!

The boy on the flying trapeze finds that fun begins at forty

By James Reid



Joe's comradery with sons Joe, Jr. and Don is a delight to all who know them. You'll see Joe next in hilarious Sons O' Guns

Joe, who never had a childhood for play, enjoys the circus as much as daughter Mary Elizabeth now that he's out of it!

THE next time you pick out the wife of a movie star to envy, give a thought to Mrs. Joe E. Brown.

Maybe she isn't married to the handsomest man in Hollywood. Or the best-tailored. Or the most romantic.

But she has a husband who is one of the top ten favorites of the screen today—one of the most entertaining men alive. She never has to worry about budgets or bills or bank balances. She will never want for anything that money can buy. She lives in a beautiful home. She has a fine family.

More than that. She has, for a husband, the one man in Hollywood who never will grow old—even if he lives to be a hundred. A man that other men, in every walk of life, could envy.

Success makes most men cynics—because by the time they have won it, they are too weary to get any zest out of life. But success has made Joe E. Brown a boy again. And this time he is enjoying the sensation.

When he was nine years old, he started earning his own living. With beatings for inspiration, he was broken in as the youngest member of an acrobatic troupe called "The Five Marvelous Ashetons." From then on, he had to forego the enthusiasms of boyhood—until he was grown up and had boys of his own.

It's a wonder that the youngest of "The Five Marvelous Ashetons" ever grew up, ever held fast to the idea that life might be worth the living. It's a triple wonder that he grew up with a sense of humor and an ability to make the whole world laugh.

When other boys were playing baseball on empty lots in spring sunshine, Joe was daring death inside a circus tent, earning a few dollars a week with trapeze stunts high above the sawdust. He never knew what it was like to play football; all he could do was to guess what it was like. He never could go off to some secret swimming hole with a bunch of boys whose bathing suits were their birthday suits. He never had a bicycle to ride around to the homes of cronies. He had no cronies.

He envied other boys, with an aching envy. He sensed what he was missing. And he made up his mind that some day, somewhere, somehow, he would play baseball—he would find out what football was all about—he would become an expert swimmer—he would ride a bicycle—and he would have friends, friends who also thrilled to sports.

He made up his mind that, if ever he had any boys of his own, they would have every chance in the world to be just boys, to play with other boys, to get a "kick" out of life . . . to have some [Continued on page 85]

CLUES to the TITLES

1. Clark Gable was a clergyman in this film.

2. The title suggests the Glorifier of American girls.

3. Marion was a spy with an unlucky number.

4. This one was a stage hit many years ago—in which Laurette Taylor gained fame.

5. Remember the hotel chambermaid who rose to fame?

NEW CONTEST DAVIES Fans

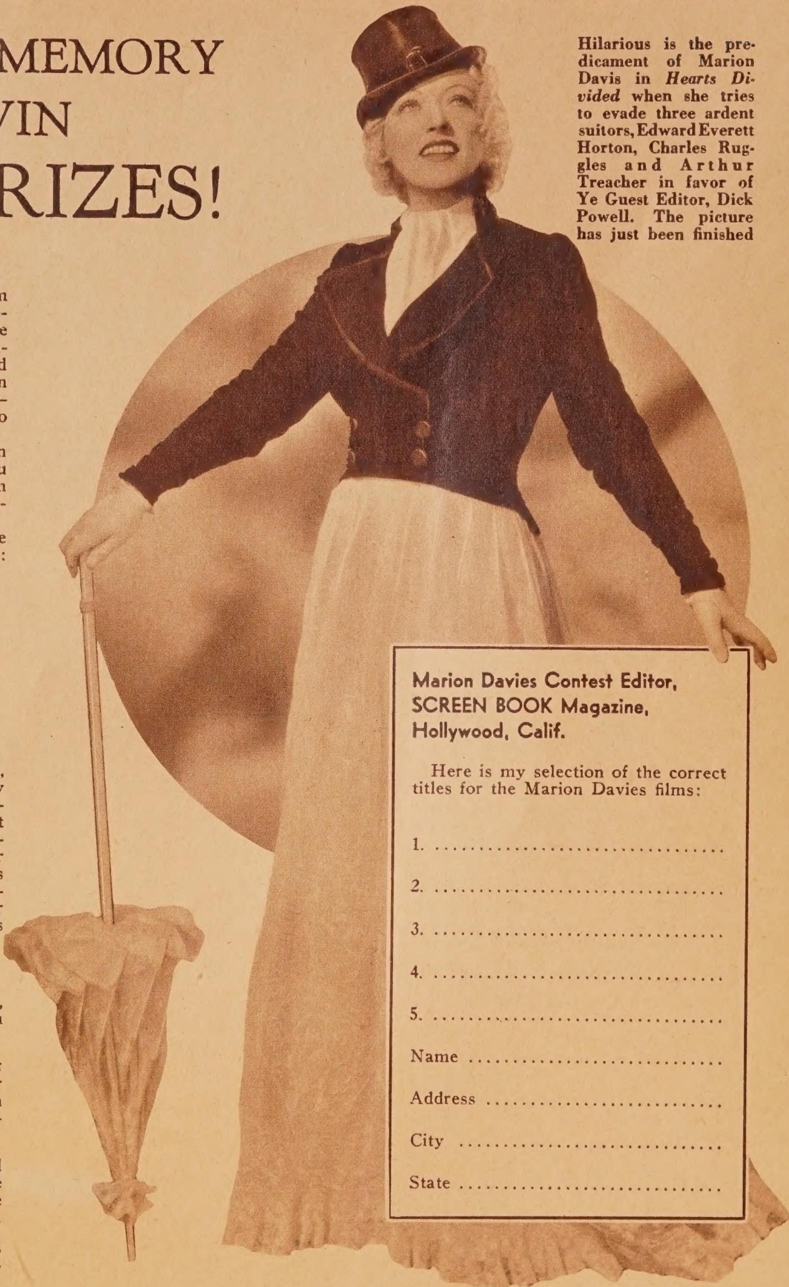
TEST YOUR MEMORY AND WIN CASH PRIZES!



Hilarious is the predicament of Marion Davis in Hearts Divided when she tries to evade three ardent suitors, Edward Everett Horton, Charles Ruggles and Arthur Treacher in favor of Ye Guest Editor, Dick Powell. The picture has just been finished

CAN you name the titles of the film productions from which the photographs on the opposite page are taken? To the winners in this easy memory game go $200.00 in cash prizes—and the checks will be sent immediately upon announcement of the winners' names—so you may have a nice bit of extra cash to spend on that summer vacation.

Just jot down the titles of these films on the coupon at the right—that's all you need to do!—and mail it to the Marion Davies Contest Editor, SCREEN BOOK Magazine, Hollywood, Calif.

Here are the awards which will be made for the neatest and most correct answers:

1st Prize	$50.00
2nd prize	$25.00
3rd prize	$15.00
4th prize	$10.00
5th prize	$10.00
6th prize	$10.00
7th through 12th prizes, each	$ 5.00
13th through 37th prizes, each	$ 2.00

It's the simplest contest you ever tried, for these film successes are comparatively recent showings. One of the pictures starring popular Marion Davies, who first won recognition as a dancer in the Follies under Florenz Ziegfeld, played your theatre just last winter. It was Marion's latest exhibition of her talents as a comedienne—that is, the latest but for Hearts Divided, a comedy-drama which has just been completed.

RULES

1. Contest closes midnight, June 25, 1936. Entries postmarked later than that time cannot be accepted.
2. Winners will be announced in SCREEN BOOK in the earliest possible issue after entries have been judged, and cash awards presented immediately thereafter.
3. The editorial staff of SCREEN BOOK will be judges and their decision will be final. Awards will be made for the neatest and most correct submissions.
4. Mail your entry to Marion Davies Contest Editor, SCREEN BOOK Magazine, Hollywood, Calif.

INTIMATE luxuries!

Magnificent obsessions of the boudoir! The fondest yearnings of a woman's heart are the dainty, lace-bedecked trivia, once called "unmentionables," but now flaunted as the very essence of the smart woman's wardrobe.

A tempered modesty now brings the loveliest things a woman wears if not into broad daylight at least into the sphere of popular discussion with the result that designers have exercised their talents to advantage on the delicate intimacies of feminine dress.

The petticoat, once the duenna in the lovely lady's ensemble, and until recently no more than an interesting historical theme, is now revived with a touch of sentimentality in the saucy modern age. The petticoat theme is particularly popular this year and its memory is done active justice for petticoats are worn under everything from sports clothes to formal evening wear. They are the same petticoats—some made of chiffon, some of taffeta with rows and rows of ruffles and lace.

Another old favorite has returned to the fold—the camisole! Instead of being made in cotton materials it is now tucked and shirred beruffled and beribboned, and matches, as a rule, the lovely petticoat.

Nightgowns for summer are sheer in either plain or flowered materials. Many are made so like formal evening gowns that it is difficult for any one but a connoisseur to appreciate the subtle difference. Trains are even a part of the bedroom splendor and mules resemble evening slippers.

Russian cossack influence is seen in these pink satin lounging pajamas with belted tunic and frog closing which grace the wardrobe of the lovely English star

HOW MYRNA LOY CHEATED DEATH!

By Virginia Lane

When Myrna Loy was only eight she discovered that it isn't always best to follow the dictates of reason

"WHEN you come right down to it, I owe every important step I've taken to a hunch. It even saved my life," said Myrna Loy.

It was a sweeping statement from the most sincere sophisticate in Hollywood. Somehow, you always vision Myrna as managing her life coolly and capably—through reason. She doesn't. She follows her instinct, that overpowering urge to do something without reason! And without fail it leads her straight to success . . . or safety. . . .

Look at what happened on that spring morning not so very long ago. Myrna wanted to get to New York in a hurry. Thirteen hours by air. . . . Very good, she'd take an express 'plane. Two of them leave the Los Angeles airport daily. The company held a record of more than twenty thousand hours in the air without accident. There was no occasion to fear. None at all. Yet when Myrna looked at her ticket she had a violent urge to tear it up. "Look here, you're being silly," she told herself sharply. But it didn't work. Her hunches are too authoritative to be put aside easily. She drove to Bullock's Wilshire and bought herself a brand new hat she didn't need in order to change her mind. That didn't work either. "I'm being perfectly absurd," she apologized to the world in general as she headed back to the airport to get the ticket transferred to the next day.

Absurd?

Headlines blazed the news across the nation the following morning. AIRPLANE CRASH KILLS FIVE!

A flaming wreck ploughed into the earth a few miles east of Kansas City. Charred bodies being lifted from that mass of twisted steel. . . . And Myrna—only a hunch standing between her and death. . . .

She flew over that same territory the next day. Without a qualm of personal fear. And, coincidentally, her shift in plans saved the life of another person. A young newspaperman who had never met her but was something of a fan, cancelled his reservations on the fated plane when he learned she had cancelled her's. And so he, too, escaped.

"Instinct ought to be cultivated," said Myrna. "Of course some people call it good old feminine intuition. Personally I call it just a plain 'hunch'—and I'll never forget how it came to my rescue a short time after I left this studio the last time!" Her gesture indicated the broad acres of Fox Hills all around us. After an absence of more than five years she has returned to the lot, now Twentieth Century-Fox, to make To Mary, With Love opposite Warner Baxter. This time she is a romantic star, a leading box office attraction. Then she was still the little half-caste, the Oriental who slew and slaved and fought for love against the Right Woman. And she was deathly sick of it.

"Talking pictures were definitely in—and I wasn't sure but what I was definitely out. At least, so far as my chances of a 'straight' role were concerned. I had made up my mind to try my luck on Broadway, in fact my trunks were already packed to go east. I was clearing out my desk when I came across the name and [Continued on page 81]

Don't let Adolescent Pimples spoil YOUR vacation plans

A BROKEN-OUT skin is no help to any girl or boy who longs to be popular and have good times. But unfortunately, many young people are victims of this trouble.

After the start of adolescence—from about 13 to 25, or even longer—important glands develop and final growth takes place. This causes disturbances throughout the entire body. The skin gets oversensitive. Harmful waste poisons in the blood irritate this sensitive skin. Pimples break out.

Thousands have found Fleischmann's Yeast a great help in getting rid of adolescent pimples. It clears these skin irritants out of the blood. Then, the pimples go!

Eat 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast regularly—one cake about ½ hour before meals—plain, or in a little water—until your skin is entirely clear. Start today.

MILK
makes four star beauty news

By DORIS DUMONT

This new creme made from milk certainly is getting the big rave from Hollywood's beauty experts and the stars as well. In the dressing rooms and make-up departments at every studio the praises are the same. Nothing I could write here would convey one-tenth part of their enthusiasm so I'm going to publish answers to the four questions most frequently asked by my readers about the new Creme of Milk. Now for the questions:

"Is Creme of Milk really made from milk?" I quote from a letter written to the makers of Creme of Milk by California's largest producers and sellers of dairy products, Golden State Co. Ltd. They say:

"The concentrated oils of pure, fresh, wholesome dairy milk, or dairy cream, furnished by us for inclusion in Creme of Milk, measure up to the highest quality standards of this Company for purity, freshness and wholesomeness."

"Does it nourish the skin?"

Because it is made from milk, Creme of Milk nourishes the skin in a very special way of its own. No other creme or beauty preparation of any kind has ever been able to duplicate the beneficial effects of milk oils on the skin.

Mrs. Pat O'Brien, charming wife of the famous Warner Bros. he-man star, says: "Creme of Milk is even more important to the society woman than to the screen star."

Marion Talley, Metropolitan Opera Star, now being featured on the NBC Network, says: "I've never used anything that made my skin feel and look as fresh and youthful."

"How do you use Creme of Milk?"

Creme of Milk is much quicker and simpler to use than an ordinary face creme. The moment you spread it on you can fairly feel your skin drinking it in. Leave it but a minute or two, then wipe it off easily.

"Does it penetrate the skin?"

Creme of Milk penetrates the pores and skin tissues more deeply than any other creme known because milk oils are far more delicate and finely textured than the wax, mineral oil, lanolin and similar substances of which other cremes are made. For this reason it cleanses more thoroughly and more quickly.

Creme of Milk shipments were rushed to more than 5,000 stores last month and in California alone more than 100,000 women are already using it. Stores in your community may not have received their shipments yet, so I suggest you write me personally enclosing fifty cents for a regular size jar or one dollar for a large size jar of this thrilling new creme. Address your letter to Doris Dumont, Hollywood, Calif.

JOAN MARSH IN "DANCING FEET" REPUBLIC PRODUCTION

Creme of Milk has new nourishing and cleansing qualities found in no other creme

Because it is made from milk, Duart's new beauty discovery, Creme of Milk, has special qualities that clear the skin with amazing speed. Hollywood stars and their cosmetic experts say that the Creme of Milk formula for extracting the vital beautifying oils from pure dairy milk is the greatest cosmetic discovery in twenty years.

If your complexion is not as soft, smooth and youthful as it should be—do as all Hollywood and thousands of women everywhere are doing now—change from your present cleansing methods and start using the thrilling new type creme—Creme of Milk.

See improvements first day

You will know Creme of Milk is different the very moment you spread it on . . . you can fairly feel your skin drinking it in. Improvements that you can see and feel come quickly. Dryness, coarse pores, blackheads and other marks of a poor complexion go fast when the genuine milk-oils penetrate deep into the tissues, cleanse away all dirt and build up the supply of the natural youth-giving oils that feed and nourish the skin.

No other creme, lotion or soap can duplicate the amazing effects of milk on the skin and yet Creme of Milk costs no more than the most ordinary face cremes. Try it for 10c or order a regular size jar for 50c, large economy size $1. On sale at your favorite cosmetic counter.

DUART'S
creme of milk

LENORE SABINE, President of the Motion Picture Hairstylists Guild and Head Hairstylist of Paramount Studios says: "Creme of Milk is truly a NEW TYPE of creme. There is nothing else like it—every star I know is using it to protect the beauty of her skin."

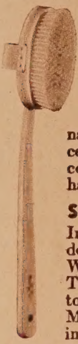
ONLY BEAUTY CREME IN THE WORLD MADE FROM MILK



STAY
and Beautiful

Increase your appeal! Give yourself beauty that is exciting, that stirs the emotions of others.

Putting this or that on the outside will not bring glowing cheeks, lustrous hair, smooth firm throat, lovely back. "Brushing does it!" say famous beauty editors.

Brushing urges the tiny blood vessels to deliver more blood to the scalp and skin. Cleanses pores completely. Strengthens sagging tissues.

But it is important to use the right brushes. Brushes with elastic, penetrating bristles which really work and last. The Pro-phy-lac-tic name is your guarantee of bristle excellence. Look for it on hair brushes, complexion brushes, bath brushes, hand and nail brushes.

make sure it blends with their complexions.

"You'll need to 'step up' your make-up," Max Factor told her—and did your powder-puff chaser listen in with both ears! "Every girl does in summer-time. You'll want to use a rouge with more sun-glow in it, a brighter lipstick. Don't use the shades you've been using in winter. Advance a point or two above your customary colors. That's what I mean by 'stepping up your make-up.'

"For blondes, a flame rouge and flame lipstick is best in summer.

"For brunettes, a blondeen rouge and vermilion lipstick.

"And, of course, there's a summertan powder for both."

A few minutes later Wendy and I saw his point illustrated to perfection! A blond-ish woman of about thirty-five who was deeply tanned came in. But somehow her face looked old and heavy. Tan can be a regular bogieman, you know, if you don't watch out—and this lady hadn't. She was using, Max Factor told us, too dark a rouge. She had let the natural oils of the skin dry up.

I get pretty excited every time I think about what happened! About that woman's smile when she came out of the consulting room . . . and about the way she looked . . . It was as if some kind-hearted soul had lopped ten years off her age. The lines on her face had disappeared (foundation cream, my dears!) Her cheeks and lips were glow-y and soft as if the sun had drawn out just the right color (that flame rouge and lipstick!) And she had a cool, golden look (summertan powder, of course!) that made you fairly gnash your teeth with envy.

"That," said Wendy, "is a modern miracle."

"Oh no!" Factor assured her, "just a modern make-up!"

Then they discussed something that's had me guessing for years—the summer Freckle Problem. Wendy, of course, gets about one or two and even Myrna Loy and Katy Hepburn—our most freckled cinemalites—have just a tracery.

Now there is available a bleach mask so mild and delicate you could use it on a baby's skin. You use the bleach mask once or twice a week at night before going to bed.

And if you want a recipe for summer comfort—here it is! It comes in liquid form. Spread it on your arms, legs and throat with long, smooth strokes until it has "disappeared" into the skin . . . and your difficulty with sunburn is over! It's a make-up blender which you can get in tones to blend with your foundation cream and powder, and it performs a double duty you'll love. It protects you from too ardent sun rays by day—and makes your skin glorious by night.

"That is five items so far to make a summer anywhere a success!" Wendy said. There were more to be added, of course. Here is a complete list of things that ought to make any girl a vacation-time beauty!

Summer make-up—rouge, powder, lipstick.
Bleach mask
Make-up blender
Powder brush
Eyelash make-up
Eye shadow
Cleansing cream
Skin and tissue cream—cleansing tissues
Foundation cream
Skin freshener
Astringent, and honeysuckle cream (if you have oily skin)
Talcum
Hairbrush
Shampoo
Curling irons or wave setting combs
Manicure set (take at least two shades of polish; rose to wear with pastel frocks and deep red for sports)
Tooth brushes and pastes
Soap
Eau de cologne
Toilet water (perfume is usually too heavy for summer use)

With special make-up kits to be had for the asking, the packing problem is simplified a lot.

Incidentally, if you've been wondering how the stars keep that fresh-as-a-daisy look after four nights on a sleeper, take a tip from Wendy. She brushes her hair about five times a day—it whiles away the time to the best possible advantage! Not only does it keep the soot out but it allows the air to get to the roots of the hair frequently, which is the finest thing you can do for your hair in hot weather.

And while she's brushing, she puts lots of cleansing cream on her face and allows it to remain there until she has finished. A bit of two-time work that does an excellent job!

If you're troubled with excess skin oiliness—and that's a pretty general complaint about this time of year—Max Factor advises using a cool astringent. And there's a honeysuckle cream you can apply in place of your foundation cream that will give you a lovely fresh feeling and a subtle fragrance that is absolutely alluring!

Some girls have a great deal of trouble with their nails in summer too. Nails are of a horny nature, you know, and if you do much swimming especially, they may split and peel or get terribly brittle. The thing to do is use a lubricant on them—they need it. Work it into the nail surface and the base of the nails with the cushion of the finger each night just before you jump into bed. And watch your nails grow long and strong.

If your diversions include tennis, driving in the hot sun, diving—any outdoor sport—you should take precautions to keep your eyes bright and clear. A good eye wash applied after exposure will remove irritation. Warm compresses applied while you are, preferably, resting in a darkened room, will help you to acquire a "come hither" glance.

It's so easy to make this vacation a real high spot of the year!

NO ONE at Paramount is complaining because a flock of pigeons strut almost underfoot begging for food. Squab, you know, is very nice. Fifty pigeons were purchased for use in The Devil Is a Woman, the Marlene Dietrich film, and when the picture was finished they couldn't be persuaded to leave.

LUCILLE and Jimmy Gleason have received a number of invitations to speak to various organizations in towns up and down the Pacific Coast—all because in a recent radio broadcast Lucille hinted that she and Jimmy thought they'd buy an auto trailer and go on a lecture tour. When a friend asked Lucille what the subject of her addresses might be, she looked her questioner square in the eye and replied, "How to stay happily married for thirty years to a man with whom you have nothing in common."

THOSE two famous cut-ups, Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht are getting ready to start another film. They have had a number of copies made of the statuette awarded them by the Motion Picture Academy for their script on The Scoundrel and when The Monster actors begin work they'll find themselves given statuettes for "best performance of the afternoon," "best prank of the day," "the best line-forgetter," "the latest lunch stayer," etc.

OUT in Hollywood when they remark "Little Man You've Had a Busy day" they may mean Carl Laemmle, Jr., Louis Sobol, Sid Skolsky, Norman Krasna, Eddie Buzzell or a dozen other studio executives who range in height from five feet down.

And they are the Little Big Men of filmland.

A HOLLYWOOD columnist has repeatedly written about and told over the air of a telephone receiver in the apartment of Mae West which is "studded" with emeralds and diamonds." To get things right, the telephone receiver is an ordinary French white enameled listener and no emerald or diamond has ever scratched its surface.

AN OUTSTANDING feminine screen star received a most unusual letter recently. It was from the mother of two children and was postmarked from a town near Chicago.

The children, the letter said, were 7 and 9 years of age respectively. The mother wanted to bring them to Hollywood, to have the screen star adopt them and place them in pictures.

The adoption period would be for five years only and at the expiration of that period the two little girls were to be returned, legally, to the mother.

MARY BRIAN may get married some day but when and if she does it won't be to Cary Grant or any other actor. Just write that down in your memory book and refer to it later—say next year sometime.

NO OTHER TOOTHPASTE EVER MADE MY TEETH SO BRIGHT AND CLEAN!

Most Bad Breath Begins with the Teeth!

LEADING dental authorities are agreed: "Most bad breath is caused by improperly cleaned teeth!"

Decaying food deposits, in hidden crevices between the teeth, are by far the most common source of this social handicap—and of much tooth decay. Colgate Dental Cream has a special penetrating foam which thoroughly cleans each hidden crevice; and a soft grit-free ingredient which safely polishes the enamel . . . makes smiles sparkle.

So brush your teeth, gums, tongue with Colgate's at least twice daily. If you are not entirely satisfied, send the empty tube to COLGATE, Jersey City, N. J. We will refund TWICE what you paid.

BEAUTY FOR TENNIS OR TEA

By Janet Lynn

Carole Lombard is always what-the-well-groomed-girl-should-be, no matter what the rush of activities. You can have that fit-for-the-occasion look, too

Beauty Service

IF YOU could see Carole Lombard dancing in Hollywood night spots, all trailing chiffon and glamour, you'd find it hard to believe that a few hours before she was the laughing tom-boy of the tennis courts, leaping about in childish tennis shorts, with her blonde hair flying and her pretty nose turned up to a burning sun. . . .

For, gorgeously groomed and gowned as she always is at social functions, Carole still adores a swift game of tennis and rarely lets a day go by without indulging in this figure-preserving form of exercise.

Carole is a good object lesson for all of us, now that Summer is here. She proves that a gal can throw herself enthusiastically into the Outdoor Life, and still be a camellia-skinned Circe in chiffon, when darkness falls . . . And that should be every girl's goal.

It won't do you much good to decide on a program in the last days of August, however. You must begin now to prevent summer sun, daily dips in ocean or lake and increased humidity from coarsening or freckling your skin, drying and bleaching your hair or leaving you limp and messy looking . . . The sort of preventive measure you should use to keep your skin smooth and even in color will depend on your particular type of skin and your natural coloring, of course. If you have discovered, by experience, that your skin tans easily, and that a golden tan is very becoming to you, go ahead and tan. But if your skin is sensitive, and only turns beet-like or freckled under the sun's rays, don't try to tan.

There are several fine oils to induce tanning and several equally fine creams and lotions to prevent it. There are also some convenient preparations that have a dual personality. Applied sparingly, they will permit your skin to tan evenly and deeply and, used lavishly, they will keep it delicately pink and white.

Some common sense in the matter of wearing a hat when you are out in the sun for prolonged periods and a weekly hot oil treatment will keep your hair from becoming brittle, straw-like and streaked this summer; there are also pomades on the market that protect the hair from the caustic effects of salt water and fierce sun. They don't make the hair look greasy, either.

Summer has other beauty perils than freckles and streaked hair. The heat steps up the flow of perspiration and the probability of offending. Brief or diaphanous summer clothes make the removal of a superfluous hair imperative and, sadly enough, the heat of the sun hastens the growth of this unwanted hair . . . But these aren't really problems anymore, for scientists have given us quick, effective preparations that combat the "way of all flesh" in such aspects as excessive perspiration and superfluous hair.

Witness the two Odorono products, Regular and Instant. With their convenient little sponge applicators, they provide a simple way of preventing underarm perspiration and, of course, eliminating that spectre, odor. Regular Odorono is designed for those who perspire heavily and it should be applied about twice a week, with the strictest adherence to rules . . . Instant Odorono, a milder solution, is for those whose skins are extra-

Even Billy Chase—her childhood sweetheart acted strangely.

Finally, in the presence of Billy, the doctor told her the truth.

"You will never sing again, my dear," he said and left her.

Never sing!

She couldn't have heard correctly! It couldn't be true! It was like telling a man that his eyes would never again look upon the sun or . . .

No, she couldn't believe it. It would be stripping her of everything in life—

She felt Billy's strong hand gripping her shoulder, imparting courage. She did not look at him. She did not dare. She must know for herself if this thing were true.

SHE closed her eyes, grasped at his hand and clung to it. Then she opened her mouth to sing. But no sound came. She tried again—nothing but a miserable squawk. Her heart seemed to stop beating. Then after a moment—which seemed an eternity of torture, words like points of fire, etched themselves upon her consciousness . . . It was TRUE—true! She would never sing again! She was finished. Her life lay in ashes . . . burnt out, even before it had begun.

For days she went about as one in a daze, hardly speaking, barely conscious that she was alive. She felt that her heart was broken.

Everything which she had planned had been washed away as completely as a wave washes away the drawing of two lovers from the sand. Everything—except the feeling of Billy's grasp on her shoulder and the tender comfort of his words. Yet her heart ached for self-expression. Exquisite melodies ran through her mind to which she could give no utterance. She felt stifled—caged—beaten!

Then she realized that for the sake of her parents, who she knew were suffering deeply for her, she had to pull herself together and put on a brave front. So again she forced herself to smile. And that smile was truly a veil before the face of tears.

To cheer her, one night her parents invited a few of her closest friends—high school boys and girls—in to a little party.

It was to be a surprise for her.

As the evening wore on, one of the boys seated himself at the piano and started playing popular music. Frances listened, her heart bursting with a desire to sing.

Then suddenly, almost in spite of herself, she forgot herself and tried. And this time sounds came forth. Strange sounds, utterly new. Deep contralto tones, such as she had never heard before. Encouraged by that first sound she kept on, then flinging restraint aside she sang gayly, wildly, happily. Joy such as she had never known filled her. Her voice had come back. No. That was not true. Her voice had not come back. The high soprano was gone, never to return, but in its place was a new voice, a deep, rich, vibrant contralto.

She went wild with delight. She flung her arms about her parents (she didn't reveal this, but it is safe to surmise, about Billy Chase too!) danced, laughed and sang. Sang until her mother stopped her, fearful of over-exertion.

Gertrude Michael hasn't much time for sporting it in the water these days for two smash hits in quick succession, in 'Till We Meet Again and Forgotten Faces, have created a boom market on her services. She wears a combination cellophane and wool swim suit in the above photograph

The high school kids whooped and howled with excitement. THIS was something. Sure, they had liked her voice well enough before, but they didn't care so much for the semi-classical kind of stuff she sang. But BOY . . . THIS was singing! Right up their alley!

And—as it proved—right up the alley of the entire world.

From this time on, her mother who always played for her when she sang, started anew to work, a little at a time, half-fearful that this new marvel might disappear as spontaneously as it had come. But, before long, it was apparent that the new voice had come to stay.

IT WAS shortly after this that she met de Witt and through him, Rudy Vallée, who was on tour with his orchestra. Charmed with the girl's voice he promised to send for her when the tour was ended. So she waited. Waited, day after day, week after week, watching for each mail, her heart skipping a beat every time the telephone or the door-bell rang, until it seemed that once more she had built upon the sands.

Then—out of a clear sky the summons from Rudy came and she went to New York. He tried to get her on NBC but they wouldn't take her. So he persuaded WOB to give her a year's contract. About this time his mother died, his matrimonial troubles began and he had no time to look after his young protégée, so he turned her over to his manager, Ken Dolan, who has done a mighty good job of managing her, ever since.

One night at a party given for Cole Porter, Frances sang Night And Day which Porter had written. Walter Wanger heard her, instantly saw the girl's screen possibilities and signed a long term contract with her.

However, he planned to make only a few pictures a year, so he sold her contract to M-G-M, with the provision that he had the rights to her services for two pictures annually.

There is nothing of the "actress" about Frances. Looking at her, a frail slip of a girl—shy, simple, cute—weighing only 99 pounds, one wonders how so powerful, enormous and resonant a voice can possibly come from so slight a body. To be proportionate with her voice she ought to resemble Kate Smith. Breeding and background instilled into her a reluctance to talk about herself, but her simplicity is part of her charm.

She says it is a lot of fun making pictures, more interesting than radio, and she is getting a real thrill out of the work. But her greatest thrill is knowing that she can make up to her father and mother for the licking they took in that Florida toboggan, and she is working now toward putting aside enough to build them a beautiful home back in their beloved state.

At this writing, she is completing work in Palm Springs, in which, by the way, she receives stellar billing. Meanwhile, she keeps up her radio work as the co-star of Dick Powell, ye Guest Editor of SCREEN BOOK, in the now famous "Hollywood Hotel" Hour.

Frances, today, is on the way to the—heights—successful in every effort. But no "Open Sesame" to stardom can ever make her forget the horror of those days, a few years ago, when she saw all of her dreams collapse.

And no one, knowing her story can wonder that there are "tears behind the smile" of Frances Langford.

MARY LOU, I GUESS YOU WERE JUST BORN WITH A NICE COMPLEXION !
NOTHING OF THE SORT. I'VE HELPED MY SKIN WONDERFULLY BY USING LIFEBUOY

DISCOURAGED about your complexion? Change to Lifebuoy. Its deep-cleansing lather gently rids pores of impurities, freshens the skin. And "patch" tests on the skins of hundreds of women show Lifebuoy is more than 20 per cent milder than many so-called "beauty soaps." No wonder women say Lifebuoy is so kind to their complexions—keeps it so beautifully smooth and clear.

Summer freedom from "B. O."

Summer heat makes "B. O." (body odor) even more objectionable. Be doubly careful! No one can afford to take chances with "B. O." The merest hint of it is instantly noticeable. To keep fresh, safe all summer long, bathe regularly with Lifebuoy. Its searching, purifying lather deodorizes the pores, stops "B. O." Its own clean scent vanishes as you rinse. Another thing—Lifebuoy gives loads of rich lather, even in the hardest water.

GRAY HAIR!
The Best Remedy is Made at Home

YOU can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy, by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, makes it soft and glossy and takes years off your looks. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off. Do not be handicapped by gray hair when it is so easy to get rid of it in your own home.

REMOVE Unsightly Hair

The dainty, pleasant way to remove hair from arms, legs and face. Velvet Mitten, as easy to use as a powder puff, gently rubs away the unsightly growth. Harmless...odorless...painless. Does not encourage re-growth. Leaves skin soft and velvety smooth. If your dealer hasn't them, send one dollar for 3 Velvet Mittens . . . a full summer's supply.

You may blush with shame when you make this "Armhole Odor" Test

If you deodorize only, you will always have an unpleasant, stale "armhole odor"—Test yourself tonight by smelling your dress at the armhole

THE more fastidious you are, the more shocked you may be to realize you cannot prevent armhole odor unless your underarm is dry as well as sweet.

Tonight, when you take off your dress, smell the fabric under the arm. No matter how carefully you deodorize your underarm, you may find that your dress carries the odor of stale perspiration!

This is bound to happen if you merely deodorize. Creams and sticks cannot protect completely, because they are not made to stop perspiration. They do not keep the underarm dry, so perspiration collects on the fabric of your dress.

The next time you wear that seemingly clean dress, the warmth of your body brings out an unpleasant "armhole odor" which is imperceptible to you, but embarrassingly obvious to those around you!

Only one way to be SURE

Women who care about good grooming know there is no shortcut to underarm daintiness. They insist on the complete protection of Liquid Odorono. It keeps the underarm not only sweet, but absolutely dry. Not even a drop of moisture can collect on your dress.

Odorono is entirely safe . . . ask your doctor. It gently closes the pores in that little hollow of the underarm. Perspiration is merely diverted to less confined areas where it may evaporate freely. Women safely use millions of bottles of Odorono yearly.

Time well spent—Clothes saved

It takes a few seconds longer to use Odorono but it is well worth your while. There is no grease to get on your clothes. And expensive dresses can no longer be stained and ruined in a single wearing. You need never worry about your daintiness or your clothes again!

Odorono comes in two strengths—Regular and Instant. You need use Regular Odorono (Ruby colored) only twice a week. Instant Odorono (Colorless) is for especially sensitive skin or quick emergency use—to be used daily or every other day. Keep both kinds on hand—for night or morning use. At all toilet-goods counters.

To know utter security and poise, send for sample vials of both Odoronos and leaflet on complete underarm dryness offered below.

Born to Fight
★★½

AN APPEALING story dealing almost entirely with boxers and their camp followers, adapted from Peter B. Kyne's fiction piece. Kane Richmond, ex-champ in hiding for hitting crooked-promoter Jack LaRue too hard, picks up Frankie Darro in a hobo jungle. He coaches and guides the little fighter toward championship, in the training camp owned and operated by pretty Frances Grant—and they are a lively trio. But the boy gets an exaggerated notion of his importance and deserts his guardian for another manager. After defeat he returns to his pals and wins the title in some exciting fight scenes and other melodramatic complications. Negro actor Snowflake, as Darro's second, prompts most of the laughs; he sings, too. Credit Jack LaRue, Sheila Manors and a small army of ring hangers-on for excellent characterizations.—Produced by Conn.

★★★½

UNUSUAL for its gay satire and gorgeous color. The story is treated in a musical comedy manner, never meant to be taken seriously. The plot has a Boston dancing master shanghaied by pirates; he escapes to California. What the story lacks in reality it more than compensates in fun—there is a laugh at every turn. Charles Collins, new to the screen, plays the dancing master with charm, and there is no questioning his dancing ability. Steffi Duna, sings well, dances beautifully. Riotously funny is Frank Morgan's rôle. Luis Alberni, Jack LaRue and Victor Varconi lend excellent support. If you like broad satire in the best manner—and in beautiful color—see it.—Produced by Pioneer-RKO.

Devil's Squadron

DEATH takes no holiday in this presentation of the hazards in the career of the fliers who test airplanes. Richard Dix is an aviator whose character is under shadow when he joins four pilots engaged to test a mysterious high-speed ship intended for sale to the Army. Misinterpretation of one of his acts brings complete disgrace and alienates the affections of Karen Morley, who comes from a flying family. But after a spectacular flight to save the girl's fiance from death, he is reinstated in her favor. Remarkable photography of several breath-taking and fatal crack-ups. It's a bit grim, but if you like aviation stuff you'll probably enjoy it.—Produced by Columbia.

TRAGEDY, full of suspense, co-starring Herbert Marshall and Gertrude Michael, both of whom handle grim, exacting rôles with supreme ability. The story, dealing with a convict's efforts to prevent his blackmailing wife from ruining their daughter's happiness, is unrelieved by comedy and will, perhaps, be judged too sordid by the average audience. But those who appreciate sincere drama will acclaim this production as one of the best of the year. Certainly, it establishes Gertrude Michael, hitherto overlooked, as a rising star.—Produced by Paramount.

Today's Gossip

vite a group of friends to party a bit. Usually three times the number invited showed up, ate her food, frolicked in the swimming pool and had a grand time. Which was all right with Alice until some of the uninvited guests began to carry off some of the interior decorations. That was the straw that broke the lease.

CHARLES FARRELL has just returned from making pictures in Australia. When Charles left for the Antipodes, the tennis club and cocktail bar which he and Ralph Bellamy operate at Palm Springs was in a flourishing condition with the season at its height. Bellamy was left to carry on and he too received an offer to make a series of personal appearances in the East at plenty of money. So he left. But Virginia Valli Farrell, the pretty and capable wife of Charles stepped right in, took charge of things and made the place even more popular than when the original owners were on hand. And that includes handling a big tennis tournament too.

DID YOU know that Robert Montgomery is more proficient at rope spinning and lasso-ing than many a movie cowboy? He practices on the set between takes. Wonder if we'll ever see his rope tricks on the screen?

CHARLIE CHAPLIN says he will not make another comedy—that he prefers serious drama. If he can find a suitable characterization he will make a talking picture and play a full speaking rôle. He intends to write, direct and produce a picture starring Paulette Goddard this summer.

TARZAN WEISSMULLER feels no obligation to clothes-convention when he selects his ensembles. Johnny can be seen wearing light green gabardine coat, light gray trousers, dark blue polo shirt, maroon necktie, and he carried a tan camel's hair coat. Oh, yes! he wears checkered socks.

ONE NEVER knows what will happen when a company goes on location. Recently The Lost Horizon company with Frank Capra directing went on location about 125 miles from Hollywood. On all location trips a truck carries wardrobe. This particular truck was stored in a garage and a fire broke out in the night.

The company hauled out the truck but not before many of the costumes were scorched.

Which necessitated 250 people being rushed back to the studio to be outfitted with new costumes.

Which meant plenty of time and money lost.

KATHARINE HEPBURN in Mary of Scotland has sort of amazed the folks around the studio by her willingness to cooperate in every way and leave her temperament at home.

The secret is that John Ford, her director, never let an actor or actress best him. It was he, you remember, who took Margot Grahame of The Informer down her first day on the set.

Miss Grahame had her own ideas as to how she would deliver a certain line. Ford has his ideas too.

"I was paid to direct this picture" said Ford. "What were you paid to do?"

That was all. Ford is a director who directs.

BILL ROBINSON, that ebony-hued marvel of terpsichore, turned down several weeks of vaudeville engagements at top salary because he had agreed to teach his little friend, Shirley Temple, some new steps for her forthcoming picture Dimples.

Likewise Bill is coaching a number of other film stars and he didn't want to desert them either. Robinson's income from teaching is well over four figures weekly.

BY THEIR splendid work recently in Pacific Coast tournaments Dick Arlen and Ruby Keeler have won the titles of filmdoms leading golfers. Arlen has competed in several tournaments with top notch golfers and got into the finals each time, while Miss Keeler fairly burned up the course during a recent golf tournament for women. Ruby got into the semi-finals which is going some, for they have some mighty fine golfers in Southern California.

SIMONE SIMON, the little French actress, brought to this country to play the rôle of "Cigarette" in Under Two Flags a rôle eventually played so well by Claudette Colbert, is returning to the screen to try again, this time in Girls Dormitory.

Studio officials claim the long rest enjoyed by Simone has entirely cured her of temperament.

ANITA LOUISE has gone to Europe, ostensibly to make a picture for Korda; but the wise ones in Hollywood claim that her trip is mostly to break up a budding romance with Ross Alexander. Incidentally Anita's mother is about to be married again.

SALLY RAND does get into the publicity limelight and this time not of her own doing. Seems Sally is at the San Diego Exposition doing her famous "Bubble Dance." Well, some kids have been watching the dance and popping the balloons with bird shot fired from miniature guns. It was all right when they hit, but when they missed, Sally received the full force herself. She became so perforated that she appealed to the management.

NAT PENDLETON, who plays "Sandow" in the film The Great Ziegfeld was once a famous wrestler and A. A. U. champion. Nat can still wrestle. Recently he inserted an ad in a Los Angeles paper agreeing to pay anyone $1,000 cash who would arrange a match for him with Man Mountain Dean the 317 pound wrestler appearing locally.

If the match is made Pendleton further agrees to give $1,000 to the Motion Picture Relief Fund if he fails to throw the Man Mountain ten times in an hour.

BECAUSE Winfield Sheehan former head of Fox Film was adding a mysterious wing to his estate at Hidden Valley 40 miles from Los Angeles the rumor spread that the side the sun was shining but there was no hint of its warmth and brilliance in this room. It was like the dim, cloistered recesses of some cathedral.

Barbara talks straight from the shoulder—man to man. Occasionally, instead of answering a question, she says, "Let's skip that one." Once she said, "I'm telling you a lot of things I don't expect you to print. I'm mentioning these things merely to try to make you understand my mental reactions."

She is one of the most honest, straightforward women any man will ever encounter. But in those days, despite her air of amiability, one got the feeling that here was a girl who desperately needed help. And despite the confidential things she was saying, despite her obvious honesty, you felt there were other things—even deeper, more personal, that she was keeping back—that she couldn't bring herself to to discuss. Despite her friendliness there was an impenetrable barrier about her that precluded the asking of personal questions, no matter what the motive behind them.

There was bitterness in Barbara in those days. The bitterness of a woman who knew someone she loved and trusted wasn't playing the game with her, and who was too proud to let anyone see that she knew. It was that bitterness—all those unspoken inhibitions and repressions that were holding her back.

She wasn't to blame. Women had slighted her when she first came out here. She had been invited to a couple of parties because she was Frank Fay's wife but once there her hostesses had paid no attention to her. She refused to go to any more. She withdrew more and more into herself—drew back farther and farther from Hollywood life. Her world was the studio and that depressing house with its dark walls and the high brick walls that surrounded the grounds.

Who wouldn't have been bitter?

It was only because she is a born fighter she could keep going. All her life she'd had to fight for everything she wanted and now she was waging her biggest fight for the thing that mattered most to her. She was losing, too, and she knew it. But she kept fighting.

Suddenly it was all over. The separation no one believed possible had come. But it hadn't come soon enough. It had affected her work. That spark that used to characterize her in pictures was gone. She left the studio where she had been under contract.

And then, even more suddenly, still fighting, Barbara got hold of herself. She made a smashing hit in Annie Oakley. Not since her first big hit, Ladies of Leisure, had she given a performance like that.

AS IF that weren't enough, she learned to laugh. It had been a long time since anyone had heard her laugh—even in pictures. A twisted sort of smile was as close to it as she ever came. She began appearing at parties, at the Trocadero, at the fights—everywhere.

A friend of mine, who frequently goes to the night spots, remarked, "I saw Stanwyck at the Troc the other night, having a high old time. I don't know anything that gives me the kick that seeing her enjoying herself does. She's had so little fun out here."

Pressed for an explanation of the change that has taken place in her, Barbara laughed.

"Oh, I'm a regular night-hawk now. I've been to the Troc about six times and go practically everywhere else I'm asked. I'm even going to the Grove to see Veloz and Yolanda dance! From being a recluse I've turned into a gadabout. I realize now that nobody was really trying to slight me and I've found if I give people half a chance they're more than willing to be friendly. All at once it seems like a pretty good old world."

"Is it because you're free?" I asked.

"Listen," she said gravely, "that's a phase of my life that's over. I don't want to talk about it but I'll tell you this much: these last few years have been pretty much surface living.

"I don't believe in divorce and heaven knows I never wanted it to happen to me. But when things reached the point where we couldn't go on any longer, there was just no other way out.

"There's one thing I want to stress, though: I don't think it was my fault and I don't know that it was Fay's particularly. And, above everything, I want to emphasize that Hollywood had nothing to do with it. It would have ended this way anywhere. It was simply that we had been happy together once but we were no longer happy together. So there seemed no other solution.

"I'M NOT being gallant. I never was. I don't regret those years."

Her present home is an English country style type of house. The sun streams through the windows, highlighting the white walls, accentuating the gay chintzes.

"I love English houses," she said simply, following my gaze. The memory of that other house with its gloomy walls rose like a spectre.

"Then, why," I began, but all at once, without her saying a word, I knew the whole story.

Fay had liked Spanish architecture so they'd had a Spanish house. Fay had liked dark paneling on the walls so they had dark paneling. Fay had wanted no part of Hollywood so they had lived by themselves. She'd had no life of her own. Her whole existence was devoted to making him happy. Whenever anything reflected unfavorably or seemed incomprehensible, Barbara had always let it seem it was what she wanted. Those stories of her great love for him were no gag. They were sincere.

In explanation of her sticking to him, let it be noted that not only was she desperately in love with Fay, but he is one of the most entertaining, one of the wittiest men in the country. And in Fay's defence, let it be said he was in a spot. He had been a big star in New York but he couldn't get a job in Hollywood. His wife was making a large salary and the gossip was that he was spending it all. Talk of that sort is death to any man's self-respect. He became morose and irritable. The more talk there was, the more bravado Frank showed.

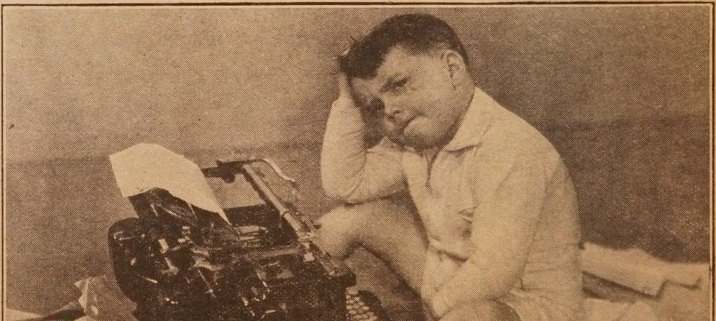
Now that they're apart, both are doing fine. Barbara has reached new heights in her late pictures. Fay has made a tremendous success on the radio in New York.

Somerset Maugham had a line in The Circle that went: "One sacrifices one's life life for love—and then finds that love doesn't last."

What wonder she had been bitter when she had sacrificed everything and saw that it still wasn't enough?

"I am not gallant. I never was!"

She is the most gallant lady I know!



"Spanky" MacFarland, the little child who leads all the rest in Our Gang comedies, regrets his avowed intention to answer some of his own fan mail. Critics say he stole acting honors from the adult cast in Trail of the Lonesome Pine payday. Sometimes, it didn't—and Peter, the bartender, would lend her a bob or two to tide her over.

Now here she was again, back at the old place. Only now she was a guest—THE guest—of the place, instead of an employe. And she was famous. But she hadn't forgotten Peter.

AND when the emissary from the dining room found her, they were "Peter" and "Estelle"-ing each other.

"I sye, Estelle," Peter was telling her, "'adn't you better 'urry orf to your friends? They'll be expecting you."

"Friends?" asked Merle, "Peter, I really wonder. I mean—they're fine people, and all that, but they've come here to meet Merle Oberon, you see—and just for this moment, I'm being Estelle Thompson, again.

"And as Estelle, I'm being awfully happy, Peter, to greet an old friend—that's you. I know you're my friend, because you've often proved it in the past, and you still call me Estelle. But as for these others—Peter, are they really my friends? Or are they just people come to see Merle Oberon on exhibit? Or are they just some more stooges?"

Peter's eyebrows rose.

"Stooges?" he asked. "My word!—isn't that one of those Uhmeddican expressions? What, Estelle, does it mean?"

And then Merle explained. She explained to Peter in just about the same tenor as she told me, the other day, about the one thing stardom does NOT give. That's friends.

You get a lot of acquaintances, Merle finds, but virtually no friends. Most of them are stooges.

"Stooges," she tells, "are persons who are unwilling to make names for themselves, but always, like parasites, attach themselves to whomsoever is successful and important and thus themselves feel as if they, too, are important."

And Hollywood, she finds, is full of them.

NOW, don't misunderstand, from all this, that Merle is one of these sour, friendless souls who goes around finding reasons for his lack of friends. On the contrary, Merle Oberon is as likeable and as lovable a girl as there is in Hollywood, and she's got friends aplenty. But she has learned to realize that stardom does cost one friends — and because she is as open-hearted and friendly as a girl can be, it has hurt her.

"What hurts me," she says, "is my loss of the ability to differentiate between true friends and false. How can I help it? Poverty is the only real criterion. When friends stick with you and don't expect anything in return but your friendship—then they must be friends.

"But these others—these groups that crowd around success—I can't call them friends, can I?"

Even more painful to her is the fact that stardom has, inescapably, cost her some of the friends she used to have. No longer is she "Queenie" to them, as they used to call her. Now she's the big star—and in their letters, when they write, she discerns a strained quality. No longer do they address her on terms of equality, but rather with a consciousness of awe, of distance, of a gulf that has opened between them, now that Merle has become famous. Why, even her old schoolteacher in Calcutta, India, who used to correspond with her regularly and address her as "Dear Estelle," now starts her letters with "Dear Miss Oberon"—and no longer does she retail to Merle the doings and gossip of her old companions back there; instead, the teacher asks about Hollywood, and asks for autographs and pictures of stars. "I've lost a friend," says Merle, "and added a fan."

Countering all this, however, is one friend who'll never change. And Merle isn't taking any chances, either, of losing that friend. It's this way:

When Merle first came to England from India, with her army-captain uncle, he took her to visit, for a while, at the home of Captain C. P. Dainty, a fellow officer. Dainty had a daughter, Ruth, about Merle's age. They clicked, like that—and became close friends. When Merle's uncle returned to India, leaving her in London after she had pleaded and cajoled him into "staking" her for a try at movies, it was Ruth Dainty who stood by and encouraged her. When Merle needed clothes, Ruth loaned her some from her own wardrobe. When Merle's money ran out, and she found that her "friends" did, too, Ruth Daintv was the single one who didn't quit her.

TODAY, Merle's constant companion is that same Ruth Dainty. Only now she has changed her name to Ruth Fraser—simply because people won't believe it's really Dainty, and used to kid her about it. Ruth found it easier to change her name than to insist it was truly hers.

Merle pays Ruth a good salary—to be her companion, her secretary, her critic. And when she says critic, she means it. Because never has Ruth let Merle's success and fame change her. She still tells Merle off, when and if she needs it—about clothes, about rôles, about her friends, about men, about servants, about all the things on which a woman sometimes needs advice.

"—because she was the same when I was just a little extra, trying to get along, and that's more than I can say for most people. And her advice and criticism, frank as it is sometimes, is of more value to me than all the honeyed words and praise and adulation of the stooges who flutter about."

Merle goes about less in Hollywood than most stars. She hardly ever is to be seen at a night club. When she gives parties, they are small affairs—with a guest list that usually includes Norma Shearer, the Sam Goldwyns, Constance Collier.

Norma Shearer is one of her closest friends. And so is Jean Harlow. These were two who did not cold-shoulder the little girl from England when she first came to Hollywood. Maybe that first Hollywood experience of hers has had much to do with Merle's attitude and reaction to Hollywood friendships.

"They were the two who were kind to me when everybody else seemed trying to snub me," Merle explains. "They weren't putting on an act for me. They were being themselves. They are like that—sincere, warm and kind."

You see, it was after she'd made a hit in English films that Darryl Zanuck brought her to America to appear in the filmized Folies Bergere, with Maurice Chevalier.

"I was utterly bewildered at everyone's hostility! It frightened me. And finally, I went into seclusion."

That was the six-weeks period when Merle began to be whispered about, in Hollywood, as that bizarre creature from India, who stays in hiding. Finally, she accepted an invitation to go out.

"And do you know, I'd become so fearful that I stayed close to one person in the room, whom I regarded as a friend, and asked what man I might smile at and at which ones I shouldn't!"

TODAY Merle's house is right next to Norma Shearer's, on Santa Monica beach, where that small exclusive colony of film biggies lives. Merle and Norma spend hours together, sunbathing. Absolute worshiper of Merle is Norma's little son, Irving Thalberg, Junior.

As for boy friends, Merle is very canny.

In Hollywood, she could have her pick of escorts. But she's not having any. She's not being fooled by the flattery and the adulation of Hollywood's handsome heroes. She's sticking pretty close to the fellow-Englishman who knew her when —David Niven.

Like Merle, Dave is under contract to Sam Goldwyn. Like Merle, he's known his ups and downs. Like Merle, he has struggled against bad luck, against big odds, toward the film success he wants, as she does. Back in London, when both wondered where their next guinea might come from, he and Merle used to share luck, good or bad, as it came. And it's that same David Niven whom Merle still keeps as her steadiest boy friend in Hollywood, despite the overtures and the importunings of Hollywood's handsomest. She'd rather stay at home, listening to some hilarious yarn of Dave's—like the time he delivered laundry in a Rolls Royce town car, borrowed from a friend, so he could make enough money to pay off his Waldorf-Astoria bill in New York! —than step out to the Mayfair or the Trocadero with some femme-slaying hero of the films. Because she knows Dave is her friend—and she's not sure that the others are.

As a matter of fact, Dave is more than a friend. That is, he wants to be. He wants to be Merle's husband. But Merle hasn't made up her mind to that, as yet.

AND Merle, having learned the bitter truth that stardom does cost one friends, appreciates that deeply.

"Mind you, there are scores of people around Hollywood — men and women, both—who cluster around you when your star is in the ascendancy, and make you want to believe that their friendships are real. They're amusing; they're charming —but they aren't real. Why, these people didn't seem to feel that I had great wit or scintillating charm when I was just starting out, a few years ago. They didn't hover around me then, laughing at my every sally, applauding my every remark, agreeing with everything I said. But now, when I'm Merle Oberon, movie star, there's a group of them around me, ready to compliment me ad nauseam.

"It isn't Hollywood alone. I found the same thing in England, when I went back there a few months ago, after my success in The Dark Angel. They had the bands out to meet me—quite different from my previous entries. And I found that people I barely remembered having casually been introduced to, were now suddenly my greatest pals. Girls who had virtually kicked me now patted me. Casting directors who had refused to see me, were whispering that I was their discovery!

"And there were always the scores of strangers, wishing me well, calling themselves my friends. How can one differentiate between the true and the false? It's a problem I don't know how to solve. If I could only don a disguise and go back among my 'friends' to hear how they talk behind my back—but that might be unpleasant . . .

"Perhaps it's better merely to go on, accepting flattering and not believing any of it—but loving all of it. That is, so long as you have one real friend like Ruth Fraser, who'll always tell you the truth, no matter how it hurts."

All Aboard for Hollywood! Your Last Chance

To join a congenial, traveling house party and spend your vacation inside studio gates and visiting the movie famous in their own homes.

SCREEN BOOK'S first annual Movieland Tour proved so popular that this year public demand has necessitated the making up of two fast transcontinental trains which will carry its passengers through the glorious West for a visit to the wonders of Rainier National Park . . . a thrilling boat trip to picturesque Victoria and back.

Then your private train speeds down the coast to San Francisco where you will have a chance to prowl through famous Chinatown and eat on Fisherman's Wharf where epicures from the world over exclaim about the sea foods served in outdoor restaurants, literally on the Ocean's edge!

THEN HOLLYWOOD

Where the doors of two of the great studios will be thrown open to you so you may see pictures in the making and chat informally with your favorite actors.

Two of Hollywood's most popular young film players will entertain you in their own homes—you will meet their friends and have your picture taken with stars!

You will be banqueted at the Biltmore Bowl, one of Movieland's best-known night spots—and your hosts will be world-famous actors and actresses.

Another cinema rendezvous will be opened to you—the Brass Rail—and you will mingle with movie folk whom you have previously seen only on the screen.

Ken Maynard has invited Tour-ers to be guests at his ranch to see his wild west show and circus which will afterward go on national tour.

There are innumerable other surprises in store for you! To mention just a few: a boat trip on a trim, white ocean-going steamer to Catalina Island, one of the Pacific's most beautiful resorts where the cinema great anchor their yachts and spend their week-ends; a cocktail party; a visit to Max Factor's salon where refreshments will be served and souvenirs given to the ladies.

On each tour, the girl with the most charming personality will be selected by Miss Lettie Lee—and the lucky girl will be presented with her choice of the attractive dresses pictured on page 54.

Special trains leave Chicago July 19 and August 9.

been in touch with her daily, and if you don't know a person pretty thoroughly after two solid years of constant association then you'll never know them, says me. Says you? Then we agree on that.

I believe, and I know I am right, that I know Joan Blondell better than she knows herself. I know all of her faults and all of her virtues along with the many ramifications of both, and if you do not think there are ramifications then let me tell you this: Joan is one of the sanest people I ever knew . . . but she's nuts! She is the epitome of impracticality but in a crisis is as practical as need be. She is not in the least domestic but can bring more charm to a house that she lives in than anyone I ever saw. One of her greatest virtues is her generosity, and at the same time one of her greatest faults. She is kindness itself but she can cut you down with a word. Does all this sound confusing and complex? It is, and like Joan, it isn't. It can all be explained in one word . . . ACTRESS!

I SAID that Joan was the epitome of impracticality. Dear reader, she doesn't know the difference between a bank holiday and the fourth of July! A check is a piece of paper one signs to buy something with. If you happen to mention to her that there has to be actual cash in the bank to cover the check, or that the bank book shows that there is only one hundred dollars left, and that she has checked five hundred and twenty, the business-like Miss B. does not fly into a panic; neither does she feel it at all necessary to inform the bank of her mistake. She just says: "Oh, for goodness sake. Well, I'll just write this one more check . . . that'll make six hundred and thirty!" Then all I have to do is rush around to the bank, deposit the extra money, and explain in my awfully cute way, "Don't mind Miss Blondell. She's an actress, you know!" With that speech I hand over the missing money and leave, with the bank convinced that I am not Joan Blondell's secretary but Gracie Allen's brother!

Big business, according to Brand-New-Deal Blondell, is entirely too complicated and wastes a lot of everybody's time. She is in a hurry and sees no reason why a department store wants to go to all that trouble of forcing saleswomen to make out those fool sales checks. Why in the world, Joan wants to know, does she have to sign eighty-three cards and give her mother's maiden name just because she wants a telephone installed? "I have to wait three days to get the phone!" she exclaims to Mr. Bell. "Why that's ridiculous! Can't you just send me the phone? . . . I'll attach it myself!" I think she would, too.

Joan recently sold the house she had been living in. Give-me-the-money,-here's-the-house is all the deal entailed as far as Joan was concerned. Escrow! "What in the name of goodness is that?"

"Well," one explains to her, "when one sells a house the money goes to escrow until all taxes are cleared and any debts, like a mortgage or anything, is deducted. After that is all cleared up, then one gets his money."

"It's awfully funny to me!" she comes back with, "I gave 'em the house . . . I don't see why they just can't give me the money and move in!"

And so escrow and the many routine details of all business will always remain a mystery, a bother, and something utterly silly to Warner Bros.' Public Golddigger number one.

Earlier in this great literary effort of mine, I remarked that the many ramifications of Joan's qualities could be explained with the one word, "actress!"

THAT one word, "actress," in discussing Joan Blondell, causes me to go soft and delay the sparks for awhile. Because acting, as one of the talents, is a thing apart from one's ordinary character or disposition. One can be stark, staring mad, figuratively speaking; the next thing to illiterate or a one-man brain trust. One either has a talent for acting or one hasn't! Joan Blondell has!

"Well, we know that," you are saying. "Get on with the dirt!"

I'll get on with the dirt, but remember, this is the first time I have had a chance to talk in public, and I've an awful load to get off my chest . . . especially where Joan's acting ability is concerned.

SO! Will you show me another girl in Hollywood who during one year has played a rip roaring golddigger, a straight dramatic part, a high comedy rôle, has sung and danced in a musical comedy—and been darn effective in all of them? Just for a topper, and to clinch my argument, you will soon be seeing her as a French peasant . . . accent and all . . . in Sons O' Guns with Joe E. Brown. THAT, my friends, is talent with a capital T.

I do not believe that it ever has occurred to Joan that she might be a little more gifted than most of her contemporaries; it all comes under the head of acting with Joan. Acting is her job and she goes ahead and does it the same way a good cook turns out anything from a pot roast to a pan of biscuits . . . all in the day's stride.

IF I have been any help to Joan as a secretary I think it is mostly because I have been able to bolster her spirits from time to time . . . and those times are often . . .when she is sure that she is slipping in her film career. Or when she returns from the preview of one of her pictures and is thoroughly disgusted with her performance. I point out her many qualifications as an actress, tell her why she will still be in pictures twenty years from now . . . and I think she will. I go over again how much she has to offer in comparison with this one or that one. By the time I get through I have brought in Bernhardt, Dusé, Cornell, and Helen Hayes. I become inspired by my own gab and finally get Joan to the point where she is practically convinced that no greater actress ever lived. She is ready to fly, by that time, over to the studio, bombard the Messrs. Warner and tell them how good she is and that they should do something about it. Before she is able to get her coat and hat on, however, her sense of humor gets the best of her. "I know I'm awfully good, and too beautiful for words," she'll say, "but I'd better go study my new lines before I'm fired!"

I wish Joan would take herself a little more seriously. That's the curse of too great a sense of humor. It's the egomaniacs in most cases that have forced themselves up from the mob; have taken themselves, and their oftentime mediocre talents, so seriously that they

DO AS DOCTORS DO

Follow this treatment for Constipation —gives relief in 1 hour

CERTAINLY you can have no sounder advice than this. When you need a laxative DO AS DOCTORS DO—and take no chances. For doctors, of all people, should know what to take.

Over 50,000 doctors use or recommend Pluto Water for Constipation. Dr. V. N. of Michigan states: "I have used and prescribed Pluto Water for 40 years." Dr. H. A. O. of Ohio writes: "I not only prescribe Pluto Water almost daily, but use it personally every other day and find it very beneficial."

Relief in 1 Hour

With Pluto Water you do not have to dope yourself at night. There is no long period of waiting. No painful griping.

Simply mix $\frac{1}{5}$ of a glass of Pluto Water with $\frac{4}{5}$ of a glass of hot water. You'll find this mixture pleasant. Gentle. And quick and thorough in results.

Pluto gives a complete bowel flush in 1 hour. That is why you so quickly feel like a new person. Your head clears—your energy returns—your appetite improves.

Try This Doctors' Way

Pluto Water is bottled at the famous French Lick Springs, Indiana. It is a non-habit-forming saline mineral water. Sure! Quick! Gentle! Safe! Two hundred million bottles have already been used, largely on doctors' advice. Get Pluto from your druggist—either in the 25c size or the large 50c size which contains three times the quantity. In 1 hour or less, your constipation will be relieved, and you'll feel worlds better.

have been able to hypnotize the world into believing that what they had to offer was of great value.

DO YOU think you could ever get Miss Blondell, the picture star, to drive on the studio lot in one of those low-slung town cars, chauffeured by a man in livery, and alight followed by a maid, a secretary, a couple of Pekinese, and maybe a man or two? Not on your life you couldn't! Well, there are others out here that do it, and get away with it. And don't think the onlookers, including the studio people aren't impressed. They are! I'm impressed myself!

I'll tell you exactly what would happen if I, or anyone else, ever got La Blondell to that stage. She would drive up all right. But as soon as the man in livery opened the limousine door, pretty Miss Blondell would just poke her head out and yell, "Hey! Get a load o' me!"

Once or twice I have, in my secretarial and sort of mother-knows-best capacity, ventured to remonstrate with her at these times. I'll meekly venture: "Do you think you ought to sit at a lunch counter with the noon time crowd?" Or I'll say: "If you are going shopping today, why not dress up stinkin' and simply slay the multitudes! You know, be the big picture star!"

The Madame just turns one of those wide-eyed looks on me; conjures up Gracie Allen, and says: "WHY?"

I haven't any answer for that.

AND then it strikes me that that very quality in Joan, the quality that asks "why"—why should she not sit at a lunch counter, or why should she be driven about in state or for that matter conduct herself any differently from anyone else—that very quality, I believe, is as much responsible for her screen success as any talent or any physical appeal that she may possess.

In the parlance of the theatre that quality is called "warmth." Joan possesses it to a tremendous degree. It is proven by her fan mail . . . yes, I see all of it. There is not a day goes by that some young girl, some married woman, or even a woman old enough to be her mother, doesn't write to ask her advice about this problem or that; or tell her their troubles because "You seem such a natural person, Miss Blondell, and so understanding."

I believe it is that quality of utter naturalness and what I call back-fence neighborliness that will be responsible, along with her ability to act, for keeping Joan in pictures as long as she cares to remain in them. And, boys and girls, she will care to remain in them until the day she dies. That one is pure sawdust, theatre, and celluloid! She loves it! You will, in all likelihood be forced to listen to your grandchildren tell you about that funny old lady, Joan Blondell, in the picture they saw that week.

"Good heavens!" you'll say to your grandchild, "is SHE still in pictures! Why I remember her when I was a child of ten! She must be a hundred and ninety!"

And if she is, and alive, Joan Blondell will still be acting . . . wheel chair and all.

With those few words, my avid readers, I take my leave.

Thanks, Dick, for the use of the hall!

who hadn't had a lot of practice, and one night got very, very angry at a beautiful blonde who was having a whimsical wrestle with her husband. She never again asked the lady to her house. But shortly afterward the beautiful blonde became the wife of another English star, and she retaliated by refusing to let her new husband play on the first star's cricket team. And so a furor shook the English colony in Hollywood—for to an Englishman, cricket is far more serious than the star business. So they took to standing around in corners, pulling their chins gloomily and repeating sadly, "These women!"

But there are not many cases like this, because for the most part the wives of the stars are not jealous of other women. Surrounded as the men of Hollywood are by beautiful girls they probably grow immune to feminine loveliness—anyway if a wife started to be jealous she'd see so much attractiveness around her husband that she'd not know where to begin to worry.

Nevertheless it is a problem, as Mrs. Pat O'Brien said laughingly, to know just what to do when an adoring female is a having a good gush over one's loved one. Whether to bite the nails! Whether to remark moodily that it looks like good golfing weather! "Unfortunately you cannot give the offending lady a stout shove and say, 'Stand aside, Creature, this is my man!' Definitely this is never done, however much a poor wife may wish to lift the offender by her hair and quietly deposit her in the nearest garbage pail, all she can do is to smile as prettily as nature will allow her to do—and wait."

Stand Aside, Creature!

NATURE has allowed Mrs. O'Brien to smile very prettily indeed. One night Pat told his wife that he wanted her to ask an old friend of his to dinner. The woman was an old time star—a typical prima donna who had once had the world at her feet, and now that she was no longer so sought after—was still unable to realize that any woman other than herself had any right to exist.

Pat didn't tell his wife all this. Man-like, he had never noticed it, so Mrs. O'Brien was unprepared to have the lady walk into her drawing room with both hands outstretched—solely to Pat.

Mrs. O'Brien found herself patting her hair as if she wanted to reassure herself that she was really there. She listened to some overpowering reminiscences of the days when her guest was world famous, and Pat was just an ambitious nobody. It was perfectly clear that the lady felt the situation was still unchanged.

After a while the lady pulled herself out of her self-absorption long enough to say, "But I hear you have a baby. I must see it."

So they took her to the nursery.

"Pat! How wonderful. But you're wonderful, Pat! You certainly deserve a lot of credit."

Mrs. O'Brien bent over her baby to hide a smile as she didn't say, "I thought I—at least had a little to do with this!"

A sense of humor is a help. Mrs. John Boles took a long distance call from Texas one night. It was for her husband, but he wasn't in. "But I must speak to Mister Boles," said an agitated feminine voice. "I simply must."

"This is Mrs. Boles. Can't I take the message?"

There was a short gasp. "Mrs. Boles? Oh no, no! You wouldn't understand."

"Perhaps I would," said Mrs. Boles.

"The fact of the matter is, Mrs. Boles, I can't stand it any longer. I'm simply crazy about John Boles."

"Well, I feel exactly the same way," said Mrs. Boles. "What makes you think I couldn't understand that?"

After that the little Texas girl decided that she liked Mrs. Boles almost as well as Mr. Boles. And so tact and good-humor won a real friend. These very necessary qualities are essential not only to the wives of stars but to the stars themselves in their public relations. With the spotlight always on them, they must learn to control their emotions.

For instance, when Carole Lombard meets Bill Powell at a party they greet each other with aplomb like the good friends they are, yet both of them know that the world is watching and saying, "Does she remember?" . . . "Does he mind seeing her with another man?" . . . "Is she jealous of Jean Harlow?" These are all vain questions. They are small problems bound up with the petty thought: what are people saying?

Margaret Sullavan and Henry Fonda are seen together at the movies. They play together in a picture. The town buzzes: Will they marry again?

Douglas Fairbanks, Junior comes to town—and goes to dinner with the Franchot Tones, and Hollywood remembers that Douglas and Joan were formerly married, and has a thousand things to say.

And so the stars have learned to be cagey—to cover their emotions with a social manner. Both stars and their wives have found it necessary to turn a brightly polite and blankly pleasant countenance toward the world—so that behind this refuge they may do exactly as they please. And if this sounds sinister, it is a fact that most of them please to lead the same life that any normal individual wants.

If ever you've doubted that Ginger Rogers is an expert swimmer as well as a marvelous dancer, just note the perfection of the crawl stroke she was using when this picture was taken by our omni-present camera sleuth. She will next be seen in Never Gonna Dance with Fred Astaire

SKINNY FOLKS GAIN 10 TO 25 LBS. QUICK

—with new 3-way treatment

SCIENCE DISCLOSES 3 REASONS WHY THOUSANDS ARE SKINNY

Thousands Gain Firm Normally Attractive Flesh

IF you are one of those skinny, rundown people who seldom attract friends, here's wonderful news. Thousands with this new, easy treatment have gained solid, normally attractive flesh—in just a few weeks!

Not only has this new 3-way discovery quickly brought normal pounds, but also naturally clear skin, freedom from indigestion and constipation, new pep.

Doctors now find that hosts of people are thin and rundown for the single reason that they do not get enough Vitamin B and iron in their daily food. Now the richest known source of body-building Vitamin B is cultured ale yeast. By a new process the finest imported cultured ale yeast is now concentrated 7 times, making it 7 times more powerful. Then it is combined with 3 kinds of iron in pleasant little tablets known as Ironized Yeast tablets.

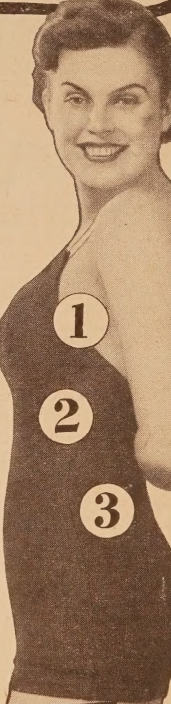
If you, too, need these vital elements to build you up, get these new triple-acting Ironized Yeast tablets from your druggist today. Then, day after day, watch flat chest develop and skinny limbs round to natural attractiveness. Constipation and indigestion from the same cause vanish, skin clears to normal beauty—you're a new person.

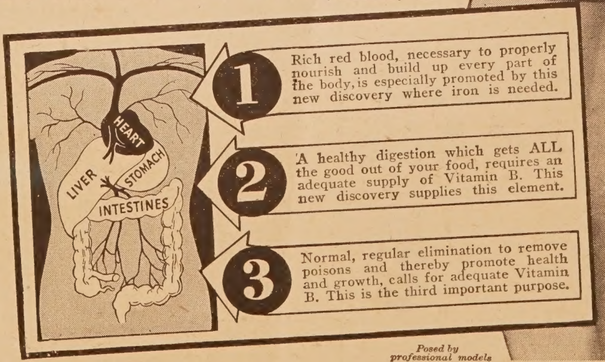
Money-back guarantee

No matter how skinny and rundown you may be, try these new Ironized Yeast tablets just a short time, and note the marvelous change. See if they don't build you up in just a few weeks as they have thousands. If not delighted with very first package, money back instantly.

Special FREE offer!

To start you building up your health right away, we make this absolutely FREE offer. Purchase a package of Ironized Yeast tablets at once, cut out the seal on the box and mail it to us with a clipping of this paragraph. We will send you a fascinating new book on health, "New Facts About Your Body." Remember, results with the very first package—or money refunded. At all druggists. Ironized Yeast Co., Inc., Dept. 287, Atlanta, Ga.





1 Rich red blood, necessary to properly nourish and build up every part of the body, is especially promoted by this new discovery where iron is needed.

2 A healthy digestion which gets ALL the good out of your food, requires an adequate supply of Vitamin B. This new discovery supplies this element.

3 Normal, regular elimination to remove poisons and thereby promote health and growth, calls for adequate Vitamin B. This is the third important purpose.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c at all drug stores. © 1935, C. M. Co.

My Four Years In Hollywood

Bilson, who makes the "trailers" for Warner Brothers' pictures, to make a short special trailer, showing me saying goodbye to members of the company. He was good enough to agree and asked Mary Brian if she would work with me in that special "trailer." That was the start of a fine friendship.

I drove back to Pittsburgh in the yellow roadster, wearing the yellow sweater, but I left the knickers at the Hollywood Athletic Club, where they may be yet for all I know.

Then I spent the most anxious weeks of my life, waiting to know if the studio liked my work and intended to exercise the option they had taken on my future services. Eventually the news came; a telegram telling me to report within four days for another picture. I wired back that I couldn't make it. They were generous and allowed me six days instead of four. I got to Hollywood just under the wire and waited six weeks before I was given anything to do. That was on loan-out to Fox in a picture with Will Rogers, called Too Busy to Work. Nothing I can say about Will Rogers will add any luster to a great name. But that picture was an experience I never shall forget. I didn't sing in that picture, but Rogers did. I'm afraid I didn't help the picture much but Will Rogers helped me a great deal. I find myself repeating to others the advice he gave to me.

A PITTSBURGH newspaper had asked me to write my impressions of Hollywood. I had been too busy during the first short stay, but during the first six weeks of watchful waiting after my second arrival I did send back my "impressions," painfully picked out on my portable typewriter. I've just been looking them over. Here is a sample:

"I wanted to see everything, do everything all at once. I drove for miles and miles. I passed every studio, and stopped at each one to see the stars go through the gates and come out again.

"It was as if I were a visitor here, and had to pack in everything in a day or two. I went to the Brown Derby for lunch. That's where most of the stars congregate. I couldn't eat because I was craning my neck so much, staring at everybody that came in and following them with my eyes until they had been seated. The stars all knew the other stars, and they would flit back and forth between their tables to pass a few words of conversation. I wondered if some day, maybe they would stop at my table, say, 'How are you, Dick? How's it going?' and inquire about my next picture, etc., etc. Gee, I hope they do. I'm going to try my best to make that possible.

"Then at night I went to the Cocoanut Grove, where movie people dine and dance. Once more, I was all eyes. My neck was stiff from stretching so I could see who was who and what was what. Norma Shearer was there and so was Dolores Del Rio. I followed them about the floor—optically I mean—like a watchdog. Soon I found people at nearby tables staring at me as if to say, "Wonder who that hick is?"

But I couldn't help it. I was in Hollywood, the place of my dreams and I wasn't going to miss a thing. I didn't care what they said, what they thought.

I had heard so much about Hollywood's wild parties that I expected to see the crowd at the Grove wind up in some kind of orgy. But I was disappointed. You never saw such an orderly place. Naturally, there were a few people drinking. There always are—anywhere. But at one o'clock the music stopped, everybody left and Hollywood went to bed—at one o'clock! And Mrs. Powell's little boy went to bed, too, tired but happy.

Before Forty-second Street, my second Warner Brothers picture, started, my mother and father came to visit me. I took a small house in Beverly Hills. My dad worried about my expenses and insisted on discharging the gardener and doing the work himself. I've often wondered what people thought about the young movie upstart who was making his father do all the hard work around the place. Unpleasant stories have started on less.

But people were extraordinarily pleasant to me. When Forty-second Street was well under way I had a birthday. I didn't mention it until late one night—we were working until midnight that day. George Bilson and some others hunted for a cake. The only one to be found was a prop cake, made of sugar frosting over a pasteboard box. It must have been ten years old but they brushed it off, stuck a candle on it and led me to a table off the set where we all sat down while I "carved the cake."

Later that night we had another birthday party—and a real cake. I felt more at home in Hollywood after that.

ABOUT this time I sang at my first Hollywood benefit. That was the straw that almost broke a good-natured back. For a few months I had scarcely a single night to myself. Sometimes I appeared at three benefits in one evening with an occasional personal appearance in a theater thrown in for good measure.

When Gold Diggers of 1933 was finished I was sent out on a personal appearance tour. I was tired and when I finally got back to Hollywood I was ready for the hospital. On the last stand of that trip I sang "I'm Young and Healthy" for the ten thousandth time and then went back to my dressing room and took my own temperature. It was 103. That didn't look so healthy.

So I had pneumonia and was in bed for six weeks. Then I worked in Footlight Parade, and had a relapse. It wasn't serious, however. Meanwhile I had moved to Toluca Lake and after looking about I decided to buy a lot near there and build a small house. It is within walking distance of the studio where I make most of my pictures.

The house is done, and though it isn't as small as I wanted it to be, the grounds are big enough to keep me busy pulling weeds. Part of the time I mow the lawn —but that upsets the real gardener!

I've been very happy in Hollywood and sometimes very lonely. When I get too lonesome I take a plane back to Little Rock where my family lives, or send post haste for them to come out. The most fun I had building my new house was fix-

Shehans, he married Maria Jeritza seven months ago might be expecting the stork. Everything has been explained. The addition to the house is really a music room for Jeritza, built principally to house a grand piano given her by the late Emperor of Austria.

This grand piano is claimed to be the costliest musical instrument of its kind in America today.

NO BEVERLY HILLS estate and swimming pool and everything for Jack Oakie and his bride. When the Oakies returned from their honeymoon trip they moved right into a modest apartment in the picture colony, maid service once a week and everything.

Jack's mother lives in the home he built for her in Hollywood.

DUE, they say, to excessive taxation, three of the most pretentious estates in the film colony are on the market for sale. One is the Will Rogers ranch in Santa Monica Canyon; another the Warner Baxter home in Bel-Air and the third, the famous home of Colleen Moore.

EDDIE MEADE, portly and famous manager of boxers comes right out with the statement that George Raft should never have made the screen his career. Meade claims that Raft was the best prospect for a light weight champion that had come under his observation for years. And a lot of folks figured George Raft as a boxer was just so much publicity.

YOU'VE heard of the Charge of the Light Brigade but the Retreat of the Light Brigade has been a more important subject of late in Hollywood. Meaning the passing of the platinum blondes. Alice Faye was the last survivor but she has darkened her tresses so, now, a platinum blonde in Hollywood is as rare as an Albino.

Now the red heads are doomed. Seems that Technicolor is not for red headed gals and as there seems to be a vogue of color pictures the red heads are gradually "dying" out.

JOAN BENNETT is being acclaimed the "Godmother of the Dress Shops" in the shopping center of Hollywood.

Seems Joan, as chief hostess of the exclusive Mayfair Club's spring dance decreed that, for the ladies, only print dresses would, could or should be worn and that edict goes to Mayfair circles. Thusly, the shops did a whale of a business on prints and the idea has carried on among the plain folks to such an extent that every shop just teems with prints. Which means Joan just threw a million dollars worth of business right into the laps of the gown shops.

DESPITE strenuous efforts on the part of the heads of a major studio to keep the matter secret it is nevertheless a fact that a divorce seems imminent between two screen stars, believed to be the happiest married couple in films. Efforts to patch up things have failed, real difficulty is family trouble. Too bad!

PARAMOUNT made Shirley Temple the happiest little girl in Hollywood one day recently. Shirley, with her mother visited the Paramount lot the first time since she made Little Miss Marker. When she left for home she was carrying the little Princess costume she wore in Miss Marker a gift to her from the studio.

BEBE DANIELS, who owns and operates a dress factory and a half dozen retail stores in and about Los Angeles has opened a new and swanky gown shop just a few doors from the famous Brown Derby on Vine street in Hollywood.

While en tour Bebe's mother, Phyllis, watches out for things.

CAROLE LOMBARD has moved from her smallish home on Hollywood Boulevard to a very big house in exclusive Bel-Air district . . . a place that has huge grounds. The other place had no yard and Carole wants a tennis court of her own.

THIS TAKES THE ITCH AND PAIN OUT OF POISON IVY IN NO TIME

STOPS These Summer-Time ITCHES LIKE MAGIC

"ATHLETE'S FOOT" Poison Ivy—Prickly Heat—Bites—Rashes—Eczema

RIGHT NOW is the time when itching skin troubles are most prevalent and doubly irritating because of the heat. But no need to suffer. Soothing, penetrating HYDROSAL stops the severest itch in seconds and relief lasts amazingly. Even "Athlete's Foot" torture yields in a jiffy. The burning pain of scratches, bites, stings, poison ivy, rashes, etc., likewise vanish almost like magic! Why endure such punishment when relief, so quick, certain, and inexpensive, is obtainable at any drug store. But, remember. No substitute can have the same unique anti-infective, entirely non-poisonous action. Insist on genuine HYDROSAL.

ing up a room for my mother in the way I though she would like it best.

Just now I'm resting after a busy six weeks in Hearts Divided in which Marion Davies is starred in the feminine rôle. During that time I caught a severe cold, and for six weeks I couldn't sign a note. Eight thousand kind people wrote me last week telling me what to do for it and wishing me a quick recovery. There's a lot of comfort in those letters, even if my doctor won't let me follow all the good suggestions. He says, however, that after four weeks more I can go back on the radio and into another singing role in Stage Struck.

Four years in Hollywood. It seems much shorter.

I wonder what you and I will be doing four years from now—in 1940?

Incidentally, that worry about the not-so-distant future and what it holds is never far removed from the mind of a motion picture "star."

address of a friend of Valentino's which had been given me some weeks previous. There was no object in my calling him then. But I did.

"He was an older man, he had been a stage director, and it didn't take him thirty minutes to convince me that my place was here in Hollywood. We had met for tea, you see, by arrangement made over the telephone. 'Get them to make tests of you in a straight part,' he told me when I had explained my difficulties. Convince yourself first that you can do it. Make up for it, act it, think of nothing else but that—then you can convince the studios.'

"That night I unpacked my trunks!

"I acted on that advice. And the first thing I knew Ned Griffith was letting me play a full-fledged American girl in Rebound. But what if I hadn't followed that impulse to call Valentino's friend . . .?"

THERE isn't anything of the mystic about her. People make a mistake calling Myrna that. It gives such a false impression of her. She is a humorous, quick-witted, lovable redhead who is fortunate enough to be psychic.

She was only eight when she discovered this sixth sense of hers. It was in her home town of Helena, Montana, and she was Myrna Williams then. There wasn't a reason in the world why she should want to go a mile and a half out of her way to reach home that evening. No reason that she should cross the vacant lot all tangled with weeds at the south end of the city—except that she wanted to. She was almost in the middle of the lot when she saw him, a black roly-poly puppy with a broken leg. The puppy who was to become the staunch companion of her childhood.

Although she is tiny and frail looking (she weighs only one hundred pounds) Heather Angel plays a wicked game of polo and spends most of her leisure whacking the willow ball

By the time she was seventeen and a dancer in the Fanchon and Marco prologues in Los Angeles, she'd had plenty of opportunity to acquire a healthy respect for her hunches. Little ones, they were. But then a big one came along. Myrna had been dancing in revues for a year and three months; she had reached the highest spot she could in that particular field. Mrs. Rudolph Valentino had given her a trial in the movies and Myrna thought herself so terrible in them that she couldn't see a future in pictures at all. Yet—on the spur of the moment she gave up her job . . . to go back into movies!

Why? She couldn't explain it even to herself as she sat in the cold little casting office wondering how long her money would hold out. She hated the screen and what it did to her. She needed that job she had relinquished. Yet here she was, waiting.

And in three days she had made a second test. A successful one. Shortly thereafter she had a five year contract with Warner Brothers . . .

Myrna spoofs at fortune tellers. She thinks all this "beforehand information" clutters up your life. It makes it harder to follow your real instincts.

"Sometimes you have to actually 'wake up' to a hunch. You wouldn't believe it took me two years to do that with a romance!" Myrna chuckled reminiscently and those green eyes of hers went opaque. "I was called to make a picture for an independent producer and from the moment I walked into that studio everything seemed right. I liked the star I played opposite, I liked my dressing room, I liked every single thing about the place. When it was time for me to leave at the end of the picture I wanted to cry!

"They called me back to work in another production and the same thing happened. I thought perhaps it wouldn't. I thought perhaps I had just imagined I'd enjoyed it so much the first time. But I was sorrier to leave than before. And when the producer left for Europe on his annual jaunt and the studio shut down I was broken-hearted. It took me exactly two years before I realized what the real attraction was at that studio. It was one of the assistant producers!"

But that's the only "sleeping hunch" Myrna has ever had. The others have all been of the very active variety . . .

When she went abroad, for instance, on the spurt of a comet's tail! It happened like this: At 11:37 a. m. she called her manager, Leland Heyward. "What would happen if I went abroad?"

"Plenty. They'd probably shoot me."

"Oh, dear—because I've just decided to sail tonight on the Paris!"

So she sailed. She's very likely the only star on earth, the only famous celebrity who ever toured five countries in one suit. It had, she says, a sort of "international pressing . . ." And when she returned it was to a far more lucrative contract with much, much nicer clauses about vacations and things.

So you can see why Myrna Loy, when you ask her for her philosophy of life, smiles, lifts that right eyebrow and says, "Play your hunches—and play safe!

CONSTIPATION?

corners, and it was the dark corners that Joe was knocked about in, for years.

At three, he was virtually orphaned, because Papa and Mama went to seek fortune in America, and they didn't have enough money to take Little Joe, so they left him with his grandpa, a village rector! The Pinters didn't find riches, but Papa found a job helping to make Ford automobiles in Detroit, and so bye and bye, a boy and an old man left Hungary for America. They couldn't speak English, and so there was a tag tied to the coat-lapel of each of them, instructing that they were on their way to Detroit, U. S. A., and officials enroute please help 'em. They got there.

AND Joe discovered that his mission in life seemed to be to make other people laugh, for the first thing that happened was that he was sent to an American kindergarten at the age of ten!—and all the little kids laughed at him. The boys in the upper grades ragged him too, so one day Joe bounced a hard fist off the nose of three of them, and then they stopped.

All this time, he was cross-eyed. One eye was all right, and fixed on whatever he wanted to see. But the other one was independent. It kept looking at other things. Joe focussed his good eye on a mirror, observed the bum eye, and said: "I'll fix YOU!" He did. He used to sit for hours in a dark room, exercising to the utmost the muscular control of his eyes. It was crude ophthalmology, but it worked.

Joe delivered papers. He helped to make automobiles. And then he suddenly burst out with a child-soprano voice. That got him on the stage for the first time, singing in Liberty Loan drives as the child wonder. Then the St. Paul Cathedral in Detroit asked him to sing in the choir, and he thought it was swell until his cheap, ragged clothes got him laughed at, so he quit and entered a Charlie Chaplin imitation contest in a neighborhood theater instead, where his clothes helped. He won it—not because he was such a good comic imitator, but because, somehow, out of the unhappiness and miseries of his own poverty, there was born a true pathos and wistfulness that matched that of the real Chaplin, himself a child of exactly Penner's own experience!

And then, from there, Joe joined a cheap burlesque troupe—and the career of one of the funniest men on the stage, radio or screen, was launched.

It was a grueling grind. Joe played straight man for a while—he was the one who got kicked in the you-know by the top comedians. Then he got a comedy rôle himself. One night, an inebriated gentleman was in the audience and laughed so hard at Joe that they threw him out.

The next night he came back sober. He laughed just as hard. Then he went backstage and found Joe and hired him. The gentleman was a talent scout from a

New York producer, and he admitted that if he hadn't had a few too many, the night before, he'd never have wandered into a fourth-rate "burley-cue" house in quest of talent.

Well, one of Joe's first lessons—and he's never forgotten it!—was to keep his stuff clean. It came about one night when they worked one of their funny gags. A curvaceous chorine, who out-billowed Mae West at her whoopiest, came onstage and leaned against a prop "fresh-paint" circus sign. Then she turned around, and the paint that had come off on her expansive tonneau read: "BIG SHOW TONIGHT. CURTAIN GOES UP AT 8:30. COME ONE, COME ALL."

There was the usual laugh from the people who laugh at those gags in burlesque shows. But it so happened that Joe's eyes were, at the moment, on a couple of clean-faced high school boys in one of the front rows. The boys never cracked a smile. Under Joe's exaggerated make-up, a blush spread. After the show that night, he told what he'd seen and suggested that the gag be "out." Somehow, even over a burlesque manager's protests, he won out. The gag was taken out and the show was cleaned up in other spots—and it made more money than before, and Joe discovered that dirt doesn't pay. He's never tried to cash in on it since. It was about this time that the duck gag was born. In his routine, Joe asked his straight man:

"Hey, d'ya wanna buy a rhinoceros?"

Then he changed it:

"Hey, d'ya wanna buy an elephant?"

It got laughs. But Joe got tired of rhinoceri and elephants. One night, he upset the whole show. He asked:

"Hey, d'ya wanna buy a DUCK?"

The house howled. For some unfathomable reason, the idea of wanting to buy a duck was immeasurably funnier than wanting to buy an elephant or a rhinoceros. From his dressing room, through a window which opened on the street, Joe heard that night countless of the audience, as they left the theater, ask each other:

"Hey, d'ya wanna buy a duck?"

AND from that moment on, Joe's luck changed. He attributed it to the duck. Then he began toting a small stuffed duck on stage with him. It made the gag better. One day, someone played a joke on him—he never learned who—it was just one of the company. They left a live duck in his dressing room. Joe turned the tables, carried the live duck on the stage with his "wanna buy a duck?" gurgle. It made a bigger hit than ever, and from that day on, Joe and Goo-Goo have been inseparable.

Goo-Goo took him from cheap burlesque to Broadway. Broadway gave him Eleanor. Eleanor was Eleanor Mae Vogt, one of the glorifiedest of the glorified. She didn't remain Eleanor Mae Vogt long after Joe met her onstage. She's Mrs. Joe Penner now. They've been married eight years and they're still so completely in love that Joe'd just as soon lose his own life—or even Goo-Goo—rather than lose Eleanor!

At the crest of his stage fame, Joe hated the radio. He thought it was cutting in on the stage. One night, he was asked to do a bit over the air on a Rudy Vallée program. On the verge of refusing vehemently, Joe hesitated. He had an idea. He'd go on—and he'd deliberately be so lousy that it'd hurt radio, which he hated.

He went on. He tried his worst. Honestly, he thought he was awful. And then came the deluge—from thousands of listeners, came a flood of telegrams, phone calls, letters, raving about the greatest new comedian of the air. Joe, trying to be a ghastly flop, had scored a colossal hit. So he changed his mind about radio, and if you own a radio set, you know the rest.

Hollywood cashed in on him then. Paramount signed him. "Bring Goo-Goo along," they told him. "I can't; she's an old lady," he explained. He told about the first time he took Goo-Goo on tour. It was an overnight hop by train, and Goo-Goo rode in a crate in the car back of the locomotive.

Next day, when Joe called for the duck, he screamed. "This ain't Goo-Goo!" he shouted, "this is Joe Louis!" They insisted it was Goo-Goo and made Joe take it. Joe gave the black duck to his two straight men and Buddy Vogt, his wife's brother, who traveled as Joe's secretary. The three of them took Goo-Goo to a hotel, filled the bathtub, got plenty of soap, and gave Goo-Goo a bath. Goo-Goo came out white and pure. But every day after that, Goo-Goo had to have her bath.

"I never saw a duck who could get so dirty overnight," weeps Joe. He told Paramount that her years of hard work had entitled Goo-Goo to a rest, so Paramount hired a double for her, and it was the double you saw with Joe in College Rhythm and Collegiate.

With wealth, Joe didn't forget Mama and Papa. He bought them a house in San Diego, which is 140 miles from Hollywood. That's near enough for them to visit each other whenever they please, but far enough so that Papa and Mama can be spared the little cruelties of Hollywood.

It's a fine house Joe has in Beverly Hills, now. He has all the servants he needs. He has the house and grounds alive with games of all kinds—a baby baseball diamond, that swimming pool, pin-and-ball boards, slot machines—all manner of ping-pong tables and badminton courts and handball courts and that sort of thing. He's always got a crowd there—stage folks, mostly—clowning and having fun. Joe joins in, usually—but somehow, he's never completely present.

I'll tell you something. The editor of this magazine asked me to write a lot of funny things, a good laugh-story of Joe's life and Joe as he is today. I'll be darned if I can do it. Joe isn't funny—except when he's working at it, in character. Off-screen, off-the-air, offstage, Joe is pathetic, rather than anything else. The years of toil and hardship and privation and suffering have left their mark indelibly on the man. He's not funny.

KNOW what he likes to do, most? He sends his wife out for a ride. He locks himself in a room of his great house. He gets out his old, battered fiddle—the one he got when a kid. And he plays to himself—and he plays those sad, wailing, minor-toned songs of Hungary's aching heart. He's nearest real happiness, then. He's looking forward to the day when he's going back home—back to that little village with the tongue-pain name. He doesn't say what he's going to do there, but those who know Joe are guessing. They're guessing that he's going to do something fine for the poor folk he knew there as a kid.

He's always doing things like that,

Hat by Lilly Daché

Eye Make-up by Maybelline

Lilly Daché, one of America's foremost hat designers, creates this utterly charming daytime hat of soft blue toyo straw — with a perky oriental yellowbird set on the crown directly off center. Its striking, swooping, narrow accordian brim is a sure challenge to adventure. Says Mme. Daché: "The shallow sailor crown lifts the hat off the eyes, and to achieve real chic it is important of course to reveal the eyes at their best — in eye makeup as well as hat design.

MODERN Eye Make-up IS AS NECESSARY TO Chic AS THE SMARTEST Hat

CHIC! — elusive, magnetic quality — sweep of long lovely lashes! This most compelling of all feminine charms can be yours instantly, easily, with Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids. Duck for Dinner here. But you never hear of it. He's the softest-hearted man in Hollywood, and his charities are legion.

He can't say no. Every week, he gets letters asking for Goo-Goo. Many of them are from sports teams, school classes, chambers of commerce, and other organizations who point out that Goo-Goo is old and offer good care for life, if Joe'll send Goo-Goo as a mascot.

Joe can't say no. But he does explain that he can't ever part with Goo-Goo. So what?—so, instead, he sends Goo-Goo doubles. There must be hundreds of Goo-Goo's doubles around the land; Joe has sent out so many that he lost count long, long ago. He buys them from a big duck-farm, near Hollywood. The owner of the duck-farm is the only man on record who can say to Joe Penner. "Hey, Joe, d'ya wanna buy a duck?" and get away with it.

Soft-hearted, did I say? So soft-hearted that even though he likes Mama's Hungarian duck better than any other dish, he can't eat it if he's ever seen the duck alive. Once Norman Taurog gave him a going-away gift, when Joe left Hollywood to visit his parents in Detroit, before he moved them west. Taurog sent a duck to the train, in a poll-parrot cage.

"That's cruel," said Joe, and had them take the duck out of the cage, and appointed Buddy Vogt to valet the duck all the way to Detroit. There he presented the duck to Mama.

"But, Mama, you mustn't cook it, ever!" he made her promise. Mama said she wouldn't—but Joe has never dared ask Mama what became of the duck. He only knows that the duck did NOT come west with Mama.

is not only convincing and vivid, but in his Dr. John Luke we can see visualized all the country doctors of poetry and prose. In other words, Jean's character creation is after the manner of those master artists, Shakespeare and Dickens; typical not individualistic. And that should merit for him the Academy Award at the very least. If one insignificant fan's suggestion can help him toward that honor—here it is, offered with all my enthusiastic heart.—Marie Brennan, 4094 Wilmington Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Hearts Held for Ransom

WHO'S our newest Romeo of romance? Why, that dashing pirate of the high seas, Errol Flynn. Sabatini's Captain Blood has come to life in all its sea-swept glory. Even our most sophisticated hearts flutter at the daring duelling of this handsome newcomer. Why not cast him as "Scaramouche" or "Robin Hood?" For heaven's sake keep him in historical and he-kan rôles; who wants Captain Blood in a drawing room? Anyhow, here's to Errol—the pirate who's holding all our hearts for ransom.—Dorothea Steffan, 1816 Verdery St., Augusta, Ga.

Just a Kid Again!

of the fun that he didn't have. He didn't foresee that in fulfilling those passionate ambitions he would regain the lost sensations of his own boyhood . . . that he would do something few men ever are able to do . . . that he would enjoy life as much as his own youngsters.

If a man played baseball as a boy, the chances are that he follows the games of the big-league teams today. If he ever played football, you'll find him in some stadium every Saturday in the autumn. If he grew up in horse-racing country, he probably follows the races. Or he likes hockey, because he once wore skates, himself. Or his pulses pound when he watches two men fighting it out with their fists. From his boyhood, every man retains an interest in some particular sport. But Joe E. Brown, who never knew the thrill of participating in any one sport as a youngster, is interested in them all.

HE IS Sport Fan No. 1 of the world today. He knows all of the major-league ball players by their first names. The same goes for most of the big-time football coaches. Swimming champions send him their autographs. He has the driver that Bobby Jones gave him the year Bobby won all four major golf championships. Babe Ruth sent him the bat he used in becoming Home-Run King. Jack Dempsey gave him one of his favorite pairs of boxing gloves. He has an autographed jai-alai from a championship team in Hawaii. In fact, he has a whole trophy room in his home, filled with tributes from his own personal heroes—the sports champions of the world.

Every boy, able to play a sport, idolizes some athlete. Joe, unable to play any sport when he was a boy, developed a hundred idols. He still is a worshiper of athletic heroes. They are the men who have become what every boy would like to be.

One of his close friends is Coach Bill Spaulding of U. C. L. A. (the University of California at Los Angeles)—whose football team Joe has practically adopted for the past five years. Rugged Bill Spaulding sees Joe as most of us never thought of seeing him:

"Joe makes his money as a comedian, but underneath he's sincere, serious—with a passion for athletics. Any kind of athletics.

"He thinks there's nothing that can develop a boy (or a girl, for that matter) more than athletics—win or lose. He isn't the kind who's for you when you win, and against you when you lose. He's for the game. If you win, okay; if you lose, okay; the game's the thing. If you give the game everything you have, the game will give you everything in return. I guess you could probably call that his philosophy of life. A pretty healthy philosophy, if you ask me.

"And he doesn't apply that just to football; he applies it to every sport. You know, he has a baseball team of his own—Joe E. Brown's All Stars. Joe plays second base. Most of the other fellows are studio workers at Warners. They play other amateur teams, and semi-pro teams, around here. And, win or lose, they have a good time for themselves.

"Four or five years ago, Joe spotted a high school kid who looked like a pretty fair ball player—a kid named Mike Frankovich. Joe drafted Mike to play on his team when he wasn't playing on the high school team. And Joe took a great shine to him. Mike was a boy with fine potentialities—an all-around athlete. Joe practically adopted him, took him to his own house to be a sort of older pal for his own two boys. And when Mike came to U. C. L. A., Joe would drop over to see how he was making out. That's how we got acquainted with Joe.

"ALONG with his comedy, Joe is a pretty high-class fellow—with a fine family. He's crazy about kids, and boys enjoy having him around—he's one of them. They all have a lot of respect for him. I guess he's about the best supporter our team has. And he seems to get a lot of fun out of it."

Joe never went to college, never experienced its comradery—until he looked in upon Mike Frankovich at U. C. L. A.

"One of the first things he did when he started coming around," continues Bill Spaulding, "was to give the team a water wagon—a big one, with a hose and a spray. That was a tip-off that Joe liked the boys. And the boys knew he meant it— that it wasn't a gesture. I think that was the year they gave him an honorary letter and a sweater and initiated him into the Blue C Society. And I think that meant almost as much to Joe as a Degree of Doctor of Laws would have.

"He has a pass for life to all U. C. L. A. athletic events, and he sits on the players' bench at the games.

"Joe's own son, Don, is a Freshman at the University now. He's a pal of my boy, Bill. Last fall, he played tackle, but in spring practice he has moved over to the guard position. He's a smart lad and ought to develop into quite a player . . . So should his brother, Joe, Jr. He's bigger than Don, and both of them tower over their Dad, who is only about five feet eight. Young Joe isn't in college; he's at Mercersburg Academy, in Pennsylvania.

"Speaking of speed, I remember one day when we had Joe, Sr., in uniform. He said he had never played football before, but he was willing to learn. Somebody gave him the ball and he ran like the devil, straight for a touchdown. Then the referee called him back for offside, and Joe said he'd save the rest of the runs in his system for 'next time.' He got a kick out of the fact that the boys underestimated him and he got away from them.

"ONE time out at Pomona, he tossed out the first ball—and surprised everybody by doing a back-flip before he tossed it. So I guess he's still in condition."

His house, Spanish and spacious, is on a palm-lined drive in Beverly Hills. It is one of the few movie stars' homes lacking a swimming pool. (Joe belongs to a beach club at Santa Monica, where he has become a proficient swimmer—in surf, which is his idea of something to test a swimmer.) The interior of the house is as comfortable as it is luxurious, and was decorated by William Haines.

Joe has a four-room suite—a bedroom, a dressing-room and bath, a small den, and a trophy room. His bedroom walls bear a covering of light brown suede, which exudes an almost aromatic odor. Exotic at first glance, the room soon becomes surprisingly restful . . . The walls of the small den are lined with framed photographs of Joe in company with various sport celebrities. Remove two of the pictures from the back wall, and you see two openings in the wall—one aperture being for a projection machine, the other a window for the projectionist. (A concealed, fireproof projection room is behind the den.) Pictures are projected through the archway between the den and trophy room onto a screen that comes out from behind a pine panel. The room is "wired for sound."

One wall of the room contains three large ceiling-high glass cabinets. There are three small cabinets in other parts of the room—all containing athletic trophies. Except for autographed World Series baseballs, practically all of the objects were sent to Joe without his asking. And because they came as total surprises, they have an untold value to him.

FOR example, Bobby Jones' famous driver . . . Dizzy Dean's baseball uniform . . . Several footballs used in famous gridiron battles, autographed by the victors . . . The aviation helmet that Frank Hawks was wearing in a nearly fatal crack-up in 1932, while going 200 miles an hour.

And in a handsome old English secretary in his bedroom are some beautifully-bound book-shaped boxes, containing rare old first editions that Joe treasures. Such books as David Copperfield, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, Lord Chesterfield's Letters to His Son. Mute testimonials of his interest in books, in things mental.

On his wide, built-in dressing-table, there is a photograph gallery of his family—eager-eyed Mrs. Brown, sandy-haired Don, dark-haired Joe, Jr., and the two little girls, Mary Elizabeth Ann and Kathryn Frances (a beautiful child whom the Browns adopted to replace the baby they lost).

One of the ten top favorites of the screen . . . one of the most modest and most amusing of men . . . a fine father who is as boyish in spirit as his sons . . . a man who has achieved everything that he wanted to do as a lonely frustrated boy—this man is Mrs. Joe E. Brown's husband.

no doubt, do for herself. She has a will of her own even now, but she also has a remarkable store of reasoning power which I believe her studio work is helping to develop.

Of course, I shall hate that moment when Shirley goes to her first dance, unchaperoned. Yet, I suppose Shirley will be as modern as any other girl. And that means she will want to go about like other girls to parties and dances without parental restraint.

I have tried to inculcate in Shirley a sense of complete confidence in my judgment ever since we began her studio work. She has a little mind of her own on many things and yet we have never clashed on anything seriously because I have learned that it is better to talk things out quietly with a child than to fly off the handle and give out a strict order with little reason behind it.

When Shirley has an idea of her own I always let her tell it her way. If it conflicts with my judgment I try to reason with her. She is an intelligent, understanding little person and we usually come out even. Shirley gives in and I always do, too—a little. It keeps us good friends and we go on from there.

That is the way I hope we shall be when those anxious years come upon me. I know I shall worry, about her, then, just like every other mother does.

Yet it seems to me so many of the tragic clashes between a young girl and her parents might be avoided by gradually developing a sense of comradeship from babyhood.

First, I'd want to be awfully sure of the kind of boy Shirley was going with. Then, if he were a gentleman, I think I'd just give in and let her go out with him. But if I knew definitely there was something wrong with his character or habits, and I'd certainly find out for certain before I mentioned it, I'd try to show Shirley why such an association would be bad for her.

Louise Latimer and Ann Shirley take time out from their respective productions, His Majesty, Bunker Bean and M'Liss, to keep fit with a game of medicine ball

After that, what can any mother do? It's a matter of early training and good luck. No parent can hope to remain a stern monitor to a youngster in the late teens. I've had the experience of dealing with my two boys, Shirley's older brothers, to guide me on that score.

Modern youngsters will run about; that seems part of our times. The only recourse of those conservative-thinking mothers whose children call them "old fashioned" is to train their children early and carefully, and then leave the rest to Fate.

Maybe Shirley will marry early and settle down to being some nice young man's wife. She tells me often that she is going to have three babies of her own when she grows up. Shirley is really a little domestic homebody at heart, loving her dolls and her dishes.

Listening to stories is her favorite recreation. She may develop into a writer. Or she may continue to be an actress. Whatever she chooses, I shall try to give her the best possible training to achieve her ambition.

PEOPLE have asked me often if I plan a college education for Shirley. And I can only say that if she shows a desire for the more academic things later on, I shall encourage it.

Yes, I have heard it said that college does not fit a girl for happy marriage, but I can't quite reconcile that idea with the charming college girls I see around me everywhere. They do say a college education makes a girl very independent and that, of course, is not one of the qualities which tends toward a quiet home and peaceful, happy marriage. I do believe the modern girl has a way of her own to complement these two virtues; a college education and independence of spirit, with the lasting beauty and fineness of happy marriage.

SHIRLEY will probably like the arts rather than the sciences. She has displayed a keen sense of color appreciation. And with her studio experience, if she does not continue later as an actress, she will be well equipped for any number of other branches of the industry.

In any event, I do think any girl should have some sort of interesting work during those restless years between school and marriage. It helps to develop her mind, and not only gives her practical training of tremendous value in the event she has to earn her own living later in life, but also helps her to think clearly. That clarity of vision may make possible a sensible judgment on whether to marry young or wait until THE one young man comes along.

But whatever Shirley chooses, I'll leave her decision to herself. I shall have guided Shirley as a baby to the best of my ability; life and destiny I suppose will work out the pattern as it does for us all.

Dick Foran and his pony are in high spirits—but then the red-head western star is always merry. He's a former football player from Princeton nothing would please them more than being married to Eleanor but that unfortunately they aren't, there is always an argument. The fans insist they're just being jealous husbands and trying to keep them out of the house. They just "know if Bill—or Dick, as the case may be—would tell Eleanor they were calling she would come out in a minute."

The Great Powell Mixup!

The payoff came recently when a man purporting to be from the internal revenue department called on Dick. There had been a lot of talk in the papers about Bill cutting down his pictures to two a year because when he made more his income soared into a higher bracket and there was little left for him.

The seeming tax collector informed Dick that his tax returns for the previous year showed no such income as the newspapers reported him to have received and there was going to be plenty of sand raised. He intimated that for a consideration he might be able to "fix" things.

He recognized the man as a faker. "I've been confused with Bill Powell before," he said, "and I've always felt pretty flattered. But I'll be hanged if I'm flattered enough to pay his income tax for him. You wait here and I'll call Bill and his lawyer and make an appointment."

The mention of the lawyer was enough. Dick's visitor muttered apologies for the inconvenience to which he had put Dick and said he would let "the office" arrange the appointment with Bill. Nothing has been heard of him since.

This recital could go on for weeks but the foregoing gives you a rough idea of the comedy of errors resulting when three personable and successful people happen to have the same surname. Differences in sex, Christian name, family tree, appearance and personality mean nothing to the fans and the three little P's are resigned to a life of confusion—and explanations which are forgotten or ignored as soon as they're made.

sensitive, or for anyone who is in too much of a hurry to wait for the longer drying period demanded by the ruby colored product.

The Odorono Company has a comparatively new product—a deodorant powder to be dusted all over the body after your bath. Fragrant, cooling and mildly antiseptic, it helps to prevent that sticky, uncomfortably feeling so common on stifling days. It comes in a large pink and white dusting powder box (with a gay pink puff enclosed) for $1 and also a pink and white shaker can, grand for travelling, at 50 cents.

You can be sure that those lovely legs of Carole Lombard's are as smoothly attractive close-up as they are at a distance; for, like all the stars, she understands the importance of removing superfluous hair. De Wans Hair Remover is a reliable product that is safe, easy to use and thorough in action. A perfumed white powder, it must be mixed with water to form a paste, spread evenly on the superfluous hair, left for three minutes or so, and then rinsed away. De Wans Hair Remover is inexpensive, too. Only 50 cents a bottle.

SUMMER make-up troubles, often the most troublesome of all, can usually be banished by the right type of adherent powder base. If your skin is oily or normal, you'll find that Colonial Dames Beautifier will keep your make-up smooth and fresh looking for hours. It is made with almond meal, almond oil, honey and lemon (all natural skin beautifiers) and provides a dull, greaseless mat for your face powder. To apply, you moisten a tiny sponge, rub this over the Beautifier, and then smooth it evenly on your face and throat. A jar costs $1.

The Kurlash Company has brought out an Eye Beauty Brush that makes the application of eye shadow ridiculously easy. No more uncertain dabs at your eyelids with a smeary fingertip! By using this brush you can apply just enough shadow—the secret of all artistic eye make-up! It is useful, too, for darkening the brows. You just dip it into mascara, then go over the eyebrows very lightly. The Kurlash Company has also introduced a new color of Shadette (their trade name for eye shadow), making a total of twelve lovely tints. Mahogany Shadette, the newest, is grand on brunettes, girls with dark red hair and on many deeply suntanned gals. With Gold Shadette over Mahogany, you can be the toast of any evening party . . . All colors of Shadette are priced at 75 cents each.

A mascara that goes on quickly and easily and doesn't make your eyelashes look "frozen stiff" is Tattoo for the Ladies, made by the Tattoo Lipstick people. This mascara in cream form comes in a silvery tube with the giddy Tattoo sirens decorating it. Tattoo for the Lashes is available in black, brown and blue and costs only 50 cents. You'll find it waterproof, harmless and non-smarting.

If you have a personal beauty problem or wish to inquire further concerning any of the products mentioned in this article, write to Janet Lynn, SCREEN BOOK, 1501 Broadway, New York City, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope (U. S. Postage Only) for a prompt reply.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief of Pain

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and waste out of the blood. If they don't pass 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing.

If you have trouble with frequent bladder passages, with scanty amount which often smart and burn, the 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes and dizziness.

Don't wait for serious trouble. Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills—used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

From Extra Girl to Stardom

named Irving Thalberg had seen a picture called The Stealers and had jotted down in a little memorandum book the name of Norma Shearer. "Might be good picture bet," his notation said. Some time later he was in a position to offer her a contract.

That SOS from Hollywood convinced Norma that miracles still happened. And a contract—at $110 per week—certainly had all of the earmarks of stardom. She assumed that there would be a reception committee waiting for her when she arrived in Los Angeles. She had seen pictures in the rotogravure of actresses arriving in the movie capital, being presented with enormous bouquets of roses. She mentally rehearsed the speech she would make.

BUT Norma arrived in Los Angeles, unheralded and unsung. No camera recorded the event. There wasn't even a messenger boy from the studio to tell her where to go.

She had to inquire at the information desk in the station to find out how to get to Hollywood.

To say that Norma Shearer's ability as an actress was recognized the moment she stepped before a motion picture camera would be a gross misstatement. In fact, the reverse was true. She had been brought to the coast for the lead in a picture called The Wanters but the tests which were made of her were so awful that the lead was finally given to Marie Prevost and Norma was assigned an unimportant bit part.

If she had been one to give up easily she would doubtless have kissed her picture career goodbye then and there. But she was determined to be a star—and a star she would be.

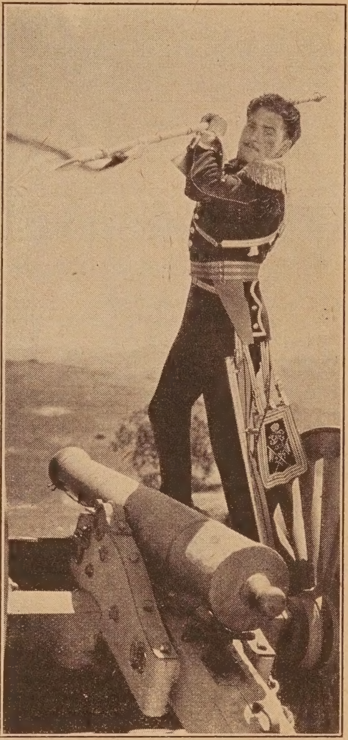
How true it is that some utterly incongruous incident frequently plays a part in changing the course of our lives. Norma tells of such an incident which happened when she was making her second Hollywood picture.

"I was supposed to be a headstrong, pleasure-mad girl who was full of fire and fight. I was so inexperienced, however, and suffered so from camera fright that I was giving a performance that was absolutely blah.

"'You don't seem to have any idea what it's all about,' the director told me. 'Can't you put a little life into it?'

"When lunch was called I went to my dressing room, discouraged and sick at heart. I realized that I was giving a dreadful performance and the worst of it was I didn't know what to do about it. I stood at my dressing room window looking across at the Selig zoo. The keeper was cleaning the cages. In one cage there was a coyote which the keeper had chased into the corner of his cage with a broom. In the other cage was a lion. The coyote was scared and he cringed before the broom. The broom, however, didn't frighten the lion. He roared at the keeper and stood his ground.

"Incongruously enough, the coyote reminded me of myself. And suddenly I decided that I was going to cease being a coyote. Instead, I'd be a lion! The lion had self-confidence. That's what I lacked. I needed to believe in myself—to convince myself that I was the girl I was trying to portray. I went back to the set determined to show the director what I could do. I didn't exactly roar like a lion but I felt very lion-hearted. And while this may have been a sort of whistling-in-the-dark technique it worked. The result was that when I finished the scene that had previously caused so much trouble, the director patted me on the back and said: 'Now you're really getting your teeth into it. That was swell.'"



Errol Flynn, the romantic young Irishman who skyrocketed to stardom in Captain Blood, has a rôle even more dashing and costumes even more colorful as the hero of the Warner Brothers spectacle-drama, Charge of the Light Brigade

That bit of praise went a long way toward helping Norma generate more self-confidence.

Norma Shearer is one star of whom it can be rightly said, "She pulled herself up by her bootstraps." What it took in courage, will power and nerve only Norma herself will ever know. She gave her undivided physical, emotional and mental powers to her work. In three years her salary jumped from $110 to $750 per week. Her best picture during that time was He Who Gets Slapped with John Gilbert and Lon Chaney. It was, in fact, a smash hit and started her on her way to the very top.

The Norma Shearer of today embodies all that most girls would like to be. She is colorful, charming, provocative. Through the years she learned to accent her every asset and minimize every liability. And the secret of her success is that she has never cluttered her mind with non-essentials. She knew what she wanted and focussed every ounce of energy she had on the attainment of that goal.

She even got the man she wanted! Norma has often told the story of her first meeting with that brilliant young executive, Irving Thalberg. She thought he was an office boy. She says that she fell in love with him the day she met him, and she admits that she deliberately set her cap for him. The fact that she was a nobody on the screen at that time and he was, even then, an important figure in the picture world did not keep Norma from aiming high. They met at parties occasionally. And when this happened Norma did not attempt to disguise her feelings. Not that she threw herself at his feet or anything like that. She merely let him know that she admired him and liked him. Soon he began to seek her company. They had lunch together on the lot. They attended previews. And finally he asked her for a date. That was the beginning. . . .

And then one day, just as Norma had mentally planned it, Irving Thalberg asked her to be his wife.

Norma has managed her marriage as successfully as she has managed her career. She is wise enough to know that the male of the species likes to be the head of his household. So at home she is never the star. Instead she is Mrs. Thalberg. And as such it is her job to see that the household runs smoothly. She is the gracious hostess . . . a wife of whom any husband would be proud. When she has business to discuss with Mr. Thalberg she makes an appointment, through his secretary, to see him at his office—the same as any other M-G-M star would do.

Before going into Romeo and Juliet she spent months studying the role she was to play. She studied dancing with Agnes de Mille so that she would be able to do the waltz exactly as it was danced in Juliet's day. She acquired some four hundred volumes of Shakespeare, including eighteen versions of Romeo and Juliet. These she studied assiduously.

Two of Norma's most outstanding characteristics are her enthusiasm and her spontaneity. "I think there is nothing duller than a placidly disinterested woman," she says.

She loves yellow roses. Collects crystal glassware for a hobby. Likes raw vegetable salads. And thin sandwiches spread with jam and yeast. She never forgets a name. And is one of the very few stars who frankly admits that she enjoys being recognized in public places. She's a good tennis player. A good sailor. And is proud of the fact that she can stand on her head. And what do you suppose her idea of luxury is? Breakfast in bed!

Remember one little thing

...or this may not come true!

ON your vacation you want to be at the top of your stride. You want to be at the peak of your form.

But it isn't always easy. For, as you know, a vacation means a change of diet, change of water, travel . . . and you'll often find that you need a laxative.

Now, just remember this one thing—don't let a harsh, over-acting cathartic spoil things for you. Strong purgatives are apt to throw your whole system out of rhythm ... upsetting your digestion, causing stomach pains—even nausea.

WHY A CORRECTLY TIMED LAXATIVE IS PREFERABLE

When you choose Ex-Lax you are choosing a laxative that works g-r-a-d-u-a-l-l-y . . . that takes 6 to 8 hours to be effective. In other words, a laxative that's correctly timed. Its action is thorough. Yet Ex-Lax is so mild and so gentle that it won't cause you even a moment's uneasiness. There'll be no shock to your system, no pain or disturbance of any kind.

DELICIOUS CHOCOLATE FLAVOR

And here's another nice thing about Ex-Lax . . . it tastes just like delicious, creamy chocolate. Buy Ex-Lax at any drug store. Tuck it in your traveling bag. There's a 10c size, and a still more economical size at 25c.

When Nature forgets — remember

EX-LAX

THE ORIGINAL CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

MYSELF As I See Me—Una Merkel

Beginning a series of stories in which stars turn tattle-tale on themselves

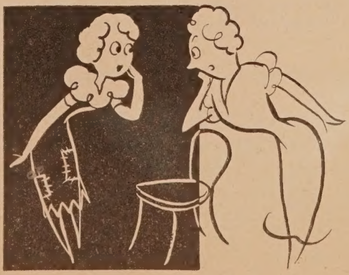
I'M ALWAYS having the experience of meeting people who sit around and wait for me to make the sort of flippant wisecrack that the characters I play make in pictures . . . why, oh why can't I make Dorothy Parkerish retorts unless some script writer has them all written out for me? . . . oh well, I can cook! . . . and maybe I wouldn't enjoy the flippant parts so much if I were that type myself . . .

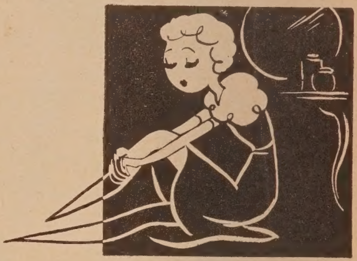
I'm afraid I'm just a home girl . . . thank heaven, it doesn't show in pictures . . . I congratulate myself every day because I have a job that I love and because I'm living with the people I care for most in the world . . . my husband and parents . . . and because my husband is an engineer . . . I like mechanically minded men . . . they awe me . . .

I have all the superstitions there are, and a few pet ones of my own . . . I consider five and seven my lucky numbers . . . eight my unlucky one . . . don't ask me why . . .

I make myself do things by writing them down and confronting myself with them until they're done . . . I always try to have either five or seven tasks outlined for myself daily . . . if I have eight things in mind, I try to think of another one, because of my superstition about eight . . . and I usually end up by dropping one, so there'll be seven . . . oh well . . .

The only thing I don't adore about picture making is getting up early . . . other pet aversions are going to bed, telephoning, and irresponsible people . . .





People say I'm easy to get along with . . . maybe because I'm an easy-going gal from Kentucky . . . Kentucky is one of my favorite boasts . . . how young looking my mother is, is another . . .

I always sit on the floor to put on my stockings . . . and I'll wear a favorite dress until friends and family scream, while my other things hang neglected in the closet . . .

I like to have people around . . . my most intimate friends are women . . . another pet aversion—people who say girls aren't capable of real friendships . . .

I worry about every picture while I'm making it . . . when it's done, I start worrying about the next . . . the night I made my first radio appearance I had the jitters so bad I couldn't eat my dinner . . . I still have the jitters with each one . . .

I like nightclubbing occasionally . . . if I had to go out dancing every night I'd be bored . . . most of my evenings are spent quietly at home . . . I like reading and talking . . . and a few dear friends . . . I don't smoke . . . and chocolate creams are my favorite vice . . .

When I had my tonsils out I read a book called Brothers in the West, and did myself no good at all because I insisted on telling everyone to read it and why . . . now I've gone and forgotten the author.

THE SUNNY SIDE of BEAUTY

Take a note from the popular song: "From the top of your head to the tips of your toes . . ." and groom yourself to perfection with a few simple beauty aids—as June Travis has done

IN WINTER, when frocks and hats mean so much, you may be able to create an impression with your clothes alone. But in summer, when heiress and working girl alike spend most of their time in casual cotton shorts or bathing suits, you've got to depend on your figure, skin, hair and make-up to inspire envy in other women and admiration in men.

Add to this, the fact that the sunlight can search out more defects than any spotlight, and you will realize just how important it is to be meticulously well-groomed from head to toe all summer!

Once you realize this, the rest is easy. Any beauty editor knows that it's harder to make a "well-favored" girl who pooh-poohs beauty edicts, beautiful, than it is to make a plain girl who is eager to learn, pretty. . . . That's why many a girl who was unattractive at eighteen is a lovely creature at thirty and why many another girl who had lots of natural beauty at eighteen, is a frump by the time she is twenty-five.

For those of you who are eager to learn, I am offering in this article some practical advice on the care of hair, skin, hands and feet in summertime. And hair comes first. Shampoo it oftener in warm weather. If you are pressed for time and dislike the idea of more frequent shampooing, you'll find one of the soluble-in-water oil shampoos a great time-saver. And a lighter wave lotion will hasten drying time, too.

Wear your hair shorter and brushed upward from the back of the neck and sides of the face. It's smarter that way, easier to tend to and a thousand times more comfortable and cool. . . . With a permanent wave in the ends, you can easily achieve a halo-like roll all around your head. A coming style, a cool, youthful style, and one that can be adapted to any shape face.

When you are outdoors for a very long time, particularly in the afternoon, wear a hat to protect your hair from the oil-sapping and bleaching effects of the sun. There are all sorts of smart beach and garden hats that are light and airy but protective . . . An invisible film of brilliantine will prevent salt water from having its well-known corrosive effect on the hair structure . . . A warm olive oil treatment once a week will help restore lost oils to the hair, and a thorough brushing twice each day will remove excess dust, sand and salt and will impart lustre.

Lots of soap and water and mild astringents will give your skin that fresh, smooth-textured look a youngster's has. Arms and legs that have come out of winter-hiding looking rough and coarse-textured, need a reconditioning routine that consists of scrubbing with warm water and a lathered brush twice a day, and the application of a softening lotion. Even though you have, like a wise girl, used a suntan oil or cream, apply plenty of rich cream on your skin after you've been out in the sun. This will prevent it from becoming leathery and lined, by and by.

For summer make-up that is flawless and cool, use a lighter, thinner powder base. If you've been using a cream during the winter, try one of the liquid powders that coat your skin coolly, thinly, giving it a new smoothness . . . A little less powder is always a good summertime rule for those whose skins are inclined to become damp and oily ten minutes after make-up is applied. A little less cheek rouge (your own coloring is stepped up) and more lipstick is also the order of the day. And let your lipstick be a bright yellow-red or rust shade, to tone in with your tanned skin.

Your eyes need special care in summer because the sun is hard on them and because they collect more dust and debris then. Wear dark glasses whenever you are in the sun without a hat for more than a few minutes. Use a cleansing, refreshing eye lotion at least twice a day. And ward off the results of squinting (crow's feet), by applying plenty of emollient eye cream.

In summer, a weekly pedicure is just as necessary as a weekly manicure to prevent social ostracism, and in-between touch-ups of polish are in order. Another reminder for foot and hand beauty is: apply your suntan oil or tan-preventive on these extremities, too, so that they won't vary in tone . . . Don't forget that hand lotion on your feet will have the same effect it has on your hands . . . And be sure to match your toe-nail and finger-nail polish. The smartest shades this summer are the dusty or rusty tones, those with a tannish bronze cast that harmonizes with your suntan.

In those now-familiar glass jars, with blue-green tops, are two new summertime shades of Pond's Face Powder called "Sunlight Shades." They are blended to flatter the girl with a light, medium or dark suntan—or no tan at all—and they really do it, even though they aren't brownish in tone, as you would expect. "Glare-proof," Pond's calls them, because they give your skin a soft, natural warmth even at high noon on a blazing day . . . These two new shades (Light and Dark) of "Sunlight" replace Pond's Rose Brunette and Dark Brunette.

The contents are as nice as the container, in the case of Sofskin Creme, a new finishing and protective preparation that has a host of uses. Rubbed on the skin generously before exposure, this soft white cream will prevent sunburn. As a powder base, it goes on smoothly, quickly

"Keep an eye on the sun"

says Jane Heath

● WATCH Old Sol especially during the summer days, because he does things to your eyes—makes them look pale and squinty when you're in glaring light, playing on the beach or winning a golf match. That's why, if you're smart, you'll outwit him with KURLASH eye make-up and bring out the natural loveliness of your eyes.

First, slip your eyelashes into KURLASH. It's a clever little instrument that curls your eyelashes in 30 seconds and requires no heat, cosmetics or practice. KURLASH is really a beauty necessity, for by curling your lashes your eyes look larger and reveal their full beauty. In the sunlight your curled lashes throw flattering, subtle shadows that make your eyes glamourous! Don't be without KURLASH. Buy one today, at your nearest department or drug store, for only $1.

● Lashtint, the perfumed liquid mascara, is ideal for swimming days because it doesn't crack, stiffen, weep or rub off. Apply it while the lashes are being curled, by touching the little glass rod to them as they are held in the rubber bows of your KURLASH. In black, brown, green and blue. . . . $1

● Shadette, the non-theatrical eye shadow, comes in 12 daytime and evening colors, including gold and silver shades that are grand finishing touches, to be applied alone or over your preferred color. Try Shadette some romantic, moonlight night. . . . 75c

● Try Twissors—the new tweezers with scissor-handles, curved to permit full vision. They're marvelously efficient, and only 25c.

Fredric March as the young Anthony swears eternal devotion to Angela, the cook's daughter, played by Olivia de Havilland

Anthony Adverse

THE legion readers of Hervey Allen's popular novel will be pleased with the film version. Longer than most pictures, it ends with Anthony's departure for Mexico—approximately half way through the original. Warner Bros. are considering the plan of filming the remaining portion of the book as a sequel. The story is told in five principal portions. First, the dramatic love affair between the unhappy bride of a nobleman and her Irish lover—the birth of Anthony and his placement as a foundling at the door of a convent. Second, the friendless boy of ten is apprenticed to Bonnyfeather, his own grandfather, where he finds companionship in Angela, the cook's daughter. Third, newly married to Angela he goes to Havana, then to Africa where, after losing contact with Bonnyfeather and his wife, he becomes a slave trader. Fourth, he returns to Italy and France where the nobleman again tries to take his life—and to his wife, Angela, who shows him the son of whose existence he was unaware. Last, his wife, now a famous singer and a favorite of Napoleon, asks him to take their child to America with him. The picture ends with Anthony, his son beside him, sadly facing a new horizon. Always there is a feeling of brooding fate which dogs the life of the so-aptly named Adverse. The large supporting cast is unusually good and gives the whole a feeling of great sincerity. Anita Louise deserves mention for her excellence in a short but telling sequence. Fredric March and Olivia de Havilland turn in fine performances. Because of the necessity for telling so much story in so little time, it sometimes seems a bit disjointed and episodic, but whether or not you got through the book you'll enjoy it.—Produced by Warner Bros.

A princess in disguise is wooed by a king not in disguise. Grace Moore and Franchot Tone

The King Steps Out

IT'S worth anyone's stepping out to see. Grace Moore's voice and the music are second to her talents as a comediénne. It's a musical comedy story, unbelievable, but gay and romantic. Franchot Tone is the young emperor Franz Joseph of Austria, whose engagement is announced to the daughter of King Max of Bavaria. To save her sister from an unwelcome royal marriage, Grace journeys to the palace and, disguised as a dressmaker, has an all-night lark with the emperor. Imagine his relief when Walter Connolly informs him the dressmaker is his princess daughter and they can be wed. Superb support is given by two ace comedians Herman Bing and Walter Connolly. Although the music is Fritz Kreisler's, it is not stressed and remains only incidental to the general hilarity of the piece. Tone has curly hair, a fascinatingly wicked glint in his eye that will make feminine hearts flutter.—Produced by Columbia.

Shirley Temple is a run-away picked up by Jack Haley and Alice Faye

Poor Little Rich Girl
★★★ if Shirley is a favorite
★ if she is not

BETTER than her past couple of pictures, Shirley is almost the whole show—does all of her tricks and does them well. She seems completely natural . . sings four catchy numbers: "Oh My Goodness," "But Definitely," "You've Gotta Eat Your Spinach" and "When I'm With You." She's the daughter of a wealthy soap manufacturer who wanders from home, adopts an organ grinder for the night and next day is picked up by Alice Faye and Jack Haley—a couple of indigent vaudevillians. She joins them in a radio audition, winning a contract to broadcast for her father's soap rival. Papa hears her and her vacation from home ends. Gloria Stuart and Michael Whalen are good as her parents.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

As one Woman to another

A frank intimate chat

BY

MARY PAULINE CALLENDER

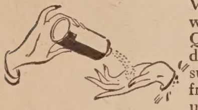
authority on feminine hygiene

Let me tell you about these personal hygiene accessories, especially welcome during hot summer months. You have my word that they warrant your complete confidence.

For Utmost Comfort

Perhaps a friend has told you about the pinless Kotex belt. It's truly a new design for living! Dainty secure clasps prevent slipping. The belt is flat and thin, adjusts to fit the figure. This gives self-balance—you can bend every-which-way without harness-like restraint, without being waist-line conscious! Yet this extra comfort and safety costs nothing extra. Your store has 2 types: Kotex Wonderform at 25c and the DeLuxe at 35c. "Cheap" belts can't compare, because inferior grades of elastic fray and wear out—make for the discomfort every woman dreads.

For Personal Daintiness



What relief, in broiling weather, to know that Quest, the positive deodorant powder, assures all-day-long body freshness! And being unscented it can't interfere with your perfume. You'll want Quest for under-arms, feet, and for use on sanitary napkins. It soothes—doesn't clog pores or irritate the skin. Buy Quest and you'll agree with me that 35c is indeed a small price for the personal daintiness every woman treasures.

For the Last Days

Here's something new that's gaining favor with many women. Invisible sanitary protection of the tampon type—and the name is Fibs. They are a product of the famous Kotex laboratories—the best recommendation I know for hygienic safety. Perhaps you'll want to try Fibs when less protection is needed. They're absolutely secure—may conveniently be carried in your purse for emergency measures. The box of 12 is 25c.

Three Gifts for You! One is a booklet by a physician, "Facts about Menstruation." The others are "Marjorie May's 12th Birthday" (for girls of 12) and "Marjorie May Learns About Life" (for girls in their teens). They give facts in a simple, motherly manner for you to tell your daughter. All are free—write me for the ones you want. Mary Pauline Callender, Room 1401, 919 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago.

De Lawd tends his sheep and many more troublesome earthly matters

The Green Pastures

QUITE unlike anything screened before is this picturization of the Deep South Negro's interpretation of the Bible, its stories and characters. You will chuckle, but your laughter will be tender because it will recall your own childish ideas of the Bible. All the characters are Negroes. Rex Ingram plays with humor and dignity De Lawd, a gentle preacher occasionally given to terrible wrath, sometimes "r'ars back and passes miracles." Below heaven, where all the black angels wear tremendous white wings and life is a perpetual picnic, is the newly created earth where there is a lot of heavy sin, and which causes De Lawd a good deal of trouble. The Angel Gabriel is his aide. Noah-and-the-Ark incident is rich in humor. There is magnificence and beauty in the music by the Hall Johnson choir. It's a masterpiece of its kind and no one should miss it.—Produced by Warner Bros.

Fredric March and Warner Baxter rival for the love of June Lang

Bob Montgomery breakfasts Rosalind Russell and she gets him into plenty of trouble

Road To Glory

THIS is one of the finest war films and Fredric March, Warner Baxter, Lionel Barrymore and Gregory Ratoff are the leading characters—with June Lang, a nurse, as the bone of contention between March and Baxter. Touching is the restrained behavior of brave men under fire; fascinating, the spectacle of men laughing in the face of disaster. You'll never forget the scene where Ratoff is reading a letter—halts, listens intently for the sound of a pick which has been going on steadily until that moment. The horrors and humors in the trenches are vividly portrayed.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Trouble For Two
★★½

IT IS fantastic, macabre and impish. Adapted from R. L. Stevenson's Suicide Club, it preserves the flavor of the original. Robert Montgomery is Prince Florizel who is led into weird yet amusing adventure in trying to help a strange lady—Rosalind Russell, who, although he doesn't know it, is the princess he is supposed to marry. He is lured into a suicide club (whose president, Reginald Owen, will make you shiver with his dirty work) composed of people wishing to die; there, the lady is chosen to do away by sinister means with the prince. Then the excitement begins.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Kay Francis as the famous "Lady With a Lamp" tends Billy Mauch

White Angel

KAY FRANCIS characterizes Florence Nightingale as we have always imagined her; young, burning with a compassion for suffering humanity. Vital, a truly great bit of acting, the more so because it marks Kay's departure from the sophisticated, glamour rôles she usually plays. We see her in her luxurious home, fretting about the ills of the world which she cannot cure. We see the dawn of her resolution—her struggles against the opposition of the men doctors to whom women nurses are anathema. Her services to the wounded in the Crimean War.—still in the face of opposition—and the final capitulation of public opinion in her favor. Billy Mauch, as a youngster caught in the toils of war, turns in a fine performance, as do Ian Hunter, Nigel Bruce, Henry O'Neill, Donald Crisp and Donald Woods. Everyone who has heard of Florence Nightingale—as who hasn't?—will enjoy seeing her come to life in this capable impersonation.—Produced by Warner Bros.

Love blooms while the train waits. Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sidney

Fury

STARTLING in theme—the problem of mob fury—this picture packs a wallop. Spencer Tracy is arrested on circumstantial evidence as a kidnaper, and an hysterical group intent on lynching the prisoner succeeds in burning down the jail. The innocent man escapes, unknown to the mob. Transformed from a tolerant, peace-loving man by the display of ruthlessness on the part of the crowd, he vows vengeance and his brothers put twenty-two murderers on trial for his life while he hears court proceedings over a sound hook-up as he hides nearby. There is dramatic finish. Sylvia Sidney aids Tracy in building the piece to a high emotional pitch. Some of the characters are less well developed than they might be, but on the whole the cast (Walter Abel, Bruce Cabot, Frank Albertson, et al) is creditable. It is timely and well worth attention.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Read this interesting story about Hollywood's new man-of-the-hour in the August issue of MOTION PICTURE. Hollywood's other new heart throb—Errol Flynn—answers the question most frequently asked about him, "Can Hollywood Hold Errol Flynn?" Other absorbing stories are: "Don't Want Anything Too Much," says Jean Arthur, "Which Stars Are Doomed By Color?" and "Did I Get What I Wanted From Life?" asks Ginger Rogers. Also in August MOTION PICTURE are big star stories covering Clark Gable, Greta Garbo, Steffi Duna, Francis Lederer, Fay Wray and Gail Patrick.

Bullets Or Ballots
★★½

THIS isn't a story about gangsters, but the "inside" on how they work—interestingly and excitingly told. Edward Robinson is a smart cop who, to all appearances, is tossed off the force. He even punches the chief in the face in a public place to make it convincing. Thereupon he is propositioned by a gang leader to join their crew. This enables our hero to go into all the gyp rackets in the town: the slot machines, the payments extracted from farm products handlers before freight cars can be unloaded, etc. After the mob suffers from raids they become suspicious that the new member is an informer but Eddie keeps on until he learns that the forces behind the city's corruption are three highly respected businessmen. Joan Blondell supplies what there is of love interest. One complaint—the piece seems full of men starting cars, striding in and out of rooms. Humphrey Bogart and Barton MacLane are good support.—Produced by Warner Bros.

Private Number

THE most beautifully matched screen lovers seen in many a day are Loretta Young and Robert Taylor, who make this picture a romantic hit. Loretta comes as a servant to Taylor's home where Basil Rathbone (who will be hissed loudly for his viciousness and his dishonorable intentions toward the girl) is the butler. Befriended by another maid, Patsy Kelly, Loretta accompanies her to a dance hall, becomes innocently involved in a questionable situation. When Taylor comes home from college, he meets our pretty maid, falls in love with her and they marry secretly. Butler Rathbone, furious at having his advances repulsed, almost succeeds in breaking up the marriage and ruining the girl's life—but not quite. Patsy Kelly and Joe Lewis provide swell comedy. Monroe Owsley, Marjorie Gateson and Jane Darwell contribute fine bits. Women especially will like this.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Girl Of The Ozarks

NOT sensational, but appealing in a quiet way. Another little girl comes up for stardom—Virginia Weidler, who plays a little mountaineer, branded as incorrigible. She lies colorfully to her teacher—and lies tenderly to her sick mother, prays in an original way to the Lord for special favors. She is sent to a state institution and after she has jerked many tears and some laughter from the audience everything comes out all right. Virginia puts to shame many adult actors for she is entirely convincing. Henrietta Crosman plays Granny, a pungent, rifle-totin' hill woman. Others are Leif Erickson, Elizabeth Russell. It's made unusual by the efforts of little Virginia, who carries the whole picture on her shoulders.—Produced by Paramount.

ALMOST up to their last co-starrer, Hands Across the Table, Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray make the most of this new film, which is a light satirical comedy with a murder mystery thrown in for good measure. Carole is a Swedish princess with a comical accent; she plays the character like a caricature of one of our best-known foreign actresses. In reality, Carole is a chorus girl bent on crashing Hollywood with her disguise. Alison Skipworth is her chaperon. On shipboard she meets Fred, an orchestra leader. A blackmailer is slain, and though there are five famous detectives aboard it takes Freddie to find the true culprit. The story is a little difficult to follow in spots, but it isn't important to your enjoyment of the fun.—Produced by Paramount.

Alison Skipworth and Carole Lombard are amusing imposters

Fatal Lady

DOUBLY worthwhile because it has a genuinely mysterious murder plot and is also a fine musical picture, featuring Mary Ellis, who has a lovely voice and is beautiful besides. Mary is the fatal lady whose suitors meet death. At the end it is disclosed that the music master is the death-dealer intent on doing away with every man who becomes enamored of his protegé. Walter Pidgeon does well as the elder brother to luckless Norman Foster who is killed. Finally the big brother capitulates to the lady's charm. A large part of the excellence of this piece is the operatic background—and the music is handled in a novel manner.—Produced by Wanger-Paramount.

Dracula's Daughter
★★★ if you like hair raisers —less if you don't

THIS is one of the best chillers yet produced. It is based on the legend of the human vampire. Relentless, with mounting suspense and horror is the clash of mental powers between Otto Kruger, a psychiatrist and Dracula's daughter, dead for 200 years but preying on the living, who wants release from her evil spell. The psychologist battles for his own life and the life of his lively and lovely secretary. Gloria Holden is impressive as the lady vampire—her exotic appearance, voice and reactions keep the fantastic mood sustained. Marguerite Churchill, Irving Pichel, Nan Gray and E. E. Clive play their parts neatly.—Produced by Universay.

Bunker Bean
★★½

AN INTERESTING young newcomer, Owen Davis, Jr., is presented in a familiar story—Harry Leon Wilson's opus which makes its third appearance on the screen. Owen is a downtrodden youth suffering from an inferiority complex. He seeks the aid of a fortune teller and is informed that he is a reincarnation of Napoleon and Ram Tah, an Egyptian king. With this knowledge to bolster him up, he woos the daughter of the crabbed boss, Robert McWade, and finally, after much amusing difficulty, gets the price he wants for his airplane patent. Louise Latimer is satisfactory as the boss's daughter. Davis is swell as the timid soul transformed and his perfectly timed performance provokes many laughs.—Produced by RKO-Radio.

The latest news gathered where cinema players talk among themselves about the affairs of their fellow stars

Look out for eggs! The camera snapped just as a heckler raised his arm to toss eggs at Vic McLaglen as he printed his hands in the court of the Chinese Theatre at an elaborate ceremony. The man was arrested but later released TAMMANY YOUNG, famous for years as a gate crasher and the last four years playing character rôles in pictures, was a favorite of Bill Fields and appeared in every picture Bill made at Paramount. When Bill started to make Poppy Tammany was over-solicitous about Bill's health and took special care of Bill. Tammany confided to friends that Bill was so ill he feared he never would complete the picture.

But Bill did. And the night the picture was completed Tammany Young died in his sleep.

ROSALIND RUSSELL is one film player who gave of her own money to break down a quaint Hollywood custom, to wit, the exorbitant charges which property owners usually tack on a tenant when they vacate an apartment or house. Miss Russell occupied a Hollywood home for a year. When she left the owner presented a bill for close to $600, claiming that amount for damages to furniture. Usually film people pay to avoid unfavorable publicity. Not so Rosalind. She went into court and the learned Judge decided that about $28 would be enough to settle all actual damages. Now others are prepared to go into court and the alleged "gyp" seems doomed.

THE VERY newest tidbit regarding the doings of Carole and Clark concerns the 1922 model T Ford which Carole presented to Gable last St. Valentine's day. She had this ancient open-air flivver painted white—with red hearts splashed over it and his initials, C. G., prominent in bright colors. He topped her joke by driving it around town and now has had it rebuilt and a powerful motor installed. It will go 115 miles an hour and he says he will try it out on Muroc Dry Lake—a desert flat where many speed cars are tested.

FREDDIE BARTHOLOMEW'S family is in Hollywood. Despite legal proceedings, the objective was for Freddie's parents and his two sisters, girls aged fourteen and sixteen respectively, to be reunited here, and part of the settlement must mean that the boy's sisters be given a chance in pictures.

SHIRLEY TEMPLE is having her diet watched these days. Little Goldilocks has been growing a bit too rotund. Her strenuous work-play-study routine has kept her in perfect health and gaiety.

STRANGE how much at variance are the viewpoints some actresses have on certain matters. Bette Davis, recently awarded the Gold Statuette for the best acting of the year, prizes the award more than anything she has ever owned.

Helen Hayes, who won the same award a few years ago, uses her Statuette for a door stop in her New York home.

WHEN Rudy Valleé's wife, Fay Webb, divorces him, he will probably marry Alice Faye. If he doesn't then one of Alice's brothers just doesn't know as much about the family's affairs as he pretends to know.

A FEW years ago Rudy Valleé purchased a magnificent estate in Beverly Hills primarily for a home for himself and his wife Fay Webb. Then came trouble and the house was never occupied although it is said to represent an investment of $100,000 on the part of the crooner. A few days since a real estate man tried to interest Mae West in purchasing the place. Miss West decided to look at the place and later

WHAT TO DO IF YOU ARE Weak, Rundown Nervous Skinny!

Get Kelpamalt's Natural Iodine into Your Blood and Glands—Then... These Results Quick or Your Money Back!

NOW IS THE BEST TIME TO START KELPAMALT
1. Improved Appetite.
2. Add at least 5 lbs. of Good Solid Flesh.
3. Strengthen Nerves.
4. Ordinary Stomach Trouble Banished.
5. Sounder Sleep.
6. New Strength, Energy and Endurance.

If you are weak, skinny and run down—if you go around always tired, nervous, irritable, easily upset, the chances are your blood is thin, pale and watery and lacks the nourishment needed to build up your strength, endurance and the solid pounds of new flesh you need to feel right. Science has at last got right down to one of the real causes of these conditions and explains a new, quick way to correct them.

Food and medicines can't help you much. The average person usually eats enough of the right kind of food to sustain the body. The real trouble is assimilation, the body's process of converting digested food into firm flesh, pep and energy. Tiny hidden glands control this body building process—glands which require a regular ration of NATURAL IODINE (not the ordinary toxic chemical iodine, but the iodine that is found in tiny quantities, in spinach, lettuce, etc.). The simplest and quickest way to get this precious needed substance is Seedol Kelpamalt, the astonishing new mineral concentrate from the sea. Seedol Kelpamalt is 1300 times richer in iodine than oysters, hitherto considered the best source. With Seedol Kelpamalt's iodine you quickly normalize your weight and strength-building glands, promote assimilation, enrich the blood and build up a source of enduring strength. Seedol Kelpamalt, too, contains twelve other precious, vitally needed body minerals without which good digestion is impossible.

Try Seedol Kelpamalt for a single week. Notice how much better you feel, how well you sleep, how your appetite improves, color comes back into your cheeks. And if it doesn't add 5 lbs. of good solid flesh the first week, if it doesn't relieve ordinary stomach trouble, and give you calm nerves, the trial is free. Your own doctor will approve this way. 100 Jumbo size Seedol Kelpamalt Tablets—four to five times the size of ordinary tablets—cost but a few cents a day to use. Get Seedol Kelpamalt today. Seedol Kelpamalt is sold at all good drug stores. If your dealer has not yet received his supply, send $1.00 for special introductory size bottle of 65 tablets to the address below.

BOB TAYLOR wins no laurels as a nurse maid—or dietician. Barbara Stanwyck was out of the city, on location with the company filming The Bride Walks Out. She could not provide adequate quarters for her young son Dion, the boy she and Frank Fay adopted before their divorce, so Bob Taylor promised to take him when he visited Barbara on Sundav. On the way Bob stopped and bought Dion the things he asked for—hot dog sandwiches, ice cream cones and popcorn. By the time they arrived and greeted Barbara, five-year-old Dion was pretty much upset, having been overtaken by indigestion. Bob felt fine, but was overtaken by remorse.

WILL ROGERS' double in The Great Ziegfeld, one named A. A. Trimble, has caused many a New Yorker to pause and many a more timid soul to cross himself—thinking he has seen the ghost of the late, beloved Will. If the query is about Dixie Dunbar, the answer is that Dixie steps out with several of the boys, including Junior Laemmle. But her real heart is in New York City and a Hollywood producer is also very much interested.

If the query is about Dixie Lee, in private life Mrs. Bing Crosby, then the answer is that unless Dixie's medico is wrong the stork will soon hover the Crosby home.

NAT PENDLETON, who plays "Sandow" in The Great Ziegfeld, claims the publicity angle is screwy. Nat, in good faith, inserted an advertisement in the Los Angeles papers offering to give $1,000 to charity if he could not throw Man Mountain Dean a famous wrestler, ten times in an hour. Promoters claimed they were not interested on the basis that Nat was looking for a little publicity which he really is not. But what can he do?

THIS LETTER from a Linit enthusiast will interest every fastidious girl and woman in America:

"Frequently I am faced with the problem of going out to evening social functions with little time to rest beforehand. However, I usually allow myself an hour in which to bathe and dress and so I decide to indulge in a little rejuvenating beauty treatment, in which Linit plays a dual role. First, I make a thin paste of Linit, mixed with orange water. This is generously spread over the face, neck and shoulders. Meanwhile, the bath water is running and to this I add a half package or more of Linit. While I lie in the soothing bath of milky Linit water, I feel the beauty masque of Linit slowly lift the tired facial muscles. Then, a cool shower removes the masque easily and I step out of the tub refreshed and eager to face the long evening."

SCREEN BOOK'S PROTÉGÉE Starts Her FILM CAREER!

Marjorie Weaver, school girl winner of our recent contest, has a movie contract and is on the high road to fame

Beverly Roberts, Pat O'Brien and Marjorie in a scene from China Clipper, which has just been completed and is now ready for release. This is Marjorie's début picture

A FEW months ago Marjorie Weaver was living at home and dreaming of success—just as we all do. Then one day she was persuaded by a friend to enter SCREEN BOOK'S contest sponsored by Ruby Keeler.

To her surprise, she won first prize—three months of dancing instruction in Jack Blue's school in New York City. This is the same school, incidentally, which Ruby Keeler and Patsy Kelly attended when they were children.

Wanting to support herself, Marjorie secured work as a photographer's model. Several motion picture studios evinced an interest in her, but Warner Bros. Studio secured her name on a contract. So she and her mother started for Hollywood.

Now, having a signed and sealed contract doesn't always mean that the player will be given a screen rôle immediately. But Marjorie was lucky.

On her first day inside the high studio walls she was scrutinized by a hair dresser, who decided her coiffure should be changed. When Pat O'Brien chanced to stroll by, Marjorie says she's afraid she became a bit excited and blurted: "Ohhh, Pat O'Brien." He stopped, grinned at her and they began to talk. He asked if she'd care to watch filming on China Clipper and Marjorie sat on the sidelines and saw for the first time how pictures are made. Pat introduced her to Director Ray Enright, and the two men agreed that she was just the girl to fill the rôle of Pat's secretary.

Now Marjorie goes daily to the studio drama school, has lunch and gads about with another ambitious young actress, Beverly Roberts, who worked in the same picture.

Bright predictions are being made for twenty-one-year old Marjorie Weaver, who says she has to pinch herself to find that she is not just dreaming her good fortune.

On her first day at the studio, Marjorie made friends with Pat O'Brien and he invited her to visit him on the set. A rôle in his picture resulted

This photo of the now parted Ginger Rogers and Lew Ayres was taken shortly after their marriage. She wears her wedding dress

Why Ginger and Lew are Divorcing

SELDOM is a divorce marked by so little recrimination or gossip as the Ginger Rogers-Lew Ayres separation.

Here was clearly and simply a case of two people of utterly unlike temperaments and interests, bound together in marriage. Ginger is in real life the girl we all love on the screen—gay, kindly, fond of associating with her fellow creatures. Lew, on the other hand, is retiring, studious and inclined to prefer quiet and his own multiple interests.

While they are engaged, two people of such divergent preferences may find their differences stimulating—as Lew and Ginger did—but in marriage, the daily association and the general acceptance by others that man and wife will have the same life and enjoy the same diversions proves to be a stumbling block. Sometimes a marriage of this sort proves successful—more often not.

Ginger and Lew were married November 14, 1934. She hated to face the fact of failure and the break was delayed. But now that they've decided that separation was inevitable, Ginger goes on with her career, making Never Gonna Dance, and going about with the younger crowd, composed in part of Margaret Sullavan, Henry Fonda and James Stewart, while Lew waits to see how the picture he has directed for Republic Studio, Hearts in Bondage, (symbolic title?) will be received by all of us theatregoers. Ginger has gone to live with her mother in a house overlooking the ocean.

A TRUE Mystery STORY

THE Case OF THE

Anxious Bride

"Do me this favor" she besought the best man . . . "but HE mustn't know . . ."

"I LOVE him so," she pleaded. "I don't want anything to spoil our happiness. Please, please tell him . . ."

"I did as she asked," the best man relates. "Tactfully I pointed out that even a hint of 'B. O.' may spoil the companionship of wedded life. I gave him my cake of Lifebuoy to try and I saw that Lifebuoy went in his suit case for their honeymoon.

"Later they both wrote me. 'Thank you,' said her letter—and under the words she had drawn a tiny cake of Lifebuoy. It spoke volumes. I knew then he was taking no chances with 'B.O.' "

Letters by the thousands

These are real people. This incident actually happened. And it is just one of thousands of letters that have come to the makers of Lifebuoy telling True "B.O." Experiences.

How plainly these letters show that "B.O." (body odor) spares no one! No one can afford to take chances, especially now when the weather is hot and muggy . . . when we're perspiring more freely. Bathe regularly with Lifebuoy—you'll be fresh, refreshed and safe!

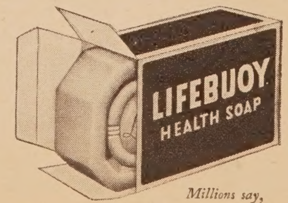
For there's a special purifying ingredient present in Lifebuoy's creamy lather which rids the pores of the cause of "B.O."

This special ingredient—not present in ordinary toilet soap—is also responsible for Lifebuoy's super-mild, extra-gentle action on the skin.

Beautifies complexions, too!

This smooth, caressing lather does wonders for your complexion . . . gives it that fresh, healthy radiance men adore. "Patch" tests on the skins of hundreds of women show Lifebuoy is actually more than 20 per cent milder than many so-called "beauty soaps."

Lifebuoy lathers richly in hardest water—its clean scent rinses away.



Millions say, "it agrees with my skin"

No More Lazybones!

I WANT to compliment two actors for their originality in acting: Bill Robinson and Stepin Fetchit. I think they portray the Southern Negro down pat—I live in the South and I ought to know. It's great to watch the Negro men dancing, tapping their feet and clapping their hands, saying, "I'm Stepin Fetchit" or "I'm Bill Robinson." These two men have set a real example and put some real pep in the Southern Negroes. They don't even seem to have any worries. Keep it up you two merry rascals!—Theo Grant, 580 Seminole Avenue N. E., Atlanta, Ga.

It's All in Fun—

WHAT'S wrong with the movies' picture of college life? I'm just a bewildered freshman as raw! raw! as they come, but even I have joined the ranks of the college students who invariably sneer at Hollywood's conception of their life—in which professors croon while leading the class in the latest dance rage; fraternity houses resemble royal suites at the Ritz; and ukuleles and saxophones play more important parts than textbooks! It's mighty disillusioning to high school grads interested in going to college and rather disgusting, I'm afraid, to parents of those prospective students. The only picture I've yet seen that fitted the truth at all was Shipmates Forever. In this, one was made to feel the true atmosphere of "exam-dread" as well as the amusing side of school life—fraternity "hell weeks" and dormitory restrictions. Let's have more realism and less Boop Boop-ism!—A. P. Maning, 6148 Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

A Good Deed, Well Done

THIS is the first time I've ever had the urge to write about a movie. I've seen many pictures that were "colossal," "stupendous" and "gigantic," but never have I seen a picture which caused me to think as much as Mr. Deeds Goes to Town. Mentally reviewing former pictures where the unemployed are pictured, the impression taken away is that of a group of lazy good-for-nothings. Mr. Deeds set my mind straight on the character of the jobless. I don't think anyone ever will forget the depth and warmth of the unemployed farmer as he speaks his mind. When he finished speaking the audience was so moved, that the sound of applause, the drying of eyes and the blowing of noses was simultaneous. This is the first time any movie has moved me deeply. I cannot understand why we don't have more movies which speak as truthfully of people as this one.—Henry A. Racusen, 656 Aldine Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

P. S. I am not unemployed!

I WOULD like to boss the film colony for one day and make a few changes I think necessary. I'd start by sending Lupe Velez back where she came from . . . add ten pounds to the following actresses: Ginger Rogers, Frances Langford, Jean Harlow and Ann Dvorak. Next, I'd have Ida Lupino apply lip rouge to the natural line of her mouth only. Rebuttal for Opera

I AM sorry to find a letter in SCREEN BOOK knocking opera in the movies. I find that opera stars are just as beautiful, if not more so, than the average movie star. I also find they excel in their acting. Lily Pons, Gladys Swarthout, Grace Moore, Nelson Eddy, Lawrence Tibbett and Helen Jepson—orchids to you all. Let's be fair to both sides—there is plenty of room for both regular and operatic films. Give the opera lovers a square deal—that's all we ask.—Roland Witherspoon, Route 2, Box 173, Shreveport, La.

A Stitch in Time . . .

SMALL things sometimes make or mar a person. Katharine Hepburn has a facial habit that bothers me, and I do not think I am alone in that reaction. She never keeps her lips closed. Can you think of a still in which her mouth is not half open? All through Alice Adams, The Little Minister—all of them—she has that same startled expression. I think of Hepburn's teeth before I can remember her! No one can be breathlessly eager all of the time, and even the prettiest mouth needs to close, now and then. If she will do that tiny thing—here's another Hepburn fan.—O. Owen, 33 Bancroft Road, Wellesley Hills, Mass.

These Charming People

HOW movie heroes and heroines have changed! Remember when we had an array of stilted, stuffy characters set in unoriginal molds? But today—ah, today's smartest movie sets are mad, irresponsible, charmingly pixilated people, who intrigue us while we're watching them, and send us out into the night with amused smiles at their antics. The latest of these charming couples is William Powell and Jean Arthur in The Ex-Mrs. Bradford. They are the dizziest of all the dizzy characters yet to be screened, and by far the most delightful. Sleuthing becomes sheer pleasure when done by that humorous clue-hound, Powell. And surely there has never been a more enticing, bedeviling helpmate (?), than the one Jean Arthur plays. This gloriously idiotic couple set new comedy standards. It's the funniest picture of the year. I'm still laughing!—H. Stappenbeck, 3171 Sacramento St., San Francisco, Calif.

Have you ever contributed to this department? If not, it's high time you joined the lively group that likes to air its opinions about any and all matters pertaining to movies and its people. Your knocks are taken to heart by those whom they concern—and your boosts are appreciated. You can tell your favorites exactly what you want to say to them —and be sure your message will be read! It's simple to do. Just write what you think, saying it any way you like. Every month the first prize letter receives $15.00; second, $10.00; third, $5.00; all others published $1.00. Address your comment to Letter Page, SCREEN BOOK Magazine, Hollywood, Calif. We'd like to hear from you!

LADIES—Can You TAKE IT?

By Alyce Curtis

Warner mutters "Darn women's clothes" as he hooks Myrna Loy's gown. This is a scene from To Mary—With Love, which they've just completed at 20th Century-Fox Studio

Warner Baxter explodes a load of dynamite on the subject of feminine fashions. Read what Hollywood's champion clothes critic has to say!

LOOK here, girls! . . . what would you think of a fellow who dared tell you what to wear and what not to wear? Who'd bawl the deuce out of you if you wore something he didn't particularly like? Who, if you were married to him, would ask you to change your clothes to suit his whims, and give the rest away? Who wouldn't even talk to you—or your girl friends, either—if you or they happened to be wearing a hat he didn't like? I ask you, what would you think of a fellow like that?

Oh, you would, eh? Well, then—that's the kind of a guy Warner Baxter is, and don't say I didn't warn you!

Warner is Hollywood's outstanding male critic of women's clothes. Self-appointed. Nobody's safe. Neither his friends, his wife, his mother—or even utter strangers. They've all fallen under the tongue-lash of his personal clothes dictatorship.

To prove it, let's tell some stories on him, before we ask him, himself, just what it's all about. There's the one, to start with, about how he nearly reduced Astrid Allwyn to tears.

It was at the entrance to the restaurant on the Fox lot—the famous Cafe de Paree—one mid-day. Astrid, effulgently lovely in one of Hollywood's newest and neatest millinery creations, was just entering. Baxter, as it happened, was just leaving. In the entryway, they met! Now, remember—Baxter didn't know Astrid any too well. They just happened to work on the same lot. That's about all. Yet Baxter stood stock still and stared at the girl. She blushed, of course. He never said a word—unless you could call muttering to himself, speaking.

While Astrid, embarrassed beyond belief, stopped hesitantly in the doorway, Baxter planted himself in front of her, arms akimbo, his eyes fixed upon her tiny new hat. Finally, without so much as an if-you-please, or a word, he pulled her hat off, poised it a moment, then put it back on her blonde locks again, at an angle totally different from that at which she had been wearing it.

"There!" he exclaimed, and strode off.

Astrid, her eyes brimming with tears, hurried into the café. "What is the matter?" she asked the girl whom she knew.

"Why, that's the way he always acts when he doesn't like a woman's hat," explained Astrid's friend. Because, you see, Baxter is famous—notorious is the better word—for his reactions to women's clothes—particularly headwear.

There's the oft-told tale of how he received one of Hollywood's women writers. She had an appointment for an interview. As she arrived on the set, wearing a fashionable hat, Baxter just barely suppressed a roar. "I won't see her," he shouted. "I won't talk to her. Take her away!" he moaned. In vain, it was explained to him that he had the date, that he had to talk to her. He wouldn't. Finally, he compromised. "I'll make a date with her for lunch downtown in Hollywood on such-and-such a date, for the interview—and a new hat!"

She agreed—and made him pay through the nose! Baxter kept the date which, in Hollywood, was occasion enough for comment. To the highest-priced women's shop on the Boulevard she led him and there, with his approval, she ordered not one but three hats—and Baxter paid! Then they lunched, and he gave her the interview. That much of the story has already been told. But there's a hitherto untold sequel.

While they lunched, Greta Garbo, the most individually dressed woman in Hollywood, drove up to the building which housed the café. She rushed up the stairs to her tailor's, on an upper floor. (It's a man's tailor shop—Watson's). Baxter was immediately interested. Famous as one of Hollywood's outstanding hero-and-heroine-worshippers, Baxter decided that nothing would do, save that he and his lunch companion fellow Garbo. For pretext, he decided he had to see Tailor Watson himself, to order some pants. And he did. So engrossed did he become in watching the fittings and the person of Garbo (whose clothes and hats are no less singular than Queen Mary's), that he ordered three pairs of pants at $25 each. And so, for his whim anent the lady-interviewer's hat, Baxter paid for a good lunch, for three women's hats, and three pairs of pants for himself!

"Please send me another secretary, Miss Norris. I had to let that other girl go."

"Why, what was the trouble, Mr. Paige? She had a splendid record as a worker."

"Oh yes, she was good in her work, all right. But I just couldn't stand to have her around."

"I'm so sorry."

"And say, buy some Mum for the next girl and charge it to me, will you?"

"I certainly will, Mr. Paige."

UNDERARM perspiration odor is an annoyance men will not tolerate in a girl, either in the office or in social life. And why should they, when it is so easy to avoid—with Mum!

Half a minute is all it takes to use Mum. A quick fingertipful under each arm—and you're safe for the whole busy day.

If you forget to use Mum before you dress, use it afterwards. It's harmless to clothing, you know. And it's so soothing to the skin, you can use it right after shaving the underarms.

Mum does just what you want it to do. It prevents the disagreeable odor of perspiration, and not the perspiration itself.

Remember, a fresh daintiness of person, free from the slightest trace of ugly odor, is something without which no girl can hope to succeed. Make sure of it with Mum! Bristol-Myers. Inc., 630 Fifth Ave., New York.

CAPRICIOUS

MR. NOAH WEBSTER, a writer who lived prior to the advent of movies and therefore missed a great deal of fun—or a great deal of pain, according to how one looks at it—I am one that has looked both ways and so have been delighted and nauseated in turn—Mr. Webster, in his nice big book on "words," unwittingly defines all actors with the word "mercurial."

Dan says mercurial means: "Lively, changeable and fickle." Also that it pertains to a mythological god and to quicksilver.

After twenty years—and I am still just a tot—of constant association with actors of all breeds and color, I am here to back Daniel Webster that most actors are lively; ALL of them are changeable; and a great majority, for which the newspapers offer up prayers, are fickle! AND, is there another group that are able to gather silver any quicker? I'm throwing in that pun for nothing.

All of the foregoing palaver is simply to lead up to the fact that Jimmy Cagney, the particular actor with whom I am dealing at the moment, is the mercurialest of them all. Besides being an actor, which he could help, he is Irish which he couldn't help. That makes him mercurial-er than ever.

Despite my attitude to the contrary, I love actors—and I love the Irish! Jimmy, being both, AND a damn good friend to me for the past seven years, it won't take you long to come to the scandalous conclusion that I LOVE James Cagney! That's something that even Winchell didn't know till now.

My "love" for Mr. Cagney, however, will not stop me from taking a few falls out of him. I'm a RAT in Hart Schaffner and Marx's clothing!

In order to save you from too great a shock, I have decided to lead you gently along the path of Jimmy's vagueness; a vagueness, dear friend, that tops anything in its line. A dreamy ambiguousness; a kind of nothing-present-but-the-body type of thing. I will lead you gently along so that, by degrees, you will be able to withstand the full force of this many-sided Son of Erin.

We will start up the path, and on our right I want to point out a gentleman in the process of changing his clothes. Changing them from the skin out! We see him, finally, fully dressed again, gathering up his discarded soiled linen

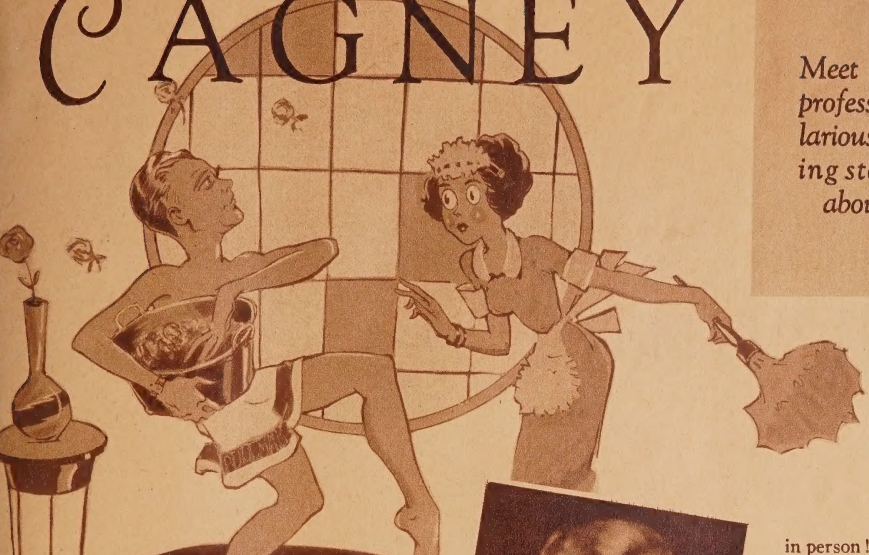
CAGNEY



Meet the absent-minded professor—in the most hilarious yet truly revealing story ever written about James Cagney

By Maurice
Leo

Far from looking askance at Jimmy's idiosyncracies, Mrs. Cagney is amused at her otherwise intelligent husband's occasional eccentricities and wandering completely detached into his bathroom, and, instead of casting the soiled linen into the clothes hamper where they belong, we stand open-mouthed while he very nonchalantly drops them into a bathroom receptacle the name of which I haven't the nerve to mention!

No! The gentleman is NOT Hugh Herbert!

On our left, as we tread the path, I want you to take notice of the two young men that are driving overnight from Los Angeles to San Francisco. The young man at the wheel is the same as that of a moment ago. After several hours of driving we overhear this short conversation:

Says the ever-thoughtful passenger: "Jim, why don't you let me take the wheel for awhile, and you can grab a nap."

"I JUST HAD ONE!" replies our nonchalant friend at the wheel.

The ever-thoughtful passenger alights from the car at San Francisco in a dazed and limp condition!

If you are still able to negotiate what is left of the path, just look straight ahead. Paradoxically you will see Mrs. Cagney, of some six years ago, standing outside the door of the Cagney apartment in Greenwich Village, New York City. You will see her fumbling in her bag for her door key. She hasn't got it! Jim is having dinner at his mother's in Long Island, so Mrs. Cagney goes to the corner drug store to telephone him and see if he has taken the keys, or whether or not they have been left inside the apartment. She gets Jim on the phone, tells him her plight. He is much concerned. Says he: "Hold the phone. I'll look in my coat pocket and see if I have them."

He leaves the phone and locates his coat; satisfies himself that he HAS the keys, but instead of returning to the phone and informing the worried and harrassed waiter at the other end, that dreamy gentleman casually returns to the dinner table leaving the phone and his wife in mid-air.

With the receiver off the hook there is no means of getting him back. Long Island and his mother's home is a couple of subway-changing hours away. The lady seethes! Freezes! And froths! That was six years ago . . . they are STILL MARRIED!

By now, I feel that you are ready for anything. So . . . Ladies and Gentlemen! Let me present Mr. James Cagney in person! The red-headed, acting, mercurial son of a . . . Irishman!

Now the essence of being mercurial (and being Jimmy Cagney) is being volatile, and being volatile, so says Mr. Webster, is being changeable and fickle. Because I do not want to lead you up to an awful let-down, and also because I am innately an honest person, I will tell you right off that Jimmy Cagney is not fickle in the accepted sense of the word—where his heart is concerned, or his loyalty. He is no "Caliban" and any "Ariel" of his would have to be attached to a radio. But fickle he is in the mercurial sense of the word . . . and CHANGEABLE AS HELL!

The Santa Fe Railroad and its worried stockholders, for example, could all go to their downy beds at night without a qualm about the infringing bus lines and airplane routes, if Jim boarded one of their trains every time he decided to leave California either "for good," or because "I gotta get out o' here for awhile!"

That mercurial gentleman has set his entire household to packing and adjusting themselves to the fact that he was leaving on the morrow for this place or that, only to appear on "the morrow" completely oblivious to the thought that any such suggestion had been made. What's more, and what keeps the Cagney menage from ever having a dull moment (in fact, I have a sneaking idea that if his servants ever found themselves in another establishment they would die of ennui), is the fact that Jimmy goes blissfully wandering about midst all the packing and preparation attending his announced take-off without it ever occurring to him that it might be a good idea to give some hint of his change of mood.

The household's, and this includes his wife, first glint that perhaps their lord and master might delay his departure, is brought about by the simple, if slightly confusing, wonderment on the part of Jimmy as to Anything for a LAUGH!

That's Carole Lombard's motto, but it doesn't begin to tell the reason behind the mad things she does

By Wm. A. French

CAROLE LOMBARD is the most liked—and disliked—star in Hollywood! She is adored by those who know her intimately, and detested by those who know her but casually.

Because Carole decidedly does not put her best foot foremost. Stars have actually walked off the set because Carole was on it—and other stars have traveled miles, just to sit on the side-lines and watch her work.

Carole is strong seasoning, and not everybody can take her—until they develop a taste for that brand of spice. Ye Olde Scribe's first interview with this star was in her home—and he told the world at large for the next six months thereafter that he wouldn't go back for a chance to write the history of man. She so completely upset his life-long notions of the maidenly modesty that should accompany rare beauty that he was groggy for days.

Stories have been written that Lombard is the most startling person in Hollywood. And they are true. Stories have been written the Lombard is the most hilariously unusual star in pictures—a distinction she shares equally with "Wild John" Barrymore. Stories have been written that Lombard's slogan is "Anything for a Laugh," and still other stories have been written that she squeals with glee at an opportunity to prick a balloon of conceit or expose a pretense. But no one has ever told how she got that way.

Anyone intimate with Carole Lombard will tell you she never does anything without a purpose—and a very good reason. Even to the insane practical jokes she plays. Also the smart ones in the motion picture industry will tell you there isn't a star in pictures as sure of each step in her upward climb as Carole—or with as definite a campaign for success.

So there must be a definite reason for the madcap rôle she plays. This girl is shrewd, keen, calculating. She doesn't reel about like a clown because she is dizzy.

You've heard of the wild, abandoned Lombard laugh. In Hollywood it is recognized as a sort of second Tarzan battle cry—because immediately following it things happen—fast and furiously. No maidenly giggle this, but a full-throated feminine bay that is the call to arms for the fun loving workers of the studios, whether they are stars or grips, executives or wardrobe girls. They all look alike to Carole, and each has a personal invitation to join in.

Everyone who knows Carole will recognize that laugh, anywhere—under any circumstances. Because it's more than a laugh—it's a [Continued on page 86]

Truth About ROBERT TAYLOR'S ROMANCES!

Despite his reputation as Hollywood's most sought-after beau, he's still fancy free!

—Rhodes

Bob was really in love with Irene Hervey, but now she's seen everywhere with Allan Jones. What is behind the rumors regarding Bob and Janet Gaynor (right) who have spent so much time together, both inside and outside the studios?

By Katharine Hartley

WHEN Robert Taylor first came to Hollywood he reterred to himself as a typical one-woman man. "I never had more than two girls all the time I was in college," he told me at our first interview. "And I went with each of them for two years. Most girls frighten me. I don't know how to act with them. I feel strange with them at first. Because I'm not much of a kidder, I guess. Other fellows can keep a dozen dangling on the string and have a swell time at it. Not me! I'd much rather go out with just one."

That was a little less than two years ago. Today all Hollywood is calling Bob Taylor a gay Lothario. Today all Hollywood is saying that Bob suddenly has gone high hat . . . that success has gone to his head and girls, by the dozen, to his heart.

I'm saying that Hollywood is crazy!

I know that appearances are against him. For a long time he was so devoted to Irene Hervey. One of Hollywood's sensible romances, we said. Two young people who are close friends and devoted sweethearts, but with the good sense to look before they leap into marriage. It gave both of them a sort of aura in this mad-scramble town. They were so loyal to each other, and Bob's high-shooting star [Continued on page 84]

Solved—The LUISE RAINER MYSTERY

The girl who insists she has nothing to say about herself, says a great deal to Gladys Hall

I CAN'T write the story I had planned to write about Luise Rainer—before I talked with her.

For I had thought to write a gay little tale, a saucy little tale, a little rascal of a tale, with a toss of its head and a tweak of its toes.

Temperament and tantrums was to have been its theme. I had it in mind to write about the temperament and the tantrums of Louise. I planned to tell about how she will say right to a dignified director's face, "No, no, I will not do that scene over again!"—when she herself feels satisfied with the scene. I planned to tell how she refuses interviewers, press photographers, interruptions on the set, autograph seekers, public appearances, all the mad and merry, necessary and unnecessary machinations of the movie makers.

I planned to exult because Luise has brought back the old glamorous days and ways of Barbara La Marr, Theda Bara, Valentino, Mable Normand . . . days when Thespians were temperamental and stormy and unpredictable . . . days when they were vivid and slightly mad and drew wide swatches of color after them as they went. . . .

But Luise is not like that.

Temperament isn't the answer. For sunk deep in her spirit there is a Conviction of Art, for want of a better phrase. There is some invisible goal she must reach. And anything she does or does not do is but armament to protect a precious, a perishable thing.

We lunched together in her dressing room on the M-G-M lot. I had seen her in The Great Ziegfeld as Anna Held, enchanting, delirious and then, suddenly, her heart going out in broken words over the telephone in the great telephone scene.

Into the dressing room shuffled a little bent woman, head down, eyes cast down, seeming to lift her feet with difficulty from the good earth . . . those sparkling eyes were dull . . . the cadenced Viennese voice was muted . . . Luise was sunk deep in [Continued on page 78]

When Luise was sixteen she determined to go on the stage . . . she knew her father wouldn't like it, so on the pretext of visiting her grandmother, she went to a theatre in Dusseldorf and applied for an audition . . . before leaving the theatre she signed a contract.

Luise likes to clog dance on the set between scenes . . . is wild about American apple pie . . . plays the piano . . . models small statues in clay . . . dines frequently with Clifford Odets, brilliant young playwright.

She says, "I do not feel well at parties and so I do not go."

"HOLLYWOOD is not overcrowded with talent.

"The greatest need of the screen today is the development of a new generation of important players," said Cecil B. DeMille, the man who has discovered and made more film stars than any other person in the industry.

"I think every city and almost every town in the United States has a hidden gold mine in the way of new star material. A mine that the studios are trying to locate by every possible means with their 'talent scouts' and various contests. The reason it's so seldom found is because people in general haven't a clear idea of what Hollywood is looking for.

"Very nearly everyone thinks they can act. I think they can. They go through life doing it. From the time they're about one year old they begin putting on a great act if they find that by howling they can get more milk and so on. But the art of acting is something else again. That's the projection of your own personality into another character—and it's the hardest of all arts.

"Your own personality. . . . Is it distinct? Something that every member of an audience would respond to? That is the first and most important thing every director is searching for in newcomers. Self-consciousness so often hides personalities. It's like a shell that one has to crack through. But it's an excellent indication that the shell is easier to crack in young people now than it was twenty years ago! They know so much better how to conduct themselves, they've seen all kinds of situations handled on the screen and they know how to cope with them."

There's a sure-fire test, the famous director pointed out, that you can try on yourself to see if your particular "shell" is broken and if your personality actually registers. It's this: Can you recount an incident dramatically so that you move your listener?

If you can't, practice until you do. Suppose you are describing a party or a trip to the shore. Concentrate on what took place, re-live the scene so that the thrill of it is in your voice. You can give your ordinary conversation a remarkably dramatic note by doing this. And people will begin to listen, to seek you out. . . .

Then—can you repeat that funny story you heard last night and get the laughs in the right places? That is a very significant test.

If people are attracted to you in a crowd it's the best sign of all. If they are not, it's probably because you are self-centered or self-conscious—both the result of egotism. And no studio is hiring an obvious egotist.

In Paramount's Training School there are thirty-two aspirants preparing themselves for screen work. Among the most noted graduates are Fred MacMurray, Ida Lupino, Gail Patrick and Kent Taylor. People are brought in from all over the country by scouts, Cecil B. DeMille, Hollywood's greatest star maker tells you what movie producers are looking for—and how you may fit yourself for screen fame

MOVIE ACTING!

Director DeMille tells a group of young actors that appearance is less important than talent and personality—and the ability to project personality can be acquired by anyone

No. Elizabeth Russell isn't carrying in the chairs for Sunday dinner! . . . She's taking a lesson in posture from Phyllis Loughton, Paramount's famous drama coach signed to a contract at from $35 to $50 a week, and put under the tutelage of Phyllis Loughton—formerly one of the best known stage managers in New York and now head of the Paramount School. No one can enter unless specially chosen by the studio. The students are given "extra" work in the beginning. Then "bit" parts. If they show any real possibilities they're pushed ahead fast.

Requirements? You have to be from five to ten pounds under normal weight for pictures if you aim to be a romantic star. For the character stars it doesn't matter. Naturally you must have a photographic face with expressive eyes and mouth. One way to tell that is to slip your picture in among others and see if it is the one chosen for especial interest. And most of all, of course, you must have talent. Beauty is not essential.

DeMille emphasized that fact in a recent address he made to the school. "Get away from the thought that your appearance is everything," he told them. "You'll find most of Hollywood's great beauties in the restaurants dishing out coffee. Because beauty alone won't sell.

"It's the depth of you that we care about on the screen; not the depth of your make-up . . . The sincerity and spirituality of your work is vital. Of course you're living in a debunking age that makes a face at anything suggesting spirituality. But don't be misled by that. There is something very important that you cannot neglect—the development of your own soul or essence—for that is the thing that will make you valuable. It's as you develop from within that you gain power. . . ."

Later as we were sitting in his office he explained, "You have to regard this art as an art. So many individuals think they could be great artists on the spur of the moment if only they had a chance! Let me tell you something: In the twenty-five years I have been making pictures I've [Continued on page 83]

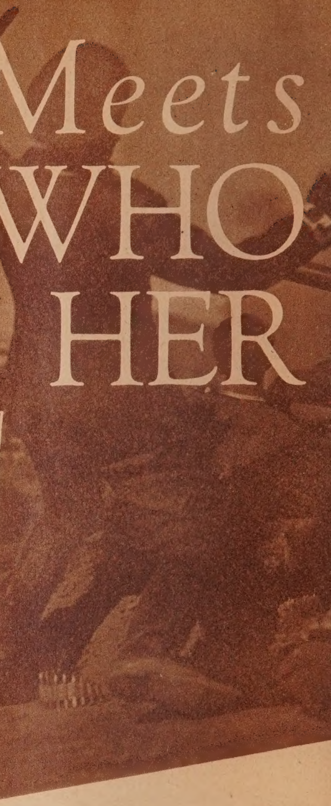
Dietrich Meets WHO HER



—Alexander

The whole course of Marlene's life was changed by Alexis Davidoff — although the two never met until one morning recently on a Paramount set

IF YOU came face to face with the man who killed your father, what would you do?

There was nothing to warn Marlene Dietrich as she walked across the set one morning recently, that the most drama-filled moment of her life was about to occur.

Outside, rain was sloshing against the sound stage. A driving, torrential rain whose sharp tattoo was blotted out by the thick walls. She saw a very tall man talking with the assistant director, Ray Lissner; a man with the distinct bearing of a soldier and peculiarly bright eyes. They were deep in conversation, apparently lost to the world of the studio. And as she started to enter her portable dressing room, she overheard a word that struck at her heart.

"—Kovno . . ." Memorable word! Bringing back a small child's terror and hopeless loss . . .

"You—you come from Kovno?" she asked the tall man hesitantly.

She heard Lissner pronouncing his name, Lieutenant Colonel Alexis Davidoff, formerly of the Russian Imperial army, who was serving as technical director on the picture. Marlene acknowledged the introduction, her eyes never leaving the dark face above her.

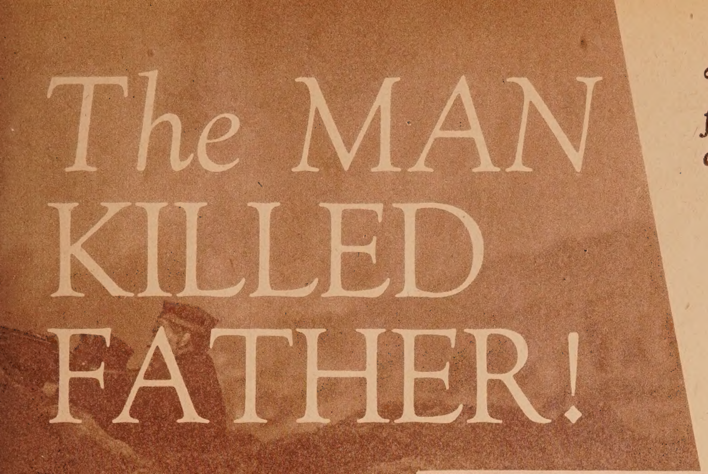
"I do not come from Kovno, Miss Dietrich. I was merely telling Mr. Lissner of an experience that I had there during the war."

"And that was . . .?"

"It was in 1915 on August seventeenth by the Russian calendar — September first by Occidental reckoning. The Germans had put up a terrific offensive battle and they had blocked off the passage of our retreat. I was given command of an artillery battery of 75 millemeter guns and ordered to open up that passage. It was called," he said mildly, "the 'suicide detail.' Success was almost an impossibility, but luck favored us.

"Early in the morning I hid my guns near the pass and around six a. m. the fog lifted. The German forces were directly in front of me supported by their armored tanks and by both heavy and light artillery. It was too close range to miss—I opened fire! . . . Time after time they retreated only to concentrate and attack again, headed by their officers. A brave lot . . . In the end most of them were demolished.

"From the prisoners taken, I learned it had been a crack Prussian regiment.



The MAN KILLED FATHER!

Truth indeed is stranger than fiction and this story is as dramatic as any ever filmed

By Frances Kellum

When the day was over a complete list of their casualties was sent to me and all the officers identified . . . But Miss Dietrich, what is it?” Something in her face brought him to a startled pause.

She did not move. Her eyes remained fixed on his.

“My father was killed September first, 1915,” she said steadily, “—during the attack on Kovno. He was Lieutenant Eduard von Losch of the Prussian Grenadiers . . .”

“My God!” muttered Lissner.

Davidoff wet his lips. His voice was labored. “Yes, his name was on the list.”

It was Marlene who broke the tension. “I am the daughter of a long line of officers, Colonel Davidoff. And I know that such are the fortunes of war. One cannot alter circumstances.”

A gallant remark. And gallantly she bowed a little as she turned away from the man who had played so fateful a part in her life. Changed it so drastically. For had her father lived there never would have been a Marlene Dietrich. The women of a Prussian officer's family did not embark on a theatrical career!

She had been a sunny-haired little girl when the World War broke out. Little Mary Magdalene von Losch. (“Marlene” is a derivative of those two first names.) Life at the military town in Germany was a strict but delightfully colorful régime. The tread of marching boots, flashing helmets, the martial music that made her skip beside her English governess on their walks. She had been born there. She knew no other life. Her parents were so young and gay and terribly in love. Both of them belonged to the military aristocracy and the Spartan code of that group regulated their actions. Even in romance. When Herr von Losch had decided to marry he'd had to go to his superior officer for approval of the bride.

Tragedy came early into the life of little Mary Magdalene von Losch. Now a world-acclaimed beauty she stars in Garden of Allah, a romantic all-color film produced by Selznick-International Studios

He was only twenty-five when Europe was thrown into turmoil and his papers had come ordering him to the Russian front. She and her mother had gone to Berlin to await him, living for his brief furloughs. And then had come the last furlough. His arms around her protectingly, his smile challenging death . . .

She had been trying to help her mother sew for the hospitals, bent over tiny stitches, when the word came. Lieutenant von Losch was mortally wounded at Kovno. Dying.

Her mother's face, white as the waxed lilies under glass . . . Rain beating against the window . . . A nameless terror seizing her that made her too frightened to cry . . . Her mother kissing her, murmuring a stifled “good-bye.” She had gotten permission to go through the lines to her husband. She brought back his body for burial. Marlene was not permitted to see him again . . .

Even in the rapidly changing world in which she grew up it was difficult to break iron-bound conventionalities that had been part and parcel of family tradition for so long. She would be a violinist. A concert violinist. Even so dignified a profession as that was frowned upon. But an accident to her wrist halted her ambitions in that line and she turned to the stage—after working for weeks to obtain her mother's reluctant permission. It was then she changed her name to “Dietrich.”

A young life so completely transformed . . . because a certain Russian officer had been ordered to open a passage through enemy lines . . .

And now for a brief while they had been brought together on a Hollywood movie set through one of those inexplicable flukes of chance.

Fate holds all the cards in Hollywood —and strange things happen . . .

Catching Up on Marlene

She will place her ten-year-old daughter, Maria Sieber, in an English school. Maria will take with her a full vocabulary of American slang. Marlene's pet name for the girl is Heidede.

Recently Dietrich purchased the car owned by the late John Gilbert, of whom she was fond, and made a gift of the automobile to John's faithful chauffeur.

Filming Hotel Imperial, Dietrich had drawn $280,000 in salary when she decided to go to the desert to make Garden of Allah for a rival studio. She was said to dislike playing the rôle of scrub woman. She returns now to Paramount to finish Imperial under the wing of Ernst Lubitsch.

While on location with the Allah company she adopted a stray dog. She kept a sharp eye out for his safety among the mules and camels used in filming the picture and on one occasion cried out to him: “Sandy, come back. Come away from those heels. That mule can kick. Goodness! how that mule can kick.” But Marlene did not speak from experience.

She can play the piano well, but seldom does now because her extremely long fingernails interfere.

Sometimes she is excessively preoccupied. For instance, when out walking she never turns to observe things—and two automobiles can crash two feet from her without attracting her attention.

If all the world loves a lover, then Merle Oberon and David Niven are doubly blessed, for they are admittedly in love. They live in neighboring houses on the ocean front and may play together soon in a picture for Sam Goldwyn, with whom both have contracts

The CASE AGAINST MADELEINE!

He heard she was scholarly and wanted to become a nun. Being a mere man, your interviewer feared meeting her—but was he surprised!...

By Harry Lang

MEETING a new star in Hollywood for the first time is exactly like dragging a blind date. You don't know whether you're going to have a first-rate klunk wished on you—or whether it'll be strawberries and cream, with a dash of absinthe.

So when they asked me to meet Madeleine Carroll—"that new gel from England, y'know"—I cast feverishly about in my memory for something to identify her. For something to pin her down. To pin—ah, that was it!—PINS . . . ! !

I'd suddenly remembered The 39 Steps, you see. That English film that made such a hit over here. Madeleine was the girl. And I remembered details.

"Ah, yes," I crowed excitedly. "Lovely pins—I mean, lovely legs, hasn't she?"

"Legs? Ahem," ahemmed the very nice person who was telling me about her. "But she's very intelligent, you know."

I said: "H'm." I'm always afraid of this "very intelligent" gag they had out about certain new Hollywood arrivals. I've learned that too frequently it's a press-agent's euphemism for "snooty" or "condescending" or "hi-hat." So I persisted:

"The legs, I mean. Those actually were HER legs in 39 Steps weren't they? She didn't have a leg-double, like who's-zis?" I demanded.

"Ah, yes; they really were her limbs," I was informed. "Did you know that she wanted to be a nun? And that she still reads religious books?"

"—and she graduated from Birmingham University with a brilliant scholarship record, y'know," I was told, "and then became a school teacher."

I groaned. Wham, went another illusion. The memory of those beautiful legs faded, and I resigned myself to meeting one of those veddy, veddy frigid, hi-brow [Continued on page 89]

THE phone rang in the 20th Century-Fox casting office, and I heard Maurice Braun ask: "Five gallons of what?—Flies?"

When he had hung up, I said, "Flies? If you mean human flies I never heard of ordering them by the gallon."

Braun thought I was kidding. "Human? Just plain horse. They're shooting Rozz Russell and George Raft in a stable scene tomorrow. And some genius has discovered you can't have a stable without flies." And he turned to the telephone. "Get Archie Beckingsale on the wire," he ordered. "If I know Archie," he added to me, "he'll have those flies for me bright and early tomorrow morning in make-up, ready to work. Archie'll get about $25 a day for the flies (including wet-nursing them on the set) and the flies'll get all the bites they can handle out of the hosses."

"Who gets the screen credit?" I asked.

"Screen credit, heck. They work for glory, or they can buzz off," said Braun.

I decided to look up Archie myself.

I found him with his partner, George Stone. They turned out to be two wild-life lovers who operate a pet shoppe and a couple of ranches near Hollywood, in which they stock anything from a cootie to a coti-mundi. They have more than five hundred varieties of things that snort, swoop, sneep, grunt, groan, buzz, burp, bipp, biff, erp, eep and eek. They rent them to the studios at prices ranging from one to a hundred dollars.

"Those flies you speak of," said Archie, very English in spite of his seventeen years in Hollywood, "are being caught at this moment by a lot of little boys at a pig ranch near Fontanna. The main thing in our business is to move fast. When the studios want anything they want it immediately, and there's a lot of competition in our business. You'd be surprised.

"The studios wanted a bag of insectual junk for Jane Withers to let loose at a nice garden party in Gentle Julia. I delivered katydids, grasshoppers, beetles, lizards; a shoeful of spiders; some frogs, chameleons and climbing mice, a few baby alligators, a real black widow spider, a couple of scorpions from the hills—three snakes and a crab—just to make it interesting.

"You might think that would be almost enough, but the first remark they made was, 'What! No cockroaches?' So George spent the night along the San Pedro waterfront, bringing 'em back alive!"

George said with a touch of British irony behind his clipped words, "And after that the studio refused to pay more than a dollar a day for the cockroaches because they considered them common! A lot they know about modern kitchens! Try and get a housewife to admit she has roaches!"

Archie laughed. "Everybody on the set except Jane Withers fought shy of my charges, so I had to play nursemaid. I caught flies for the spiders, fed the roaches and beetles on pieces of blotting paper, the while I kept the spiders from eating the beetles, the alligators from eating the frogs, and the cannibalistic roaches from swallowing each other!"

Both Archie and George insist that there is no animal in the world that cannot be tamed if it's treated with kindness. They pointed out their boxing kangaroo who always gives exactly what he gets. If you hit him gently, he'll hit you gently. But if you hit him hard, he can sit on his tail and sock you with four feet.

"Could he knock out Joe Louis?" I asked.

Archie ruminated. "Well, if Louis hit him first with all he had, he might put Kangie to sleep, but if he missed, Kangie'd stave in Joe's ribs like so many jackstraws!"

"How about those deadly cobras that are always doing so much damage on the screen," I asked. "Do you treat them with kindness, too?"

"As a matter of fact, there's not a cobra in Hollywood outside the zoo! They're too dangerous to use in pictures. But a couple of fellows have imitation cobras!"

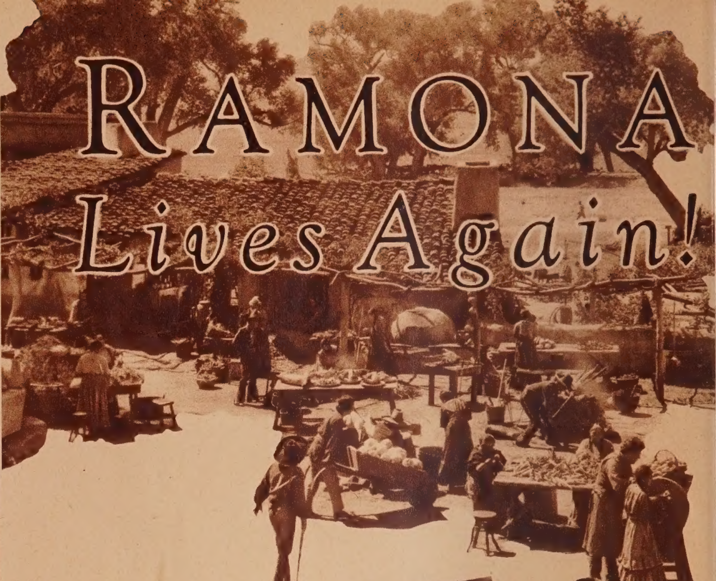
RAMONA Lives Again!



Loretta Young undergoes a complete change of character—with the aid of a black wig. Don Ameche is her Indian lover, Allesandro

Loretta, Pedro de Cordoba, Kent Taylor and the cast are isolated where cattle not telephone poles dot the scenery. They all eat in a big-top tent, and have their own outdoor movies in the evening

Katherine de Mille plays Margarita, a tempestuous Indian girl. Her sultry beauty is particularly suited to color films

FOR fifty years it has been argued that the story of Ramona is and isn't true. Three spots in California are pointed out to tourists as the birth and wedding place of the girl made famous in Helen Hunt Jackson's great novel. All the research facilities of 20th Century-Fox studio for three years have been devoted to finding material on the characters and the times—with the result that every bit of construction, every prop and costume is authentic. Loretta Young portrays a half-Spanish, half-Indian girl adopted by an aristocratic Spanish family. She is unaware of her Indian heritage. Wooed by a wealthy and handsome childhood sweetheart, her Indian blood calls to Allesandro—played by Don Ameche of radio fame who here essays his first movie. Her adopters oppose her marriage but she changes her life of ease for one of extreme poverty; nevertheless, she is supremely happy until unforeseen tragedy rears its evil head. Filmed entirely in color, "Ramona" promises to be one of the year's outstanding pictures. In it Pauline Frederick returns to the screen.

Jane Darwell, clever character actress, plays one of the major rôles—that of "Aunt Ri Hyar"—a name amusingly fitted to her rôle

Glenda Farrell and her secretary get down to the business of answering letters and autographing portraits. You'll see her next—a live wire as usual—in High Tension

GLENDA, QUITE CONTRARY

She's not like her screen rôles—yet not unlike them. She's somewhat of a paradox even to her closest friends

By Arden Russell

SHE was born in a cyclone and has streaked her stormy, cyclonic way through life to Hollywood. There she makes many of the traditional gestures, but don't let that fool you. Farrell is Farrell, Hollywood-proof and unpredictable.

She's a law unto herself, and a pretty good law it is, too. It gives others the benefit of every doubt and binds her to do the very best she can. She's followed her own code without desire for approbation, indifferent to criticism. She has a heart as wide as her Irish grin, and a sympathy as tender as a melody by Schubert. She has a temper as quick as a hurricane, and a contrition just as swift. She is as absent-minded about some things as that famous professor, but has the memory of an elephant for kindnesses done her. She'll do battle for a friend or one in need and forget an enemy entirely. She'll enchant you, exasperate you, charm and torment you, but she'll never bore you!

Golddigging? It's something out of a script. She knows naught of it! She's never owned a diamond in her life. She has worked hard for everything she has. Living up to her code, standing firmly on her own two feet, taking the brickbats and the bouquets which life has sent her way with equal aplomb, she has never been downed by disaster nor impressed by success.

In her little house in the valley, a little white house like a jewel case, she has expressed herself, in soft pale rugs, simple draperies, comfortable down chairs of style and beauty.

The day she moved in she burned a trunk, as a sort of settling down ceremony. It was a symbol of her life before Hollywood. The years of living in hotels were over and Glenda had to do something definite to prove she had "settled down." But the house has been anything but settled. She keeps doing it over. One room at a time. There are always carpenters, painters, decorators at the door. She bought the lot next door to build a tennis court. Then found out it wasn't large enough! Now she's buying two lots in the rear, having abandoned the tennis court idea entirely. Maybe she'll put in a skating rink. Nothing would surprise me!

Maybe it's the cyclone in her . . . or the Irish. Anyway, she is without serenity. And it would be awful if she were to change.

SUMMER IN COTTON

Mary Astor selects cotton net for a warm weather formal. Shirring gives this frock an important fashion note. It's the kind of dress that it would be fun for anyone to make

By Sally Martin

WE TAKE our text from the 277th page of the seventh volume of the Encyclopaedia: "Cotton goods are of an infinite variety, and the titles that experience or fancy have evoked are even more numerous than the kinds."

We feel it necessary to speak on this subject because of the importance cotton has had, and will have, throughout the summer. When Old Sol goes on a rampage cottons, made into everything literally, from lingerie and hats to shoes, are first to enter our heads.

Though there is a great assortment of cotton fabrics, linen is by far the most popular due to its versatility of expression. It comes in heavy herringbone weaves, that divine weight which makes a perfectly tailored suit. Nothing gives a woman such a spick and span, clear-cut look as a pair of trimly tailored white linen shoulders. It also is tremendously popular in a sheer handkerchief quality which is almost as soft and graceful in its hang as crêpe.

Between these two extremes lie many degrees of weight and texture. Going away for a week-end and you know the mercury will soar? Well then, you'll enjoy one of the uncrushable fabrics which come in a light quality for dance frocks and in a heavy one for formal or spectator sports suits. Also you will probably like one of this summer's new finds, a delightful crêpe linen that, in its way, is as lovely as a silk crêpe and serves much the same purpose when the mercury cavorts in the nineties.

For daytime wear cotton feels as cool as a Tyrolean breeze; while for evening it has the delicacy of spindrift dancing from the crest of a wave.

GIRL TROUBLE

The bashful, barefoot boy—no longer barefoot and no longer bashful, finds himself surrounded by the most fascinating beauties in the world

By Otis Wiles

James Stewart has been tap dancing furiously in preparation for his rôle opposite Eleanor Powell in Born To Dance

HE WAS so bashful that they all laughed when he asked them to go with him to a dance—so he bought an accordion.

Then, one eventful night at a Princeton prom, his idea worked, and so did the accordion. One brave girl had consented to be his pal for the evening and he took along the pushem-and-pullem. But he played it all night long and the girl friend, wearied of the musical marathon, walked out on him and went home.

Perhaps it was the accordion that added a discordant note to romance. He threw it in a corner of his dormitory room and began anew his quest for romance. Twice he succeeded in taking girls to dances, but that's all he did—just take them. Both times, some handsomer chump took the girl away from him and thereafter he always went stag to the Princeton proms. . . .

Yet today, this same formerly bashful Princeton grad can be seen, almost nightly, with glorified Virginia Bruce, or with beautiful Jeanette MacDonald, or with lovely Margaret Sullavan, or with gorgeous Ginger Rogers, or with bewitching Wendy Barrie, or with dazzling Shirley Ross.

Such has been the metamorphosis of James Stewart, popular young-man-about-Hollywood who is causing many hearts to flutter across the width and breadth of the land and who is knocking on the door to Stardom in motion pictures. Even Jim—that's what everybody calls him—does not know how or why he ever became an actor. By heredity, he should be in a hardware store back in Indiana, Pennsylvania (population, 7,000, and the Garden-Spot-of-America), juggling nails, wrestling with lawn mowers and dispensing garden hose at so much a foot. His father, Alexander Stewart, owned the hardware store when James was born and still runs it.

Young Stewart's earliest recollection is that he was often spanked. As he added a few years to his first year in life he became one of America's most air-minded youngsters. He went in for aviation.

"My first plane was a honey," Stewart recollects. "I broke up mother's alarm clock to make the motor, the wheels and the tail. The next problem was—would it fly? The kid next door had a brilliant idea. We had a house with a sloping roof and the neighbor kid persuaded me to let him tie a rope onto the plane, take it up to the top of the house, then yank it down the sloping roof for the take-off. . . . I was broken-hearted when the plane kept going down and smashed to pieces on the pump."

Too, in his boyhood days, Stewart's big ambition

They Wanted to

By
"Hey Bob" Miles

EDITOR'S NOTE:

The author of this article is a real cowboy, but also a well-educated Kentuckian, who happens to have spent most of his life on western ranches. He is now "top hand" at the Paramount studio, which means that Robert J. Miles is the chief western technician for Paramount pictures.

Bob Burns tries to corral some milk from a wild cow, using a pop bottle for a make shift milk pail . . .

Bing Crosby defies Director Norman Taurog. "I can take it, ya yella houn' dog, so bring on your buckin' broncs and steers"

You may think we're stretch-
—and does!—hap-

YIP-YIP-YIP-EEEE! Let 'er buck!

Here comes Bad Bing Crosby, the Spokane Scorpion, out of the chute on that man-killin' bronc, Cyclone. Ride 'em cowboy!

The next rodeo attraction, folks, is Tex Taurog, the Texas Terror, bulldoggin' a wild Brahma steer. Turn 'em loose!

The above gives you a rough idea of what Bing Crosby and Norman Taurog hoped their folks would be hearing about them some day. Ever since their dads bought their first cowboy pants, they have wanted to be real cowpunchers.

Showing them how, while we were making Rhythm on the Range, was my job—and it was a horned toad.

Bing was born and raised in the western town of Spokane up in Washington, but the nearest he got to a range was in his Ma's kitchen.

As for the director, his Ma told me that he used to steal her clotheslines, take his trusty cap pistol, and roam the streets of New York City looking for broncs and wild steers to rope. Nightmares were the only things he ever rode.

Course, I was raised on ranches. I've been riding and roping ever since I was knee-high to a grasshopper. But, like lots of other folks I ended up out here in Hollywood helping to make western pictures. This is how I happened to meet up with Bing Crosby and his director, Norman Taurog.

Reckon they must have talked the studio into letting them make a western picture together. Anyway, when I was called in to supply the cowboy atmosphere for Rhythm on the Range, I'll be doggoned if Bing and Norman didn't have the biggest things planned for a western movie that I have ever seen. The opening sequence was a big rodeo staged in Madison Square Garden. They had bucking broncs and steers, wild Brahma cows, bulldogging, trick roping, wild cow milking; cowboys and cowgirls competing for some $10,000 worth of prizes, too.

Funny thing is that neither Bing nor Norman had really learned to ride, cowboy style. They couldn't throw a loop or bulldog a steer. Bing claims he got side tracked singing cowboy songs like "Home On The Range" and "The Last Roundup," and first thing he knew he was a crooner. Norman came to Hollywood from the stage hoping to direct cowboy heroes, but instead he got his start on comedy lots dodging custard pies. He made his fame directing comedians and kids, so Rhythm on the Range is his first genuine "western."

I was surprised when I first met them. Bing looked like a real hand. No fancy stuff. Wore overalls like any puncher out on the ranch. Reckon he got that way foolin' around with those ponies of his out Santa Anita way. They say that Bing is one race-hoss owner who

ing it a bit, but anything can pen in Hollywood

really likes to hang around his stables.

The director handed me a laugh though.

He had been complaining that Bing got all the breaks 'cause he got to wear the cowboy clothes. Well, Norman must have had his cowboy pants made by his tailor. He swaggered out on the set the first day looking like a real mail-order cowboy, fancy riding breeches, and boots, open neck shirt and a ten-gallon Stetson hat.

But when he took one look at the bewildering jumble of cowboys and girls, broncs and steers, he yelled for his assistant to help get the mess straightened out. The only steer the assistant had ever seen was hanging up in a butcher shop, so he just yelled: "Hey, Bob!"

Well, folks, for two whole days while we were filming the rodeo, "Tex" Taurog had the time of his life. So did I. He sort of kept quietly in the background listening to our cowboy lingo, and jotting down the words in his little black book. I have a hunch that he is determined to keep on making western pictures whenever he gets a chance. He just sort of let me play like I was directing the rodeo scenes so he could see how cowboys really act, which was swell with me 'cause I have always had an idea that I'd like to be a director.

One scene called for Bing to milk a wild Brahma cow, and the real thing is a mighty dangerous and spectacular stunt. I had to put a very gentle cow in the chute for the closeup. Just as we were about to shoot the scene, rain stopped everything, and they had to switch to an interior set that didn't require my services. However, I stuck right along with the director as I had some ideas of my own. Seems like I must have got in his hair with some of my ideas.

. . . while Bing, serious as a cannibal pinching a thin missionary, holds down the other end

Anyway, in the middle of one of the dramatic scenes I couldn't help speaking out of turn. "Bing, you're all wet," I said, "a cowboy wouldn't do that. Do it this way."

Well, Taurog was fit to be tied. He chased me to a chair on the other side of the set, and said:

"Listen, Bob, you handle the cows. I'll handle the actors!"

I'll admit I was burned. But I knew my time would come. They still had to go back to the rodeo. Bing still had to milk that wild Brahma cow.

On that fatal day "Tex" Taurog, who had been watching me handle things, said to me, "Stand by, Bob, but I'll handle the chutes myself. Turn 'em loose, boys."

A Brahma cow was in the chute all right, only I saw to it that it wasn't the same cow. She charged out of the chute with a snort, catching the director by surprise, and he got the ride of his life.

"Turn 'er loose, Tex," I yelled, and he hollered back just before he hit the dirt:

"I can't do it. I'm just a passenger."

When the director brushed himself off he said: "What the hell happened?"

"Nothin', Boss," I retorted, "You just handle the actors and I'll handle the cows."

"LOCATION" always means a pack of fun, as well as hard work for us cowboys who help the Hollywood folks make western pictures. "Location" usually means that we get a chance to enjoy two or three weeks out on some ranch.

High up in the Sierras, hundreds of miles from the studio, is the beautiful little

Once I Was a Star——NOW I'm GINGER'S Stand-In!

When Baby Marie was a star and Ginger's mother wrote her screen stories, people told Lela Rogers she should bring little Ginger into movies—because she looked like Baby Marie!

By Marie Osbourne,

as told to Marcella March

Ginger's unforgetting loyalty brought Marie the chance to change her job in a store for one in a studio —where she has an opportunity to regain the stardom she lost

I'M JUST Marie Osbourne, now. But once I was a star—Baby Marie. Maybe you don't remember Baby Marie. I remember her myself only as a little girl who once was I. A little girl who smiled before the camera. or cried, or danced, just as Director Henry King told her to do. And, as a reward for having a perfectly swell time, she was given . . . as I remember it, practically everything. Dolls, dresses, playhouses, pony carts . . . adulation. Plenty of that.

I wasn't quite four when the wheel of fate turned and spun me right into stardom. But perhaps I'm giving fate too much credit, and a trained bear not enough. Yes, I said bear. My foster father owned him, and I was playing with him in our front yard when Director Henry King happened to be passing by. Mr. King stopped to watch the bear, and stayed to watch me. He thought I was cute. Maybe because I had that bear for a foil. At any rate, the Osbournes received a telephone call that night. Would they bring me down to the Balboa studios? They would. A contract was the result.

For the next six years I turned out pictures as quickly as I could make them. I wonder if anyone now remembers Little Mary Sunshine, Sunshine and Shadows, Joy and the Dragon, Dolly Goes West. But then, people crowded to the theaters to see me. I was the Shirley Temple of the 1916's and thereabouts. I remember seas of faces crowding around me whenever I went out in public; people exclaiming, trying to get near me, to touch me.

Only one thing was lacking in my life, and I sensed that in a dim way as the years of my childish career went on. That was the close companionship of other children. Maybe that was why my fancy turned so strongly to thoughts of a little girl I had never seen. Her name was Ginger Rogers. Yes, I was a Rogers fan before Ginger had ever so much as heard of the motion picture industry!

For our virtue in this life, may the Fates give us in our next reincarnation a dog's life in a movie household!

By Clark Warren

Sharing the family responsibility for the well-being of adopted Al Jolson, Jr., still in his crib-age, is the brindle Great Dane belonging to Ruby Keeler and Al, Sr.

IF I were a dog and could pick my place of residence I would select Hollywood—and a prominent movie personage as my owner, for Hollywood is Dog Heaven for any pooch that belongs to what is known as the upper crust of Filmdom, or for any of the screen's dog stars, like Rin-tin-tin Junior, Pete of Our Gang fame, or Buck of Call of the Wild.

Even dying a dog's death has its compensations for there is a pet cemetery far out on Ventura Boulevard where the pets of the famous can be cremated—and given a plebeian funeral in a nice little casket for $27.00, or an aristocratic burial in a private mausoleum for as much as $3,000.

The landscape is dotted as far as the eye can reach by ornate, modern dog hospitals. While the owner waits to consult the doctor he can find his favorite magazines and cigarettes in the reception room.

Careful, Maureen O'Sullivan, or you'll find yourself trailed by a quintet of baying foxhounds!

DOG HEAVEN!

A dog taken to Doctor Moxley's hospital is given a complete x-ray and fluoroscope examination, then placed in a ward in which are interned dogs with similar ailments.

There is a secluded maternity ward where expectant dog mothers may await the arrival of their puppies, without being embarrassed by the vulgar gaze of non-expectant male dogs. Caesarian operations are often performed, most frequently on Boston terriers who seem to find motherhood more of a task than most canines.

Charts are kept on all patients and an entire section of the hospital is devoted to star boarders who have out-of-door play yards, sanitary kennels and places to take daily sun baths. There is an isolation ward for contagious diseases, and a section devoted to grooming, pedicuring, stripping, de-fleaing, clipping and general beauty treatments. Dogs are bathed and dried under modern electric dryers.

Many animals are brought to the hospital regularly for a physical checkup. Files are kept on these and if the owner neglects to bring in his pet, he is telephoned and informed that it's time for Fido's checkup. Special diets are worked out when necessary, and there are private wards for those who have the price.

Various schools train dogs to be perfect ladies and gentlemen in every-day behavior, or school them for film work. Nearly all dogs belonging to stars are trained to a fine point, to make them better companions and pets.

Since talkies came in, it has been necessary to teach animals to obey gestures instead of spoken commands. Lee Duncan, owner of Rin-tin-tin Junior, is said to receive $1,000 for every week he works with his dog. Junior obeys signals quickly; a drop of the hand to run, raised hand for him to stop. He will snarl when someone calls him "good doggie!" Movie dogs, under fine training, become almost human. If a scene demands that the dog lick a boy's face, the owner first makes it lick his hand and then indicates the face of the boy.

Another second-generation dog star is Lightning, son of the once famous Strongheart—one of the most famous animal stars of all time. Flush, the cocker spaniel seen in The Barretts of Wimpole Street, earns $125 a week for his master. Corky, an Airedale used in The Adventures of Frank Merriwell works for $17.50 a day.

NEVER A DULL MOMENT!

—Rhodes

You can't say that Elaine Barrie, John Barrymore and the ever-present Mrs. Jacobs, mother to Elaine, have ever given you a dull moment. John avers he will sue Twentieth Century-Fox Studios for making Sing, Baby, Sing because he claims it is an infringement on his private life—if he has a private life by the time the newspapers are through ballyhooing his affairs. SALLY'S BAD SKIN NEARLY QUEERED HER WHOLE SUMMER
WHAT'S THAT NICE LITTLE SALLY SMITH DOING AROUND HERE ALONE? — I THOUGHT ALL THE YOUNG THINGS HAD GONE OFF ON A PICNIC
IT'S JUST A SHAME THE WAY SHE GETS LEFT OUT OF THINGS
HOW ABOUT GOING DOWN THE LAKE WITH ME THIS MORNING, SALLY?
OH, I'D LOVE TO ISN'T THIS A PERFECT PLACE?
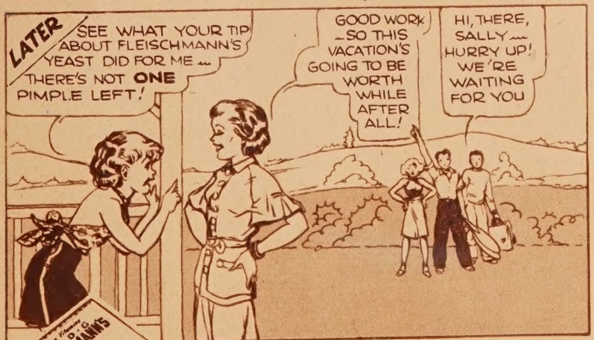
WELL, I'D LIKE IT LOTS MORE IF I COULD ONLY GET IN WITH THE CROWD — BUT I GUESS A GIRL WITH PIMPLES LIKE MINE JUST HASN'T A CHANCE
— NOW, SALLY, JUST YOU REMEMBER WHAT I TOLD YOU ABOUT FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST. I'M SURE IT WILL CLEAR UP YOUR SKIN. TRY IT, WON'T YOU?
I CERTAINLY WILL — I'M GOING DOWN TO THE VILLAGE RIGHT NOW TO GET SOME



LATER
SEE WHAT YOUR TIP ABOUT FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST DID FOR ME — THERE'S NOT ONE PIMPLE LEFT!
GOOD WORK — SO THIS VACATION'S GOING TO BE WORTH WHILE AFTER ALL!
HI, THERE, SALLY — HURRY UP! WE'RE WAITING FOR YOU

Don't let adolescent pimples keep YOU from making friends

GOOD TIMES can be sadly hampered by a pimply skin. Yet many young people have to fight this trouble after the start of adolescence—from about 13 to 25, or even longer.

During this period, important glands develop and final growth takes place. The entire system is disturbed. The skin, in particular, gets extremely sensitive. Waste poisons in the blood irritate this sensitive skin and unsightly pimples break out.

But these adolescent pimples can be corrected. Fleischmann's fresh Yeast clears the skin irritants out of the blood. Then, the pimples go!

Eat 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast daily—one cake about ½ hour before each meal. Eat it plain, or dissolved in a little water until your skin clears. Start today!

PICKING the WINNER!

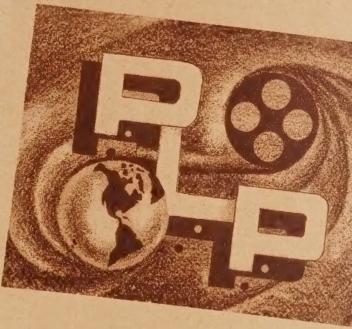
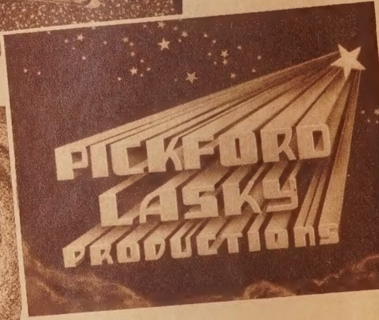
Naming the lucky contestants whose trademarks win $1,000 from the new Pickford-Lasky Corporation

PICKFORD - LASKY
pickford-lasky

Mary Pickford and Jesse Lasky judging the entries. They were elated at the fine quality of designs submitted for their choice



SCREEN BOOK's winner, Shinkichi Hanagata from Tokyo, Japan, submitted this design which wins $100



From a background of stars letters shoot forward from the light of one huge star in this trademark which will be used on all Pickford-Lasky films. Reed Williams won $600 for this design

HERE'S what everyone has been waiting for—the outcome of the Pickford-Lasky Trademark Contest.

Reed Williams, Glendale, Calif., MOTION PICTURE Magazine winner of $100 for one of the best five designs, was awarded $500 for the grand prize.

Shinkichi Hanataga, Tokyo, Japan, SCREEN BOOK'S prize of $100.

Alice Kirkpatrick, Huntsville, Ala., HOLLYWOOD Magazine's $100.

Edward Crane Denton, Boston, Mass., MOVIE CLASSIC'S $100.

J. C. Claudis, Farmingdale, N. J., SCREEN PLAY'S $100.

There were more than 20,000 people from every country in the world interested enough to submit either an idea or a completed drawing. Entries came from South Africa. Several were from folk living within the Arctic Circle. Japan was well represented. Two came from Arabia. Many were alike—for instance, more than 500 used a lighthouse. Every kind of animal was represented. But all the ideas showed thought and skill.

Miss Pickford and Mr. Lasky took an active part in sorting and judging the mail and were as happy as a couple of school kids at the deluge of ideas. The corporation really hopes to be able to have the new trademark animated in time to use on "The Gay Desperado," a new picture starring Nino Martini, Ida Lupino and Leo Carrillo. Perfectly adapted to motion, the new trademark is typically modern in design.

It was difficult to make eliminations for the final winners and two trademarks were selected. One is Mr. Williams' symbol which will be flashed on the screen; the other will be used on all letter heads and legal papers. The latter design will also become the seal of the company.

In addition to the prizes, trademark suggestions submitted by the following persons have been given honorable mention:

Maurice Anthoni, 2000 N. Highland, Hollywood, Calif.

Theodore Braasch, 5660 Fair Ave., North Hollywood.

Edward Czarnecki, 14204 Cedar Grove, Detroit, Mich.

Pauline Gale, 1831½ Grace Ave., Hollywood, Calif.

Ladies—Can You Take It?

ONE day, Baxter's mother had a date with him for lunch on the Fox lot. She appeared, wearing a neat black outfit—particularly stunning, as black so often is when worn by elderly women. But black is anathema to Baxter! Just as his mother arrived at the entrance to the stage where he was working, Baxter came hurrying out. He saw his mother!

"Good heavens, mother!" he shrieked.

Startled, his mother turned to a woman friend. "What is wrong?" she asked.

"Those clothes—mother—those clothes! I tell you, I'm not going to take you into the dining room unless you do something to relieve that awful dead black!"

So embarrassing was the moment, that a studio seamstress hurriedly offered to rush to the wardrobe department to get a white lace collar for his mother to satisfy the aesthetic tastes of her son. But no. She might be only Warner's mother, but she was a woman, and not even a loved son could talk about her clothes that way. So she drew herself up and said:

"Very well, then! I'll go home!"

Baxter was punctured. "Well, if that's the way you feel about it—" he surrendered, and took his mother to lunch.

But let's hear what Warner himself has to say about his violent reactions to feminine apparel.

Baxter, self-assured, and confident of his position, takes your breath away with the apparent logic of his replies.

"In the first place," he says, "a woman dresses primarily to please men, to attract men, to arouse men's interest, to draw each particular man's attention to her particular self instead of to another woman.

"Well, then, granting that," he continues, "why do women insist on nullifying that very fundamental aim by wearing clothes which are utterly unsuited to them? Don't they realize that the slightest clashing note in the harmony of their attire destroys the entire effect?

"Don't they realize that a man is by nature conscious of any incongruous note, no matter how tiny, in the ensemble that clothes the creature in whom he is interested? And doesn't she realize that anything that will tend to make her in any degree ludicrous in his estimation, destroys her utterly? And what, I ask, can be more ludicrous than some of the absurdities that women, in their current race to be outstanding in attire, achieve? Why, if a man, say, should appear in a hat with the general outlines of those which women have been wearing this summer, he'd be slapped into an insane asylum. And darned if I see why some of the women that wear them should be immune!

"I DON'T think I, myself, am unique in my reaction to women's clothes. From my conversation with other men—and believe it, men do discuss women's clothes—I know that most men feel precisely as I do about the matter. But, for some reason, most men will suffer in silence rather than tell their womenfolk how they feel about it. I won't! If my mother, or my acquaintance, or my wife wears something which I—and other men—think is unbecoming or silly, then I want her to know about it. It may not be according to the best canons of conventional behavior, but I can't help but feel that a woman should be grateful to a man for telling her about her clothes, rather than resentful when he criticises with a sincere desire to help."

Clark Gable, having just gone through an earthquake for scenes in San Francisco, rushes to the studio dining room to talk skeet shooting with Jack Conway, director, and Jimmy Robinson, writer of outdoor tales and former manager for the lady dead-eye, Annie Oakley

Winnie Baxter, his wife, agrees with her husband's views. There does not hang in all her wardrobe, extensive as it is, one single piece of wearing apparel of which Warner doesn't approve. Oh, no—he doesn't go out to select them for her. But, the first time he sees them, he makes his decision. It's like the old Roman amphitheater days—"thumbs up" or—"thumbs down." And those, of which Baxter does not approve, are out. A niece, some other relative, even a servant, may suddenly find herself presented by Winnie Baxter with an exquisite new creation—dress, hat, pajamas, playsuit, coat—anything!

Instances of Baxter's dislikes are innumerable. Here's one: At a little beach party once, Mrs. Baxter, thinking to surprise hubby, appeared in new beach pajamas with tiny flowers. Baxter glared. They argued and argued. Finally he won her over.

She hurried upstairs to change. And never again did Winnie wear the discarded pajamas.

Let's listen to Baxter again:

"Why, for instance, should women wear those abominable 'mannish cut' clothes—those severely tailored things that hide whatever there is of femininity about her so that, seeing her at a distance, you can't tell whether she's Wally Beery in skirts or your girl friend?

"She wants to attract men. Does black, as a color, attract attention? No. Then why, in the name of Eve, should she hide herself in a smokescreen of black cloth?"

And what's more, take it from Baxter in parting, there's a matter of time as well as of taste in women's wear.

No woman, he feels, should try to be sartorially outstanding in the earlier hours of the day. Late afternoon and night—that's the time for women to become clothes conscious.

"A woman, no matter what she's wearing, doesn't interest men much before the cocktail hour. That's when woman begins to come into her own in men's lives. Before that, let her be utilitarian, practical, helpful, whatever she wants—but don't let her try to knock his eye out with clothes.

"But from cocktail time on—then let her do her stuff!"

about Permanent Waves . . . . . .

OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND STARRING IN THE WARNER PRODUCTION, "ANTHONY ADVERSE"

RIGHT down to facts, a successful permanent wave requires three things: the expert hairdresser, the waving solution that gently softens the hair, and heat properly controlled and applied. Too much heat makes frizzy ends, dried out hair and a kinky wave.

Because the Duart method provides a thermostat in each heater—each curl receives exactly the amount of heat required to form a perfect wave. Small curls along the sides and back of the head receive the least heating while the larger curls along the top of the head receive more. Nothing is left to guesswork or judgment. Each heater automatically shuts itself off when its curl is perfectly waved.

Because of its exact heat control—Duart is the only wave that is endorsed by the Motion Picture Hairstylists Guild—the organization responsible for the beautiful hair of every lovely star you see on the screen.

Choose your next permanent just as though you were a Hollywood Star—ask for a genuine Duart wave . . . look for your individual sealed package of waving pads.

Finds Way To Have Young Looking Skin at 35!

SMART, modern women no longer submit to the tragedy of "old skin" just because they are 30, 35, 40! A wonderful new creme, applied at night like cold cream, acts a scientific way to free the skin of that veil of semi-visible darkening particles which ordinary creams cannot remove after a certain age. So gentle and quick—often only 5 days is time enough to bring out a glorious rose petal softness and fineness and white, clear look of youth. And, the way it eliminates common surface blemishes—ugly pimples, blackheads, freckles—is a revelation! Ask for this creme—Golden Peacock Bleach Creme at all drug and department stores.

FRANCHOT TONE has intimated to friends that he and Joan Crawford may co-star in a couple of Little Theatre plays somewhere in Connecticut the coming summer.

GEORGE RAFT unveiled to Hollywood recently the last word in sport coats. Absolutely impossible to describe except to say it has more colors than Technicolor ever thought of.

BOB BURNS, from Van Buren, Arkansas, of radio and screen fame, was standing on the Paramount lot, the center of a group of players when one of the few blond extras remaining in cinemaland approached him and after a pleasant greeting said to Bob:

"Are you on location?"

"What do you think?" snapped back the amazed Burns.

Proving that some blonds are still dumb.

ADELE ASTAIRE—despite any reports to the contrary—IS returning to Hollywood in the near future and IS going to have a rôle in Sam Goldwyn's picture in which Merle Oberon will be starred.

ELAINE BARRIE, the "Ariel" to John Barrymore's "Caliban" is still without a picture assignment and John B. has vehemently protested to studio officials that Elaine is getting the well known run around. And John is mighty peeved over the whole thing. Meanwhile Elaine is carrying on and taking lessons in elocution.

JOHN is still a problem. At an operatic evening a few nights since, in the foyer, a chap stepped up to Barrymore and greeted him effusively. With Barrymore was Elaine Barrie and her mother.

"I would have you meet mv lady friends," said John, "but it would mean nothing to you."

Amazed, the chap bowed low and went into the theater.

MAE WEST treated members of her family to a novel gift recently. Her brother, her sister and her sister's husband were given carte blanche to go the limit with a famous plastic surgeon in Hollywood. They did.

SHIRLEY TEMPLE played hostess to the little French girl who won the contest in France which decided the French girl who looked most like Shirley.

When the day's fun started the French girl could speak no English; Shirley could speak no French. When the day ended Shirley could toss off a dozen French phrases. The French girl acquired no English phrases.

CHARLIE BUTTERWORTH wears a black eye for We Went to College, a cultivated variety produced by the make-up man's skill. Charlie wears dark glasses around the studio and has taken a lot of ribbing about trying to hide the results of an altercation with some bigger and tougher guy.

FROM far-away Borneo came a letter to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio. It read: "I have written you before that the public here doesn't appreciate films with the hero wearing a mustache. If there is one showing they won't come to see the show. Please take note."

JOAN CRAWFORD has a new pastime on the set. She tosses quoits.

GLENDA FARRELL and Brian Donlevy, co-stars in Trouble Makers, lunched at the Assistance League tearoom. Brian sat with another group, his back to Glenda. During the course of the meal he accidentally upset the salt shaker and, kowtowing to the old superstition, cast a pinch over his shoulder. It sprinkled on Glenda. Brian apologized, but Glenda interrupted: "Oh, please don't mind, I need salting down every once in a while. I'm too fresh!"

DIRECTOR MICHAEL CURTIZ lost his temper, film was wasted and costly time flitted by when extras, playing tribesmen in battle scenes of Errol Flynn's Charge of the Light Brigade, refused to fa' down dead. After much yelling by the director and several assistants over the loud speaker system and much retaking by a battery of cameras, the proper number took their cues and bit the dust.

STEPIN FETCHIT, the famous colored comic, has returned to Hollywood and films and has brought a brand new idea with him—and seriously.

Step has formed a pool and is dickering for a large acreage a few miles out of Hollywood. He plans to establish a colony for colored folks which he is going to call Harlemwood.

You get from the name a combo of Hollywood and Harlem and Step proposes to have night clubs, hotels, restaurants and the like on a large scale.

WHEN a fire on the 20th Century-Fox lot burned the New York Street set, Jane Withers' so-called office went up in flames. In this cubby-hole Jane had hung a placard: "We Don't Sell Anything. If You Want to Hang Your Coat Up It Costs 2c. Signed XXX Club." The "Club" was composed of Jane and her stand-in, who divided the pennies which they collected.

AS YOU know, Pat Paterson is an English girl who married Frenchman Charles Boyer. Not long ago she and Boyer journeyed to France so the bride could meet her new mother-in-law. Mme. Boyer has returned the call, coming to visit Pat who, although she is thrilled at having her guest, cannot entertain her on the Spendthrift set, at Wanger Studio. She explains: "In the picture I'm to speak in a strong Irish brogue, and if I'm talking to Charles' mother between shots I find myself using a French accent instead of Irish." Mme. Boyer cannot speak a word of English.

MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK was handed a dainty handkerchief which another party guest had picked up. "Ah, no. That one is not mine," she said unfolding a huge linen square. "I always carry a family handkerchief—large enough, you see, to wipe all the noses of all the young children."

AT A recent Bing Crosby broadcast Leopold Stokowski, famous conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Philadelphia, was a guest with his orchestra. He played four selections by four famous composers.

After the concert Leopold asked Bing which composer he favored.

"I'm heavy for that guy Debussy," said Bing. "He's my meat."

Real praise indeed for Debussy and without the frills.

GLADYS GEORGE paid a visit to the studios during her starring engagement in Personal Appearance in Los Angeles recently. And under decidedly different conditions than when she last visited the studios, five years ago.

At the time Gladys made the rounds of the studios with her friend, Frances Deaner, and tried to get a job. She was willing to start as an extra. No takers. Then recently her big stage success and now all major studios bidding for her.

SIMONE SIMON, the French actress who has had a tempestuous screen career since coming to this country a year ago, is finally set to play the lead in French Doll, the new title for Kiki, recently purchased by her studio from Mary Pickford. Simone still is unable to speak English to interviewers, but talks perfect English, without a trace of accent, off screen.

MAE WEST, among many other screen stars, was recently asked her opinion anent a controversy as to whether a man should take off his hat when entering an elevator.

Mae's reply: "It's quite all right for a man to take off his hat in an elevator. But for a man to take off his hat—and leave it in the wrong place when he departs—that is something else again."

JACK OAKIE, on return from location and with his honeymoon over found a way to keep wifey occupied while Jackie was at work. He financed a hat shop for Venita in the exclusive shopping district. Between pictures Jack has promised to do the floorwalker stunt and will meet his public at the shop, hoping of course that they will be in a hat buying mood.

WALTER WINCHELL may use this in his column if he cares to. Winchell's Hollywood representatives have had little success in selling the columnist to major studios as a screen star because, so the studios claim his asking price for one picture is just a few dollars less than Garbo gets.

FRANK FAY, since his return to Hollywood from whence he broadcasts, has amazed even his closest friends, who were quite sure that he would make overtures to Barbara Stanwyck for a reconciliation. As a matter of truth Frank is seemingly entirely indifferent to Barbara's stepping out with Robert Taylor and other filmites. Fay is more interested in getting a screen contract and that he will, and shortly.

MELVIN PURVIS, former G-Man and credited with the capture of Dillinger, is in Hollywood and available for picture work either as an actor, writer or technical director.

● "Come on—stop chewing petals and get busy! Imagine finding flowers on the living-room floor—we'll pick the loveliest bouquet for Mother! We'll tear off all these old leaves and break the stems good and short..."

● "Aw—brace up! Picking flowers isn't such hard work. Show some of the old ginger! I know it's 95 in the shade today and we're both sticky as yesterday's bib... but just keep going and you won't notice the heat!"

● "Say—wait a minute! Your shoulder's prickly and red! Nope—kissing doesn't make it well... We'd better ask Mother to give us a sprinkle of Johnson's Baby Powder. That soft, downy powder'll make a new baby of you!"

Johnson's Baby Powder

"I'm Johnson's Baby Powder...your baby's friend every day, but most of all when the weather's hot and sticky! Prickly heat and chafes and rashes stay away when I'm on guard. I'm soft as satin, for I'm made of the very finest Italian talc. And no orris-root. I hope you use Johnson's Baby Soap and Cream, too—and Johnson's Oil for tiny babies!"

Upsa daisy! Carolyn Babcock, crack woman tennis player, takes Cesar Romero, who is pretty good at the game too, over the hurdles. Butch, as Cesar is known to his intimates, now is attempting to overcome insinuations that he closely resembles the late Rudolph Valentino. As a matter of fact, though, he has bought Falcon Lair, the home Rudy loved and leaves an adherent coating. Gives a nice dull finish to shiny legs, softens rough elbows and knees and cools skin suffering from sunburn or insect bites. The jar is black, with gold accents.

Woodbury's Facial Soap — supercleanser as always—now has an added quality. It contains the Sunshine Vitamin which, as everyone knows, has a very beneficial effect on the skin. The formula of the soap has not been changed, but one of the ingredient is irradiated, during the soap-making process. Woodbury's creamy lather, nice scent and low price remain the same.

Max Factor's Make-up Blender is an indispensable preparation for the girl who freckles or burns in the sun. Applied carefully, it shields the skin from harmful sunrays, and at the same time gives it a smooth, dull, made-up finish. If your neck or arms have tanned more than your face, the Make-up Blender will banish this discrepancy, too, so that you are a uniform shade above your evening frock. Movie stars like the Blender for arms and shoulders because it doesn't rub off when they're dancing or acting romantic rôles

Madame Berthé presents two reliable personal daintiness aids, Zip Facial Hair Remover and Zip Instant Deodorant. The hair remover, which can be used on the arms and legs as well as the face, removes superfluous hair safely and neatly, leaving your skin matchlessly smooth. You apply the cream in strips, press a piece of cloth over the cream, then whip off the cloth, cream and hair. A little practice, and you become so deft that you wonder why you ever fretted over the problem . . . The clear, water-like deodorant with a convenient sponge applicator checks perspiration locally and prevents odor, when it is applied twice a week according to directions.

Hess Witch Hazel Cream in the blue and white bottle, is a mildly astringent powder base, as well as a softening, whitening hand lotion. A bath in warm water, and a rub-down with this skin lotion will soothe the hottest, tiredest feet; and it reacts equally well on a sunburned or windburned skin. When you use it as a hand lotion, always rub it gently into the cuticle, to keep it soft and pliable.

The La Cross people have added two new summer shades to their line of long-lasting and non-chipping creme nail polishes. "Rust" is a dark, reddish-russet tone and "Suntan" is a light orangy shade, both of them harmonizing well with sunbrowned fingers. An unusual feature of this extra-smooth nail polish is the "Drop-it-on" Oily Polish Remover, shown beside the bottle of polish in the photograph. The dropper-stopper serves two purposes—for applying remover economically to the nails and also for adding remover to the polish, to thin it out. A grand idea, isn't it?

Hollywood Ahoy!

Join a lively congenial traveling party

ONLY a short time remains for joining the second annual Movieland Tour sponsored by SCREEN BOOK and a group of cooperating railroads. A few reservations remain open for the August trip which leaves Chicago on Sunday, August 9 and returns to Chicago on August 23.

So popular has been this new plan of proffering an opportunity to see Hollywood, that the July trip is a sell-out and room on the August special trains will soon be at a premium.

The itinerary for the trippers is as follows:

Aug. 9 lv. Chicago via Burlington Railroad.

Aug. 10 lv. St. Paul via Northern Pacific (sightseeing at Rainier National Park).

Aug. 13 arrive Seattle for sightseeing.

Aug. 14 tour of San Francisco.

Aug. 16 arrive Los Angeles via Southern Pacific.

The next four days will be spent in Hollywood, with start of the return to Chicago made August 20 via Union Pacific Railway.

Aug. 21 sightseeing in Salt Lake City.

Aug. 22 arrive Denver.

Highlights of the Hollywood visit will be a cocktail party at the Beverly Hills home of Donald Woods, where you will meet this popular young man who made such a hit in The Story of Louis Pasteur, Frisco Kid and White Angel.

Trippers will visit Universal Studios where Carole Lombard and Bill Powell are making My Man Godfrey and where Showboat came into being . . . a boat trip to beautiful Santa Catalina Island.

Bette Davis will be guest of honor with other famous stars at the annual banquet in the Blossom Room at the Roosevelt Hotel. The Roosevelt and Plaza Hotels, the best known in Hollywood, will be headquarters during the travelers' stay in Hollywood. Max Factor will entertain at his internationally famous beauty salon and every minute of the stay will be filled with exciting events.

For a beautifully illustrated booklet and complete details, send a postcard to Joe E. Godfrey, Jr., Movieland Tour Director, 360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

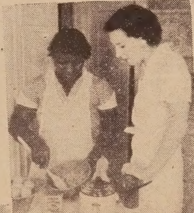
MONA BARRIE Offers a Delicious JELLIED TUNA LOAF

Mona's new picture is Here Comes Trouble—but that does not apply to the use of her grand recipes!

by Joan Davis

Mona smiles in anticipation as she reaches for the tuna fish. She knows her guests will relish her jellied loaf

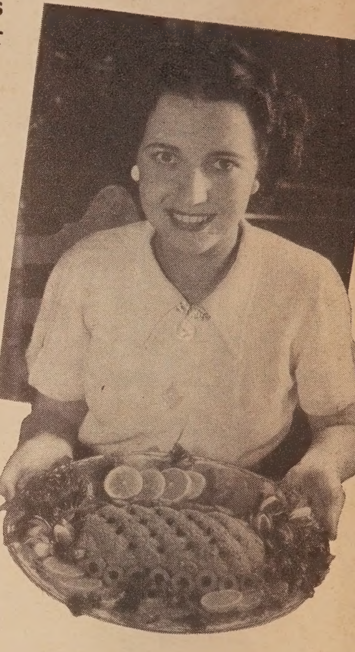
Laura Washington, Miss Barrie's cook, runs hot water over the tuna in sieve to remove the oil



Laura mixes flaked tuna with other ingredients and the slightly thickened gelatin

"Be sure to fill all corners," cautions Laura, as she presses the tuna-gelatin mixture into the mold. Mona helps by rinsing out her Nesco Enameled Ware

A cloth wrung out of hot water, and placed on mold, makes the chilled mixture slip out easily, explains the cook



The finished product! Doesn't it look inviting?

MONA BARRIE is considered not only one of the best dressed actresses in Hollywood, but one of the most popular hostesses as well. You and I would attribute this to her personality and hospitality, but not this clever girl—she declares it is because she has a good cook and knows food values herself, which enables her to give any directions necessary about menus and recipes.

While we basked in the sun flooding Mona's patio, she explained, "On the continent and in New York, people are accustomed to being wined and dined in great style—in Hollywood, it's the tastefully but informally served dinner that brings guests back another time. Hence, I have two rules—watch the kitchen and have an outdoor patio! I find that parties given in the sunshine or moonlight induce thoughts of sport clothes, a good time, and a hearty appetite."

"I'll take you literally," I said. "I've seen the patio—now show me the kitchen."

Mona does know housekeeping! Laura, the cook, was beaming and busy. Venetian blinds decorated casement windows, while wall paper, above the tile, exhibited carrots, turnips, and all sorts of good things to whet an appetite. The cooking utensils were most attractive—Nesco Enameled Ware I discovered—no wonder Laura is happy!

Here is the recipe that Laura and Mona have worked out for their

JELLIED TUNA LOAF:

2 tbls. gelatin
½ cup cold water
½ cup boiling water
¾ cup sugar
½ tsp. salt
2 tbls. lemon juice
½ cup orange juice
1½ cups grapefruit juice
1½ cups drained, flaked tuna fish
1 cup diced celery
4 tbls. stuffed olives, chopped

Soak the gelatin in cold water until soft. Dissolve in boiling water and add sugar and salt. Then stir until dissolved. Add the fruit juices and chill. Pour a thin layer of chilled mixture into a large mold, turning the mold so it is thoroughly coated with gelatin. Chill in refrigerator until stiff. Chill the remaining gelatin mixture until it starts to stiffen.

Place the tuna in a sieve, and rinse with hot water. Turn the tuna into a bowl and flake [Continued on page 69]

9 out of 10 girls should make this "Armhole Odor" Test

Tonight, when you take off your dress, smell the fabric at the armhole—that is the way you smell to others!

THE most scrupulous care cannot protect you, charming as you are, from the daily unpleasantness of perspiration odor if you deodorize only. You can test it quite easily for yourself tonight. When you take off your dress, simply smell the fabric under the arm.

If you have been deodorizing only, the chances are 9 out of 10 that you'll discover a musty, stale "armhole odor" in your dress. That odor is what other people notice when you are near them!

It is easy to explain. Unless you keep your underarm dry, as well as sweet, it is inevitable that some perspiration will collect and dry on the armhole of your dress.

This need happen only once, yet every time you put that dress on, the warmth of your body will bring out the odor of stale perspiration. Fastidiously fresh though you are, that unpleasant "armhole odor" gives the impression of unforgivable carelessness!

Protect yourself this SURE way

Women who seriously value their charm willingly spend the few extra moments required to use Liquid Odorono, because it is sure. With Odorono, your underarm is not only odorless, but absolutely dry. Your dresses will never collect those little drops of moisture which can undo all the other measures you take for flawless loveliness.

Doctors say Odorono is entirely safe. With Odorono, the usual underarm perspiration is merely diverted, and comes out on less confined areas of the body, where it can evaporate freely.

Saves your expensive gowns

Odorono ends forever those shocking perspiration stains which can fade and ruin a lovely frock or coat lining, in just one wearing. And of course, there is no grease to make your clothes messy.

You can get Odorono in two strengths—Regular and Instant. You need use Regular Odorono (Ruby colored) only twice a week. Instant Odorono (Colorless) is for especially sensitive skin or quick emergency use—to be used daily or every other day. At all toilet-goods counters.

Let Odorono keep your underarm dry, your clothes as sweet and fresh as you are—and you will be truly exquisite. Send today for samples of two Odoronos and leaflet on complete underarm dryness offered below.

I'll take Farrell, bless her, the way she is.

I've a mental memory book of Glenda. From the time she played in stock. When her fourteen-year-old son Tommy was a tiny baby and she an eager-eyed girl-mother intent upon getting for her child everything which she had ever wanted for herself. Blue eyes alive with planning for him, she spun her dreams. I wrote a play about her. Made her a movie star at the final curtain. She laughed me to scorn. "What," she inquired briskly, "Would I use for a face in the movies? No, thank you, I'll stick to the stage."

But she's happy that she has done the things she dreamed of for Tommy. Tommy, who is a grand youngster.

Child that he is, he has an almost adult appreciation of his mother. He adores her. And understands her. Glenda, usually extravagant of expression, says so very simply of Tommy, "He is my heart."

But if you think they are placid and peaceful and calm, this Irish girl and her child, just drop by that house in the valley. They argue about everything in crisp, staccato sentences. Neither ever wins. They just change the subject or play ping pong or any other game of the moment.

AGAIN my memory book . . . Glenda turning down the orchids sent by a wealthy admirer who wanted to take her to supper with him after the show, to sit at a hamburger counter with a struggling young actor who had asked her to coach him in a scene for which he would have a try-out next morning.

Glenda, the movie star, is exactly the same girl. Her heart rules her head and if she were to bother to analyze it, she'd not bother to change. She'll save her pennies one day and squander her dollars the next. She'll swear you to secrecy on a personal secret and you'll hear it from ten people the next day. But wild horses could not drag from her a confidence given to her by someone else.

She is about as socially ambitious as the kitten I found her caring for one evening when I called to take her to a formal dinner. With fifteen minutes to go, I found her, in slacks, on her back porch, bending with infinite concern over a stray cat which had turned up that morning. Patiently, ever so patiently, she was feeding the miserable little thing with an eye dropper. Awaiting the arrival of the veterinary. Not until he had assured her that the animal would recover, did she scurry into her room, dress hastily, and leave for the party.

Suavely she entered her hostess' drawing-room, an hour late, with the simple explanation, "I was sitting with a sick friend, so—so sorry." Of course no one believed her, but she didn't bother to establish the truth of her explanation. Her hostess was very obviously annoyed. So Glenda chattered on . . . "Oh, no, I forgot about the dinner. Oh, no, I worked late at the studio. Oh, no, I was in an automobile accident. Oh, no, I guess I'm all wrong . . . I think Farrell was drowned an hour ago, and I just came in her place."

Spacing her apologies over a period of minutes the absurdity of the whole thing finally broke down the hostess' resistance and she laughed gaily. Then, and not until then, did the incorrigible Glenda really apologize and explain. Very humbly.

BUT it isn't always a sick cat which confuses her social engagements. One day she breezed into my room. She called out, "Surprise, I'm on time!"

"On time for what?" I asked.

"Haven't we a luncheon date? We haven't? Well, I've got a luncheon date with someone. Do you know who it is?" Then, as she noticed my expression, she clapped a hand over her mouth, her face filled with an expression of such sorrow that I nearly hurst into sympathetic tears. "Oh, honey, it was last Tuesday I had a luncheon date with you, wasn't it? Oh, honey, you know I'm sorry. Forgive me?"

And as I laughed, I remembered that this absent-mindedness was no Hollywood contribution to her personality, either. Remembered the day in stock when she forgot . . . I mean it, forgot a matinee! We'll pass over the agony of that afternoon, the sorry spectacle her absence made of the performance. The irate utterances of the stage manager when she appeared for the evening performance, after they'd had the police looking for her and had searched all the hospitals. We'll pass over that agony so that I may tell you quickly that she was sitting calmly in the motion picture theatre next door watching a picture in which her favorite star appeared!

Her romances are always in the papers. There are those who say she is fickle. Nothing could be less true. Glenda is in love with love. I know it. She told me so one day, and I know she spoke truthfully and earnestly.

"LOVE is the most important thing in the world to me. St. Valentine's day is my favorite holiday! I mean it! Anyone can forget me on Christmas or on my birthday, and I scarcely notice it. But if my family forget me on Valentine's day I sulk for a week! Love is an inspiration and a strength. Being cared for, I mean. Knowing that someone cares will tide over discouragements or disappointments. I married too terribly young, you know. I think I didn't know much until my heart broke. Until courage and the Irish in me had to make up for what that did to me. I am glad for that now.

"Now I think it was not the fault of the person I loved. It was rather my fault for not realizing that love, romance, is like a purple robe which we drape upon an ideal. Then we try to make it fit a man. He may not have the stature to carry it. But love is beauty and love is living. I admit I am in love with love! I think I shall be the same when I am very old. Whether I ever meet the man of my dreams or not."

Perhaps that is why her romances become fine friendships. Why the eager young men who go courting become her proud young friends. Then, too, Glenda cherishes her independence. In her work, her thinking, her life. Seeking no quarter, accepting none. Unpredictable, thoroughly lovable, looking forward, not backward, and ever lending a hand, she goes on her way.

I salute the tempestuous Farrell. May she never change in any way.

Mona Barrie Offers a Delicious Tuna Loaf

in moderate-sized pieces. Mix tuna with remaining ingredients and with chilled and slightly stiffened gelatin, handling gently so that ingredients will not become mushy. Take the lined mold from ice box and press in tuna-gelatin mixture. Be sure all the corners are filled. Cover the mold with waxed paper and fasten with rubber bands. Place in refrigerator until very stiff. Place a cloth wrung out of hot water on table and set mold on it. This enables loaf to be removed easily. After removing waxed paper, lay chilled platter on top of mold. Turn over to remove the loaf.

Mona decorates her platter with radishes, lemon slices, parsley, sliced tomatoes, and stuffed olives. She suggests serving hot rolls, potato chips and tomato juice with the loaf.

"Serve sherbet for dessert," she told me, "and one will have a well-balanced, tasty meal."

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c at all drug stores. © 1935, C. M. Co.

Just a trio of old salts passing a holiday on the briny deep—Elizabeth Russell, Kent Taylor and Eleanore Whitney, recruits to Hollywood's rapidly growing yacht hysteria, take off for a speedy ride in the recently opened Newport Yacht Harbor was to go big-game hunting in Africa. His father loaded him onto a train and they started for Atlantic City—which was to be Africa for Jimmy. But a train ahead was wrecked, holding up the Africa-bound train and Atlantic City was never reached. Father Stewart took Jimmy Stewart back to Indiana, Pa., where Jimmy contented himself by shooting a skunk, which put him in disgrace for a week when he took it home.

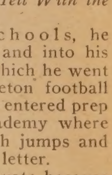
From big-game hunting, young Stewart turned to the higher sciences, first chemicals. He learned the elementals from a carnival man, whom he took home as a house guest without his parent's consent. Anyway, his father bought him a big chemical set of his own.

His next interest was radios. He made his first ones out of oatmeal boxes and, with his Dad's help, actually made a set that worked. When he first heard music coming out of the air, young Stewart screamed and cried with delight. He's been a radio bug ever since and still has the last one he made.

Then the war came and he remembers his father marching off to a training camp. When his father sailed, the family accompanied him to New York where there were lots of soldiers and speeches and hullabaloo, and before returning home Jim enjoyed the thrills of the Woolworth building and the Statue of Liberty.



Even all the kids in town were playing war. They dug up almost all their backyards for trenches and when Dad's souvenirs began arriving from France Jim had the best helmets and gas masks in the backyard battles.

Probably young Stewart's first experience in the drama had its birth in the basement of his home. There, the children built a stage with a curtain that actually rolled up and down and presented such plays as To Hell With the Kaiser.

From Indiana public schools, he stepped up to high school and into his first pair of long pants, in which he went to see his first Yale-Princeton football game. After high school, he entered prep school at Mercersburg Academy where his achievements in the high jumps and the hurdles won for him his letter.

"But I almost didn't graduate because of Cicero," he admits.

Princeton came next. It was there where his bashfulness suggested the purchase of the accordion. He became a member of one Charter Club and joined the Triangle Club for its musical shows. He sang and played his accordion in the school plays for three years—1930-1931-1932—and meanwhile studied for a career as an architect. During the summer months he worked as assistant to a magician, Bill Neff, in his home town.

Upon graduation, Jim Stewart—with his architectural education—started out to design the world's finest buildings. But it was in one of those years when woodsheds weren't even being built—so he went to Falmouth to play his accordion in a tea room.

During his college days, Stewart had made several friends with a stock company in Falmouth. He joined the company, then known as "Theater Unit," and, fortified by his experience in the Triangle shows, he became an actor. Goodbye Again, had been tried out by the Falmouth company, so, when it went to Broadway, Stewart went with it.

After several successive stage hits, he was screen-tested by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and sent on to Hollywood.

In Hollywood, he took up aviation. Today, he is an expert flier with a pilot's license. His screen appearances have been in The Murder Man, Rose-Marie, Wife vs. Secretary, Next Time We Love, Small Town Girl, Speed, which gave him his first leading rôle, and now he is working with Joan Crawford in Gorgeous Hussy. He has been selected for the lead opposite Eleanor Powell in Easy to Love.

He lives in a bachelor bungalow in Brentwood, California, with the same roommates he had in New York—Henry Fonda and Joshua Logan. When they moved into the house, it carried with it one lonely, female cat. The cat had a litter of six kittens. Four of the kittens later raised huge families of their own. To date, Stewart's home is over-run with, as well as he can count them—Thirty-two cats.

The cats are wild, defying capture. Nightly they yowl under the house, crying for food. Mice, there are a-plenty, but the cats ignore the mice, apparently preferring caviar.

So Stewart obtained a police dog to police his premises. But, strange as it seems, the cats gang up on the police dog.

While the cats continue to yowl and multiply.

They Wanted to be Cowboys mountain town of Lone Pine. Great hunting and fishing. When the location was selected, "Tex" Taurog immediately decided that he and Bing would "rough it." They invited that fella, Bob Burns, who plays a funny-looking thing he calls the "bazooka," to join them.

Well, when the cowboys and I got to Lone Pine, we were dumbfounded to meet something that looked like a circus train. Leading a procession of trucks and touring cars, loaded down with fancy baggage, were director and the star in a limousine. In one of the cars they had an English butler, a Chinese cook and two Filipino houseboys.

"Hey Bob," they yelled, "get your boys and help us unload."

Believe it or not, they had an electric stove and refrigerator, kitchen utensils, a radio bar, guns, fishing tackle and everything you could imagine. And, they had rented a mansion which was the summer home of some wealthy man.

After us cowboys had spent most of the day unloading, we crawled into our own tepees that night, kind of disgusted.

We thought they were going to "rough it!"

"HEY Bob!" said the director one evening after a good day's work, "come over tonight for dinner."

Imagine how I felt when I walked in to find several guests all dressed in evening clothes. Those rough, tough cowboys, Tex and Bing, were in tuxedos. They even had the hillbilly with the bazooka in one, and the beautiful Frances Farmer wore a swell evening gown. At first, the "dead pan" butler wasn't going to let me in, 'cause I didn't have on a coat, but the director finally convinced him that it was okay.

I might have known not to trust a comedy director and a crooner. They put me right next to Miss Farmer. She looks like a swell girl, but I found out later she was in on it too.

First thing, my water glass leaked and spilled on her. I apologized, and she acted kind of cold. When I tried to cut the Never has a game held Hollywood—or the whole nation, for that matter—so long in its thrall as Monopoly. Now it makes its screen debut in Meet Nero Wolfe. Here Lionel Stander and Russell Hardie get pointers from director Biberman. Notice that Lionel Stander is on the milk wagon steak, it slipped off my plate like it was made of rubber, and I spilled some gravy on my lap. Miss Farmer looked at me sort of funny and kind of edged away, I was never so embarrassed in my life.

"Hey Bob!" asked Bing, "How you doing?"

"I'm not very hungry tonight," I retorted, "and I reckon I am more at home at the chuck wagon."

Anxious to get away I took a sip of coffee, and doggone if the cup didn't drop off, spilling coffee all over the table. I felt like a fool sitting there holding on to the handle. How Miss Farmer and those mavericks, Bing and Tex, could keep "dead pans" ribbing me thataway. I don't know. I'm not a comical fella.

As I tore out of the place, mad clear through, I heard Tex Taurog saying to the rest of the guests:

"Boys, this is the life. I sure like to rough it."

DID you ever go snipe hunting? Well, I waited a few days before pulling it, and I tried not to let on that I was resentful of the way they ribbed me. Finally, I innocently built up the beauties of snipe hunting, and how much more delicious they were to eat than quail or dove. They went for it hook, line and sinker. That night us cowboys brought the hosses and we all rode out some ten miles in the mountains. We had a big gunnysack with a ring mounted on a large hoop and three kerosene lanterns. Picking out a gully where I told them the snipe were nesting, we built up brush wings on each side, and then got Bing and Bob and Tex to go down in the gully with the lanterns.

"Now, boys," I explained, "comes the big drive. All you have to do is to sit here quiet, keep the lanterns covered until you hear us yelling and beating the brush. Then wave them to and fro, and we'll drive the snipe right into the bag."

Well, we left the three tenderfeet down in the gully and quietly rode away, taking their three horses along. We laughed so hard on that ten mile ride back to Lone Pine that we almost fell off our horses.

We were sitting around on the porch of the mansion waiting for those snipe hunters to come walking home plumb disgusted and all in—when the front door opened, the lights went on—and darned if Tex, Bing and Bob weren't standing there.

"Hey Bob!" they said in chorus, "bring the boys in and let's have a snort before we sit down to a swell snack of snipe."

The cowboys looked at those snipe hunters and then at me, and I knew they were wondering who framed who. I knew when I had enough.

"Okay, Boss," I said, "you fellas win, but I want to know how you did it."

Bing laughed and said, "Ask Tex, Bob. He's the guy who knows how to hunt snipe."

The director gave me one more "dead pan" and replied: "You never know, Bob, when you may need a limousine and a chauffeur when you're roughing it."

Hollywood—Dog Heaven!

Trainers and owners often get as much as $250 a day to let their dogs grace the screen.

Carole Lombard, who owns a Dachshund and a Pekinese, introduced the latter to film audiences in Love Before Breakfast. Incongruously, and humorously, this pint-sized pooch is named Pushface the Killer.

Smokie, a black French poodle owned by Claudette Colbert, is one of the few canines allowed on a sound stage. When the red lights go on and the bell rings calling for silence for a sound take, Smokie "freezes" and neither moves nor emits a sound until the cameras halt.

Charles Ruggles has commercialized on his love for dogs, breeds fine animals for sale and exhibits his pets in dog shows all over the country. Four of his prize winners are a white French poodle, an Afghan hound, a Cairn terrier and a West Highland White terrier. Ruggles has nearly one hundred dogs on his ranch and knows them all.

The affection with which many Hollywood owners hold their pets is shown in the story of the pet cemetery, Valley of Quiet. Jiggs, a famous movie dog, is buried there. A funeral for Sammy, Alice Brady's wire haired terrier, cost her $300. Mae West had her pet monkey, Boogey, buried there also. Puzzums, a famous Mack Sennett screen cat lies buried in the cemetery—she had a gold medal bestowed posthumously upon her by the Humane Society. Many people read Senator Vest's famous oration to a dog, as a funeral service.

Kabar, the famous Dobermann Pinscher owned by Valentino died of a broken heart after the death of his famous master and lies in Valley of Quiet. Dolores Del Rio, Miriam Hopkins, Gloria Swanson, Marion Davies, Corinne Griffith, John Barrymore and Billie Burke are among the prominent movie folk who have dogs buried in this cemetery.

BORIS KARLOFF, although in England for an extended stay, keeps his house open and his servants on salary to care for his two Bedlington terriers.

When Ned Sparks and his wife divorced, they divided the dogs as well as the rest of the property. She took the wire hair and he the Boston.

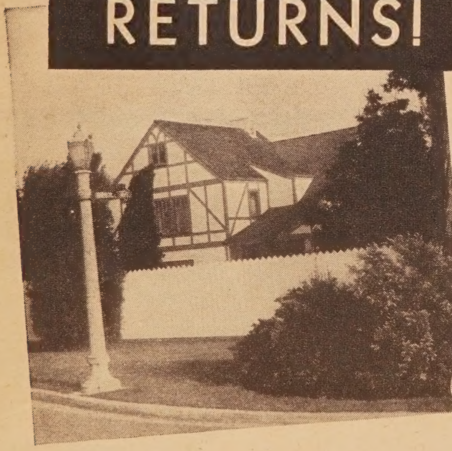
Andy Devine owns a pit bull that chews up all the dogs in the Toluca Lake district. Andy pacifies irate owners by sending for a hospital ambulance and pays for the patching up. Robert Armstrong, who lives on a ranch, takes in and gives a home to every stray cur that seems inclined to stay. He has scores of them living on his bounty.

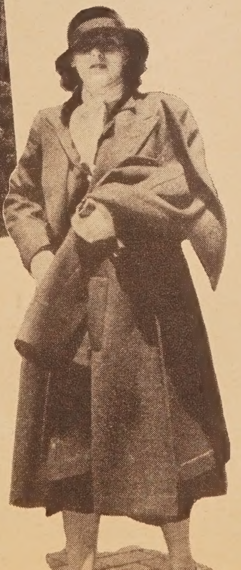
And so I repeat, Hollywood is Dog Heaven. The stars make kindly owners to their canine pets and if I were a dog, I'd want to be a Hollywood dog, with a movie star for master or mistress.

It's news when a colt has a rôle written for him. Chang's owner is James Hilton, author of best-seller novel Lost Horizon—his fellow actors in the filmization are Jane Wyatt and Ronald Colman, his director, Frank Capra. That worried look is the fear that he may be the face on the cutting-room floor

GARBO RETURNS!

Just before she arrived from her holiday in Sweden, this ten-foot-high fence was erected around the house in Brentwood. There's no peeking between the pickets of this fence, which provides the seclusion desired by Garbo and her closest woman friend, Mercedes D'Acosta





WHEN Greta Garbo arrived she stressed the fact that she was in poor health. Her first picture is Camille and it is to be remembered that the heroine she is to portray was not over-well, especially toward the close of the story. Although Garbo had changed to the extent of being more cordial to the press (she still won't talk) she has not changed her mode of transportation, but made her first calls to the studio in the same black sedan she has used for nine years. It has a new coat of paint, however. Garbo has a two-picture contract but will not make two films in the same year, due to prohibitive income tax. Her second will be Beloved, based on the story of Marie Walewski. Charles Boyer will be her leading man.

when she spilled the ink on my rug

—but I'd taken one precaution and it didn't leave a trace!

Every day such accidents happen where ordinary inks are used. That's why the Parker Pen Company created this WASHABLE Qu*ink*—an ink for home and school that can be spilled with SAFETY! Soap and water, promptly applied, remove it from hands, clothes, woodwork, and rugs—without trace!

And Qu*ink* dries so fast on paper that people write us, "I've thrown my blotters away!"

Parker spent $68,000 in creating this miracle ink to guard the famous Parker Pens from sediment left by ordinary pen-clogging inks. A harmless ingredient in Qu*ink* dissolves sediment—cleanses your pen as it writes—a Parker or any other pen. Qu*ink* starts instantly—works like a charm with steel pens or fountain pens.

Don't get our PERMANENT Qu*ink* unless it's for everlasting records. It's as permanent as the paper. And don't risk other so-called washable inks. WASHABLE Qu*ink* is not watery—but rich, full-bodied, and brilliant. Be sure you get WASHABLE Qu*ink*—15c and 25c.

Once I Was a Star—Now I'm Ginger's Stand-In!

her own loneliness for Ginger, whom she had had to leave in the east, that made Lela realize the lack in my life. Anyway, she used to take me on her lap and tell me stories about Ginger, and about what fun we would have together some day.

I don't remember this incident, but my mother tells me that one night, just before dropping off to sleep, I said suddenly:

"Mother, if you get Lela to bring Ginger to play with me, I'll give her half my dollies. To keep!"

Whether the details of my proposition were relayed to Lela or not, Ginger never came. I wasn't the only one who thought she should be in Hollywood. People who saw her photographs on Lela's desk were always coaxing Lela to put her in pictures, because—and that's rather strange—they said she looked like me. But Lela Rogers merely laughed at the idea that her baby could be a star. Years later, I was going to meet Ginger in Hollywood. But, by that time, there would be no dollies to give her.

BABY MARIE continued to pull them in at the box office until she was almost ten. And then fell the Damoclean sword that hangs over every actress. I became too old for the parts I was playing! I was getting ready to enter that fearsome period, the awkward age.

My foster parents refused to believe that their darling was losing her appeal. They decided to invest all that was left of our money in a super-colossal production that was to re-establish me in the hearts of the fans. The Winsome Waif was the misnomer of the picture. But I didn't turn out to be a winsome waif at all. In fact, I was so pathetically unwinsome as a waif that the moment it was finished, the picture was carefully put in tin cans and stored, without even a showing. The cans probably are standing yet in some store room.

There were personal appearances after that. Aren't there always? But people still remembered Baby Marie, and they came in crowds to theaters to see in person the child they had loved on the screen.

It was on one of these tours that I first met Ginger. Lela Rogers had long since left Hollywood, and was working on a Dallas newspaper. When she learned that I was appearing at a local theater, she brought Ginger backstage for that long-promised introduction.

I remember that meeting as if it were yesterday. It was a pretty big event in my life, meeting the girl of whom I had heard so much, thought about so much. She was a lovely little thing, even then, the kind of person, even as a child, that it was impossible not to like. I took her to my dressing room, and in true kid fashion, proceeded to show her all the paraphernalia of a traveling child entertainer. To say that she was thrilled is putting it mildly. She fairly exuded excitement. And, of course, I was delighted. We talked about schools, about the number of dolls we had, though of course we

Since the script orders that they must play a scene under the table in Yours for the Asking, director Al Hall (who, by the way, is the second husband of Lola Lane, who is the first wife of Lew Ayres) gets down on the floor with George Raft and Ida Lupino didn't play with them any more. We discussed our futures quite seriously. I was going to be a movie star, naturally. Ginger looked positively awed at that one.

She had no such lofty ambitions for herself. She wasn't quite sure what she was going to be, but she thought probably . . . a school teacher!

When Ginger left me that afternoon, she looked at me as if I were something out of a fairy tale that might never materialize for her again.

"It's been awfully nice to meet you," she said a little wistfully. "And thanks so much for telling me all about Hollywood. I do hope I'll see you again sometime."

She did.

"SOMETIME" was almost a decade later. I'd done a lot of things during that time, but becoming the shining light of Hollywood wasn't one of them. I'd gone to high school. I'd seen my home break up through the separation of my foster parents. I'd gone out to see my old director, Mr. King, with a view to getting back in pictures. And when I found that the best I could do now was extra work, and that it was up to me to take care of myself, I finally went to work in a store. It wasn't too bad. People were nice to me, and I liked the girls I worked with. But I wasn't happy. I wanted to be back in the studios. Not as a star, anymore. That ambition had been shattered pretty badly.

I would have taken anything that would bring me again behind the high walls of the studios, back in the glamorous atmosphere of picture making.

I think the biggest thrill of my life was picking up a paper one night to see that Fox Studio had brought Ginger Rogers to Hollywood under contract! I cut out that little item and for days afterward bored everyone I knew by showing it to them and saying, "I know her." But I didn't dream that she knew me now. Ten years is a long time.

It seemed almost as if Ginger's spectacular rise to stardom was mine. I couldn't read enough about her. I waited outside restaurants and stood in crowds of spectators at premières, just for a glimpse of her. And one day I plucked up my courage and went to the theater where Lela Rogers was conducting a drama school. She was out, but I left my telephone number and name with her secretary, and then went home, wondering if the Rogers would think I'd been too bold in imposing on an old friendship to bring myself to their attention now. I came home, still dubious about having done the right thing . . . and there was a telephone message for me. Lela Rogers wanted me to call her.

I did, of course . . . and I didn't lose any time. Two days later I went to the Rogers' home to lunch with Lela and Ginger.

Perhaps you can imagine how I felt when they told me they had been trying to get in touch with me ever since they had come to Hollywood.

Even if I had intended to tell Ginger and her mother about my desire for studio work, I wouldn't have had a chance. Ginger beat me to it. She wanted to know if I'd be interested in a studio job. And when I gasped that I certainly would she turned to her mother with the suggestion:

"Mother, don't you think Marie could be my stand-in?"

It came to me with a sort of shock then that we were a good deal alike. The matter was settled almost immediately, and I went again to work in pictures. When Ginger came to R-K-O from Fox, she brought me with her.

IT ISN'T the way I planned my picture career with Ginger Rogers that day in Dallas. I'm not the star. She is. But somehow, I can't feel any regret. Being a star would be wonderful. Sometimes I let myself dream of a come-back. But standing in for a girl like Ginger Rogers has compensations . . . even for stardom. Ginger is such a grand person, so unspoiled, so much fun to know. And the knowledge that there is such friendship as she and her mother have given me has given me a different outlook on life than I've ever had before. Of course, I'd love to be able to afford luxuries. And yet, I wonder if I could ever buy anything that would give me as much pleasure as the bottle of imported perfume that was Ginger's last gift to me. For me, it was the fragrance of a friendship that was tried, and proved true.

People always ask me if I have thoughts of a comeback in pictures. Of course I have. People don't give up thoughts of a comeback in pictures . . . not when they are inoculated with the Hollywood virus as young as I was. Ginger and Lela have ambitions for me. They're doing what they can to give me a break. Maybe it'll come. But if it doesn't I can go on being happy, as long as Ginger wants me to work with her, as long as she lets me try to show her, in what little ways I can, that I'm grateful to the destiny that somehow, long ago, twisted the threads of our lives together, parted them, and then brought them together again.

The Luise Rainer Mystery!

the part of O-Lan in The Good Earth—and immediately she entered the dressing room I knew that I was not to talk with a gay young Viennese girl who plays tricks and has tantrums. For that look of patient suffering in her eyes, that compressed enduring mouth, those lines of stubborn patient resignation were not all acting.

And I remembered hearing something Luise had said to a friend when she first came over here . . . "I know all the sorrow, tragedy and pain that life can give—believe me. And so I like to forget it by making fun as I did when a child—"

So that the Luise I had planned to write about has really gone away a long time ago. The childlike, prank-playing Luise is put away and is taken out now and again by the grown-up Luise when she "likes to forget . . ."

No, no facile temperament and tantrums here.

I had expected to be impressed with Rainer. I was impressed. Profoundly. But not in the way I had thought.

She spoke, first, of The Good Earth. She admitted that she is affected by the parts she plays. They go more than skin-deep.

She said, looking weary, "I did not want to play this part of O-Lan in The Good Earth. I did not believe it when I was told that Mr. Thalberg wanted me to do it. Perhaps Helen Hayes—yes, perhaps Helen Hayes. Surely it is the most difficult part any actress has ever had to play.

"I read the book two years ago. I never for one instant thought of it for me. Think—think what I must do!—always to walk with my head down, my eyes on the ground. Never to express an emotion, never to look up, never to give one tortured movement of the arms—always to be felt but never to be seen—and to have to give the feeling of great drama, great suffering, great love . . .

"It is so hard . . . I suffer from it! I went to Mr. Thalberg only yesterday. I said to him 'If I am not right in this part—even now when I am playing it—throw me out of it—please—!' But he thinks I can do it," sighed Luise, "and so I am doing it. . . .

"You see . . ." the little figure in the pale blue, faded and wadded coat and trousers of the Chinese peasant woman started up and walked to and fro in the tiny dressing room, "there is something I am after."

"THIS is why it is so important for me to do the right thing. This is why I must be critical of me . . . it is so difficult, these movies," sighed Luise, relapsing into her chair, small tense hands dropped between her wadded knees. "I am fighting. I am in the front line of battle. That is why I cannot talk to many people, cannot give interviews, cannot go to parties, do all the other things. I am fighting for this thing I want. I am tired when I am fighting. . . ."

WALTER WANGER productions inc.

The lucky and pretty winners in the Search for Talent tour conducted by Hold-Bob Hairpin Company are entertained by Dan Thomas, young executive at Wanger Studios. All the girls, Norma Jane Slider, Dorothy Dalton, Dorothy Kate Brown, Frances Nalle, Helen Dax, Carolyn Oliver and Margaret Hehn were given screen tests

She sipped the iced grapefruit juice which was her luncheon. She said, "To make money is not why I came to Hollywood. No, not to make money. If I wanted to make money I would have done it other ways. To think only of making money with the work you love is like marrying a man, not for love but for his money. It would be the same.

"When I first came here—now that I am making only my third motion picture in my life—I know that I must do what I am told to do. I cannot just arrive and say 'I am Luise Rainer! I am great. Now I will tell you what I will do!' I must learn first. After that, when I know how things go—then I will speak up and fight—or go away.

"Do you know," said Luise, that fascinatingly accented voice was gentle now, "do you really know what I mean when I say that there is something I must have? I have felt it ever since I was a small child. I did not know then what it was. I did not think of becoming an actress. We are not actors, my people. My father is a merchant. My mother has never been in the backstage of a theatre in her life. I was born on a country estate near Vienna. And my two brothers and I, we were just happy children, making mischief.

"It is only by accident that I went on the stage and had an audition and a success and then, two years later, after that first little theatre, with Max Reinhardt. I might have been, not an actress but a sculptress, perhaps. But it would have taken so long, being a sculptress. And I am impatient. I am impatient with me. The stage was quickly—quickly—

"I do not give interviews—no. Because there is nothing to say. It is feeling I have to give and words have nothing to do with that.

"It is like this—when I am on the screen I give little bits of myself. I give myself. I want only to be like this—that I may be able to show people how other people love and live and suffer. It is like I come upon a paragraph in some great nov-el. And I feel a sudden upsurging, a sudden great release from my loneliness. I say 'Ah, yes, I know . . . I know . . . I have loved this way or suffered that way or feared this way or desired that way . . . Life is like this . . . but I didn't know that anyone else knew it, too. I didn't know, until now, that anyone else felt the same as me. I thought only I knew this and now it is shared with me. That is good. That is great. That is what I want to give. That is the way I want to share.

"That is the thing I am after. To give myself so truly that others will know. If I do not give enough of myself in my work then I am not any good, then I had better go away.

"It is so easy to com-pro-mise," said Luise, resting her head against the back of her chair. But I must not do that, or I will lose my way. If I let too many people into my life, if I give too much of myself away in words, I may lose what I want. For, after all, I am just a young girl like all the others. Like all the others I am a little good and a little bad and the two together. There is nothing for me to say about myself. I could not waste my time making up silly things.

"And I might," and Luise sat erect and smiled and winked, do that thing called 'going Hollywood' if I listened to too many people telling me what they tell everyone of us. They say to me, 'You are won-der-ful! You are great! You are beautiful!'—and after a time I might listen and forget that they say these same things to us all.

"I might forget that the ones who do not like me, the ones who say 'That Rainer girl, she is not good at all, I do not like her or her work or anything at all about her'—I might forget that these are the people we never hear. Because the people who have the bad things to say about us do not say them. They stay away from us. They do not say anything at all. But they are there all the same.

"I do not go to parties very often because I do not feel well when I am with lots of people. I am not a shy person but I am uncomfortable when I am with more than two or three I know well. I do not feel well at parties and so I do not go.

"I like to be alone by myself. I have good times alone. I make myself my own world again, as I did when I was a child. Then, my father's business took us abroad, to Switzerland, to Italy—and always I lived in my own world, wherever I was, and I was happy. Yes, I was happiest as a child.

"I shall not stay on the screen very long. I have been working for six years now, ever since I was sixteen. I shall give myself four years more—ten years altogether. And if I have not got the thing I am after then, I shall never have it.

"Ten years is long enough for unreal things. For the theatre isn't real—the pictures are not real. There is only one thing which is real—and that is love. There is no one who has not loved, no one. Their love may have come to nothing, it may have been unhappy and unfortunate . . . but everyone has loved, everyone. Love is as real as hunger and thirst. It is so real that, like hunger and thirst, it must happen to us all."

"Have you," I dared to say, then, "have you ever been in love, Luise—really in love?"

There was a brooding pause in which the dark eyes with the eager heart in them seemed to look back, to weigh what she must tell. "Yes," she said, briefly, "yes, I have known love—great love." And I knew that she would say nothing more. It wasn't necessary for her to say anything more.

I understood, now, many things about her I had never understood before . . . the tremendous importance she attaches to her career, the deep compulsion she feels to reach that which she is after wells up, I am sure, from memory that has burned all trivial things away—wells from a loss deep enough to have seared her with the desire to achieve consummation in work, who has lost love. . . .

Her love of music . . . the symphonies which drift through her house . . . they are solace . . .

Her love of nature and of gardens . . . the hours she spends in her garden, under the tall, shining poplars, handling the pushing flowers . . . there is healing in the earth and promise in growing things . . .

"I shall marry," Luise said, as I rose to go, "I shall marry one of these days. Love comes again. And then I shall have my own house and my children and then that will be real—that will be life."

No, I couldn't write the story I had planned to write.

Would You Believe It?

I couldn't imagine what an imitation cobra would be like, so I went back to the Fox lot where they were making Under Two Flags, and using an imitation cobra.

A real Hindu named Otto Frisco, who has long hair and mystic eyes had rented himself out for the scenes with his pet. A rival named Jack Allman also had a New England version—a harmless chicken snake named Oscar. It seems that back in Maine, Oscar used to swipe eggs and secrete them in a wide mouth sack—quite a useless character around a chicken farm. But with a heart shaped leather wedge in his mouth, he now earns fifty dollars a day. A piece of string does the dread cobrahood waving.

THE Hindu cobra is a harmless bullsnake over whose head Otto Frisco slips a fake cobra hood which makes him look a bit more realistic than Oscar.

So there's deadly rivalry between the two imitation cobras. Allman is bitter because he can't act a snakecharmer like Otto, and Otto is bitter because they won't let him make his act really artistic by letting him import a real cobra, which he insists he could manage.

As it happened, both snakes were used in the picture, as snakes tire easily before the cameras.

"Aren't there any really dangerous snakes in Hollywood?" I asked in some disappointment.

"Go on over and take a look at what they have got on W. C. Fields' set, Poppy—"

So I met Ada Mae Moore. My luck was in. She was not working. But she did dig into a nice big box, she did extract two enormous rock pythons, she did wind them around herself.

And so we chatted.

The rock pythons are named Babe and Spot. "I'm crazy about my pets," she said. "I wouldn't give them up for the world."

A LOVELY brunette, reminiscent of Mae West, Ada came to Hollywood in 1924 with the Al G. Barnes circus. She's been making a living out of her snakes ever since.

"I've got a little house and Babe and Spot live with me—they sleep right in my bedroom. I let them out for exercise and feeding once a week, and about that often I fill my bathtub and give them a bath. On cold nights I put a hot water bottle in bed with them. They are such a comfort to me now that my husband is gone. I wouldn't sell my snakes any more than I'd sell my children."

"If you ever marry again, will you tell your husband about the snakes before or after the honeymoon?"

She laughed. "It'll be a case of love me, love my snakes, I'm afraid, or else I won't have him. Meantime, I wish you'd come up some time and I'll show you Beauty!

"Beauty was my first python. She was a dear if there ever was one. She'd lie down, roll over, was as smart as a dog. When she died I had her stuffed, and now I put her on the middle of my bed after it's made. There she lies, coiled just as natural as if she were rising out of the grass."

"I'd be afraid she'd bite me. But I suppose you've never been bitten."

"Oh, yes, I have. But it was my own fault," And here I got the same reiteration I'd got from all the animal folk. "I didn't take care. You see I was feeding my snakes, and the feeding was a week overdue. I give them live rabbits and chickens which they crush to death and swallow whole. I usually keep them apart so there'll be no squabbling. I was feeding Spot when Babe suddenly reared up out of his box where I thought I'd locked him safely. I snapped my fingers at Babe, ordered him sharply back, but since he was hungry and nervous he got frightened and made a pass at me. The next thing three of my fingers were down his throat—

"I knew my snakes, so I kept cool. I grabbed Babe's tail between my knees—I've strong knees from dancing—and I kept working my fingers around in Babe's throat, and didn't stop talking. Bye and bye I won Babe's confidence with my coaxing and scolding, and he began to relax. I got my fingers back—slightly mashed and with a few snake teeth in them."

BUT, folks, you haint heard nothin' yet. Theodore Tausch is the movie rattlesnake man. He lives with a desert full of them in a rented room in Los Angeles. The rattlesnake business is not booming too well these days of the vanishing western (where rattlers are in demand). Theodore has to work for the W.P.A. to make his snake ends meet. Theodore looks like El Brendel, is a clear-headed intelligent Austrian who tried selling raincoats, perfumes, Mexican pottery, then lace underwear. Got in trouble taking a woman's measurements one day—he swears he was up to no harm—and when he got out of it, he decided to look up something less dangerous. So he picked on the rattlesnake business. Wanted a field that wasn't overcrowded, and, after searching the dictionary vainly for one, found what he was looking for in the Bible, right there among the debris of the Garden of Eden.

He was afraid of everything including humans, so he forced himself into the Arizona rattlesnake country, studied from five to eight hundred rattlers a day, in time steeled himself to pick them up, learned to master them, baby them. Now he boasts an ice cold nervous system and takes a few hours to get a newcomer used to him and tamed. His plan is to master it and then make friends with it. I've seen him thrust his hand into a bagful of rattlers. They neither hiss, rattle nor bite. Yet they'd rattle and hiss (horrid sound!) if a nervous person passed them six feet away. It's not as complicated as it sounds—it's awfully simple—the way Tausch does it.

BUT he's been bitten. Eighteen times. But only when it was his fault. He never blames the snake. He scared the biter usually when he was not having a good day. But he always keeps a razor blade handy and if he acts within fifteen seconds no harm is done. He slits and squeezes, but he always leaves a little poison in his system. Says it rejuvenates him, tonics him, peps him up, takes fifteen years off his life. That is, just a little poison. Too much is unhealthful. He also eats rattlesnake meat. Despite everything, he's still alive and happy, in love with his deadly pets, thinks the world would be happier if it got over its absurd fear of snakes.

Once two thieves ran off with a suitcase he had parked while eating his breakfast in a Los Angeles restaurant on the way to location. It was returned—pronto! He'd have given anything to see the crooks' faces when they opened the suitcase—if they did open it!

Then there's a Mrs. Vanderman who owns a pet deer. The deer rides a car, smokes, sleeps in a bed, and can do anything except act wild.

There are falcons and buzzards raised and trained at Culver City by Orrin Cannon, of a long line of falcon trainers. And one Rob Glover keeps a skunk for a house pet in his house. Lover—the skunk, was raised in captivity and has had her pockets picked. Business has dropped off now that the skunk joke is not so hot around the slapstick factories.

BUT not to Hollywood animals alone is strangeness confined. Have you ever heard of Patsy O'Byrne—the human paradox, with the homeliest puss and the loveliest legs in town. So Patsy makes $25 a day for playing an ugly gossip at one extremity—while she doubles her legs for a pair of genuine garbos.

And that rough hairy hand that comes through the windows in the whodunit films? Did you ever think about that? It's attached to Harry Wilson, who also offers size 14 dock walloper shoes in case anyone wants a pair of satchels to knock over steam rollers. On the other hand (no jokes professor) Jack Minton makes a living by having a couple of perfectly manicured paws which he rents out for the writing of letters on the screen.

And once upon a time, Frank Fay, then a Hollywood flop, but now radio's darling, ran an advertisement: "Available for inserts—Hands. Frank Fay."

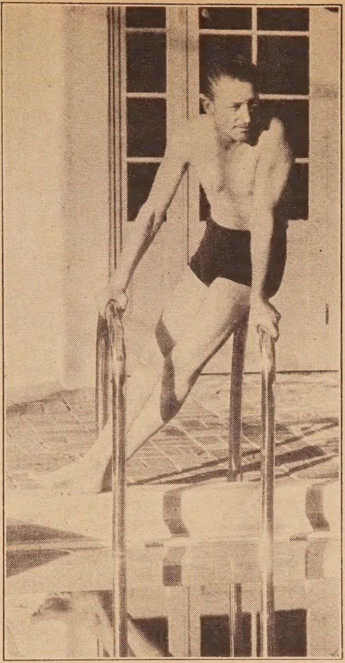
There is always a demand for beards—or airedales, as they are termed.

August Tollaire has been more French mayors in films than there are towns in France. He gets work by walking into a casting office, tossing his magnificent jungle on a table as he asks, "Can you use a beard?" He washes it in milk and sleeps with it under the covers to protect it. Some ribber once made the mistake of yanking August's hedge. The cane flew furiously. Nobody has ever made the same mistake again.

As for the doubles of the great, theirs is the hardest lot. They must wait for a picture that wants them. Lincolns lead the list in usability, and Frank McGlynn has that field sewed up. Should he lay aside his moles and whiskers, the field would open—for jobs once or twice a year. There are people who look like Teddy Roosevelt, people who look like F. D. R., on whom there is a present (mild) boom.

The saddest case is that of Alex Schoenberg and Alfred Weidler who gave up less romantic livings to play Professors Einstein and Piccard in It's Great to Be Alive. They find it hard to go on; impossible to go back to more prosaic tasks.

E. L. Monro always plays Christ. He looks like the popular conception of the Lord, is about thirty-three, leads a Christ-like life, and works only rarely—then for $15 a day.



Debonair William, sharer of honors with Dick Powell and Joan Blondell in Stage Struck, bathes in his back-yard pool

SHOW BOAT—There's never a dull moment in this entrancing musical drama. Irene Dunne shows a surprising flair for comedy and Paul Robeson almost stops the show with his singing of two numbers. Charles Winninger's antics will have you rolling in the aisles.—Universal.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN—Embodies all the virtues of good entertainment. Gary Cooper, a small town tuba player, inherits $20,000,000 then turns philanthropist and as a result stands trial for insanity—when he pokes delicious fun at his accusers. See it and add "pixilated" to your vocabulary.—Columbia.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR—Academic but interesting war on microbes waged by Paul Muni against French background, with fragile love tale.—Warners.

DANCING PIRATE—Unusual for gay satire and gorgeous color. Last century dancing master escapes imprisonment by teaching townsladies to dance. What story lacks in reality it compensates in fun. Charlie Collins and Steffi Duna dance; Frank Morgan provides hilarious comedy.—Pioneer-RKO.

THE MOON'S OUR HOME—Grand comedy with Margaret Sullavan and real-life ex-husband Henry Fonda teamed for first time. She portrays a movie star and he a globe-trotting author who scorns movie stars. While both are traveling incognito they meet, fall in love, marry. Then truth outs and fun begins. Charlie Butterworth helps.—Wanger-Paramount.

THE EX-MRS. BRADFORD—Bill Powell is a doctor with crime detection thrust upon him by his ex-wife, Jean Arthur, who is determined to make him hers again—strictly against his wishes, and therefrom results the laughs, which are many.—RKO-Radio.

THE CASE AGAINST MRS. AMES—Accused of husband-murder Madeleine Carroll offers the prosecuting attorney $25,000 if he can prove her guilty. Brent's best rôle to date. This pair make a grand team.—Wanger-Paramount.

UNDER TWO FLAGS—From the Ouida novel about the Foreign Legion. Ronald Colman and Claudette Colbert give surprise performances; the former going brash and audacious, the latter portraying a fiery, passionate café girl. Beautiful photography of colorful setting.—20th Century-Fox.

SONS O' GUNS—Joe E. Brown, dragged into the Army, finds his former valet now his hard-boiled top sergeant. Joan Blondell is a French gal with a fetching accent. Joe is so beguiling a German regiment follows him to his own lines—despite his protests. There's a lot of fun in this.—Warners.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA—Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles and Wallace Beery portray a famous old story in modern tempo.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

SINGING KID—Broadway jilts Al Jolson and he fights his way back to fame with song.—Warners.

SMALL TOWN GIRL—Full of chuckles, some pathos is Janet Gaynor's plight as small town gal who marries charming Robert Taylor. Lewis is father-in-law and Binnie Barnes the other girl.—Metro.

★★½

BORN TO FIGHT—Excellent characterizations of prize ring hangers-on. Frankie Darro and Kane Richmond in an appealing story of two fighters.—Conn.

HUMAN CARGO—About the alien-smuggling which is carried on over our borders. Mix murders, raids, rival girl and boy newspaper reporters (Claire Trevor—Brian Donlevy) and you have plenty of excitement and a little comedy.—20th Century-Fox.

ONE RAINY AFTERNOON—Francis Lederer kisses the wrong girl in a dark theatre and goes to trial as a woman insulter. The scene is Paris, the comedy gay and satirical.—Pickford-Lasky.

THE GOLDEN ARROW—Light, amusing fluff about pseudo heiress being married by poor newspaperman purely (oh yes!) to save her from fortune hunters. George Brent and Bette Davis star.—Warners.

ROAD GANG—Serious drama goes hokum in grim revelations of prison brutality with Donald Woods as a newspaperman railroaded to jail in political feud.—Warners.

DEVIL'S SQUADRON—Death takes no holiday in this film dealing with the hazards in life of fliers who test speed planes. Richard Dix is disgraced but saves reputation and wins gal.—Columbia.

FORGOTTEN FACES — Tragedy, co-starring Herbert Marshall and Gertrude Michael. He eggs her into shooting him and then committing suicide—all to save the happiness of their little girl. Gertrude wins a palm for her work.—Paramount.

Free Lessons In Movie Acting!

given an opportunity to thousands—yet less than one per cent were able to avail themselves of it.

"BE PREPARED for opportunity. "Out of five thousand extras you can pick out in a moment those who know their business. The director says 'Yell!' And most of them yell with wooden faces. Instead, all the body should coördinate in that yell. It should strain forward, there should be a tenseness in the face . . .

"Often it takes no more than a small piece of business like that, well done, to start a person on the road to fame. There was that time, for instance, some years ago when I was making The Little American with Mary Pickford. The scene called for a painting to be cut out of its frame in a French chateau and the actor I had chosen didn't do it very well. After cutting out this beautiful painting he was to wrap it around some loaves of bread and other things, then leave with it under his arm. I noticed a young Latin in the back of the set whose reactions to what this fellow was doing were better than those of the man doing it. So I called him to the front, asked him if he could do the 'bit.' He said, 'Just give me the chance!' His name was Ramon Novarro.

"In the case of Gloria Swanson, I picked her for the way she leaned against a door-post in a one reel Mack Sennett comedy. She was leaning there looking sorry about somebody who had just fallen downstairs, bumping all the way down. I got from Swanson in that moment, probably six feet of film, the thing that made her the world's greatest star for a long time—and that was not her beauty, but her genuineness and appeal.

"In other words, she was convincing. And that's the main point in acting. You have to make the audience believe what you're doing even though it is something quite foreign to your own nature. Take, for example, Fred MacMurray in The Bride Comes Home. He was a two-fisted, high-tempered, bombastic editor and he convinced you that he was—although Fred himself is anything but that type.

"To perfect a rôle like that you need to have trained powers of observation. Learn to observe. That is the first thing every aspirant to screen fame should do. Study people, their little tricks of voice and gesture. If you're going to play the part of a secretary you have to know how a secretary acts. As you walk along the street see if you can tell about people from their different expressions. As a matter of fact the majority of persons go through life without seeing very much. But an actor has to. He has to assimilate in order to give out. That's equally true of a director. Some time ago I was in a railroad accident and I had photographed on my mind all those varied expressions. The calm stoicism of some, the terror of others."

The next most important step in preparing yourself for a theatrical career, according to DeMille, is getting experience. Play anything. Start with amateur theatricals. A violinist has to learn five finger exercises before he can play concert pieces. All talent has to be cultivated—and you can get along infinitely faster if you come to Hollywood with some experience behind you.

STEP number three is diction. "It's queer," said DeMille, "how people refuse to recognize the importance of voice." And he cited the case of the boy who recently saw Miss Loughton at the School.

"I want to know if I kin act!" asserted the boy in a high, nasal tone.

Miss Laughton smiled. "I can't tell because you can't speak!" The boy protested that he didn't want to bother having his voice trained unless he knew he could act.

"Can you play the piano?" she asked. For a moment he looked startled.

"Well, supposing you play something for me."

He looked more startled. "How kin I when you haven't a piano here?"

"Exactly," said Phyllis Loughton. "You need an instrument . . . And the voice is the instrument of acting!"

Bad enunciation, says DeMille, is the greatest fault of America—and the lowering of voices the greatest necessity.

Poise is another thing Hollywood is looking for in every player. You must have it because you're no good at all if you get flustered easily in front of the camera.

"Body control has much to do with it of course," said DeMille. "Knowing how to walk properly and how to use your hands. Even in the simple matter of drinking a cup of tea you require it. There are twenty things you can do to add interest to that everyday performance.

"It's generally the mouth which shows extreme nervousness. There's a slight twitching there that reveals the tenseness although the rest of the body may be entirely quiet. Eyes are the hardest feature to read unless you want them to say something. They may be the 'windows of the soul' but they have curtains."

There has never been a time when Hollywood was so eager to single out new talent, when C. B. DeMille himself was searching so thoroughly.

Are you star material?

Patsy Kelly scored so many laughs in so many rôles that Hollywood finally yielded to popular demand. She is a full fledged star in Kelly the Second

The Best GRAY HAIR Remedy is Made at Home

You can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy, by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained.

Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, makes it soft and glossy and takes years off your looks. It will not color scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

The Truth About Robert Taylor's Romances!

never seemed to stand between them. He was just as enthusiastic about her future as he was about his and he promised everyone that success would never change him.

They were inseparable. At least so the town thought—until one night he showed up at the Beverly Wilshire Gold Room with Jean Parker on his arm. They danced divinely and heads turned and tongues wagged and everyone said that as far as the Hervey-Taylor romance was concerned, this was the end. The few of us who knew, knew that it was no such thing. Jean and Bob just happened to be making a picture together—Murder in the Fleet, remember?

What appeared to be whispered sweet nothings were something quite different. If Bob and Jean seemed to be leaning on each other's shoulders, figuratively at least, they weren't talking about each other, but about their respective sweethearts! As Jean told me afterward . . . she and Bob were both a little upset on that particular evening. "You see I had promised I wouldn't see Pancho anymore. I had promised myself! And I was finding it awfully hard. Bob was sympathetic. He could understand. Because he was going through the same thing in a way with Irene. It seems that whenever he was working she was free, but when he was free she was working. And he was afraid they were getting further and further away from each other. It was really ironical . . . his talking about Irene, and my talking about Pancho, and there we were supposed to be having a good time together!"

As you have gathered, at that time Jean was still very much in love with Pancho Lucas, her childhood sweetheart. And Bob was still very much in love with Irene. So it's easy to see that Jean Parker had nothing to do with the end of the Bob-and-Irene romance.

Still, in a way, it was what she represented that did mean the beginning of the end. Jean and Bob were out together that night because it was all part of the business, all part of getting acquainted in Hollywood, and getting Hollywood acquainted with them.

AFTER his big success in Broadway Melody he was borrowed by Universal to play opposite Irene Dunne in The Magnificent Obsession. There were several celebrations during and after the picture and it was only natural that Bob should escort the star on these occasions. I had luncheon with him about that time, and he explained that as long as he was going out now and then with other girls that he wanted Irene, his Irene, to do the same.

"It's so silly for any two people to be tied to each other's apron strings," he told me that noon. "Dates with other people won't make any difference in our friendship. They'll probably make us appreciate each other even more."

And so they made their experiment. Irene saw an old beau or two, and Bob continued to go out with the girls he met on the set. Back at Metro again, he went into production with Janet Gaynor in Small Town Girl, and for the first time, new romance rumors really began to fly thick and fast. He and Janet appeared together at parties. They lunched together day after day and they posed arm in arm for countless pictures.

But other things are fed too with such romance gestures. Gossip, for one example. And jealousy for another. To her credit, let it be said that Irene never in any way indicated that she was jealous, but it must have been there, anyway, a rancor inside. You can't have your best beau stepping out with the most glamorous girls in pictures without biting at least one nail now and then. No girl could!

BOB felt more badly about it than anyone knew. He felt himself being pushed along in a direction he didn't want to go, but he felt powerless to stop it. He tried once. He thought the rumors about himself and Janet were going a little too far. He sought advice, and was told to go out with somebody else for a change. But somebody big. In other words, and to put it crudely, no one would notice if he went out with somebody as unimportant as Irene.

Of course, all this wasn't helping Irene and Bob any. It was, as he had feared, driving them apart. Finally the inevitable happened. Bob and Irene weren't seeing each other anymore. In less time than it takes to tell, Irene was going out with Allan Jones. "At least our break-up did that much for Irene," Bob tells me. "I'm glad for her sake. Now she's really in love, and happy, and anyone who says it's rebound romance just doesn't know what he's talking about."

What was Bob to do after that? Sit around and mope? Retire to a monastery? Apparently that would have made a bigger hit with Hollywood than what he did do . . . which was certainly the most natural thing . . . to keep on going out and trying to find fun. If Bob appears at the Trocadero with one girl tonight and with another tomorrow, I assure you it's merely that—and not that he's trying to show off.

Perhaps I sound to you like Bob Taylor's own press agent, his whitewasher de luxe. But if I seem prejudiced it is only because I feel I know Bob, and because I know his "Lothario" title is totally undeserved. People look at me askance when I say that Bob isn't conceited . . . that he's naive and young . . . and terribly anxious to be liked . . . when I say that he is really frightened by the rapid-fire success which has come to him so easily. But perhaps you'll believe little Eleanore Whitney—yes, another one of the girls he has dated during the last few months. I ran into her just recently on the Three Cheers for Love set.

"Yes, I went out with him twice," she told me. "Once, to dinner at Perino's and to the fights afterward . . . and again, dancing at the Trocadero. And I'm right here to say that he's not conceited even though a lot of people say he is. He didn't talk about pictures once—except when I happened to mention that I had seen him in The Magnificent Obsession, and then he said, 'Oh, let's don't talk about that. If you ask me, I think Taylor kind of stunk in it!' I guess that will show you what he's like.

"Incidentally, he's the best ballroom dancer I have ever met in Hollywood."

Wendy Barrie is another who will go to bat for him every time. They had several dates and she says, "He's not like an actor at all. Usually I don't like to go out with actors because they always want to talk about themselves, or they're always craning their necks to get a look at themselves in the mirror. Bob was guilty of neither the whole evening."

And now, last but not least, I suppose you are wondering about Barbara Stanwyck. She is the latest girl to have her name linked with Bob's. Are they in love? Isn't she much older than he? With two such different backgrounds—Barbara, who came up from the burlesque ranks and Bob, straight from psychology course at college—what can they have in common? Will they marry? Is this on the rebound too, for both Barbara and Bob? Her break with Frank Fay and his with Irene Hervey? These are the questions that are going the rounds. And these are the questions that should be answered.

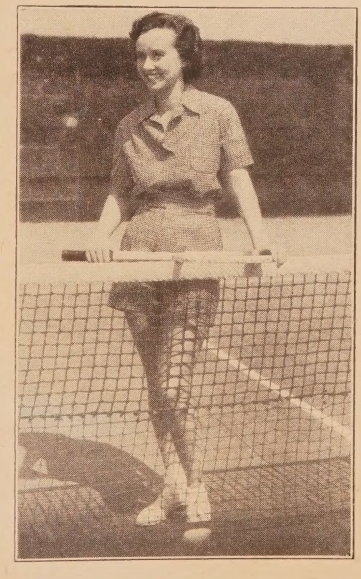
FIRST of all they are not in love, on their own frank admission.

Second: she is older than Bob—and that, in a way, is the foundation of their friendship. If anyone ever needed advice from someone who has already gone through the Hollywood mill, Bob needs it, and Barbara is the girl to give it to him. And more than that she is a girl who values friendship and knows how to preserve it. As someone has said of her, "She's loyal to a fault!" And I'm quite sure that that is one of the things that has bound Bob to her so much lately. Like he needs advice, he needs loyalty now.

Third: What do they have in common? Frankness, simplicity, ambition and modesty. I guess that's enough. And as for their friendship being a rebound: Bob and Barbara are two people who could still be friends even though both were in love with somebody else.

Bob had planned to take a long-promised vacation after finishing Gorgeous Hussy, Joan Crawford's picture. But when he and Barbara were given an opportunity to co-star in His Brother's Wife Bob immediately canceled his holiday plans.

So I can see only one answer to "Bob's galavanting," as they speak of it around here. Bob Taylor, one one-woman man is looking for that one woman again!



Margaret Lindsay is Janet Gaynor's pal. She's a fine actress, having made an outstanding bit of her rôle in The Law in Her Hands

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys — and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking acids and wastes out of the blood. A healthy person should pass about 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, this waste stays in the body and may become poisonous. It may start nagging backaches, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Don't let it lay you up.

Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills — used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

Anything for a Laugh!

challenge to throw away pretense and be yourself—to stand on your own feet and give and take with the best of them.

The lily-livered, the snobs, the pretenders and the self-important hate the sound of it. It's a dare to them—a dare they never take the second time. For Lombard is an insurgent, a rebel, an individualist and a deflationist. She'll deflate the ego of the most conceited ass in the world in ten minutes.

She has the same hate for the over-dog as has Stanwyck—but unlike Barbara she doesn't take it out in anger and resentment. She meets intolerance and conceit more than half way—with a gale of laughter and the cold steel of wit. Heaven help the pretentious with a gal like Carole!

DON'T associate Lombard's laugh only with the pranks she plays, the fantastic parties she throws and the hilarious stories she tells. Because it is heard elsewhere—in strange places for full-throated happy laughter. In hospitals, for example, where humble studio workmen lie inured or sick, and where funny little presents are piled high in the room. Also in poverty stricken apartments and shacks where hard luck has been working overtime.

And in the face of danger. Right in the teeth of disaster. I heard it not long ago, as I was driving out to Universal's back lot. Suddenly I heard a gale of laughter that slammed my foot down on the brake instintively.

Lombard, Unlimited! The flap of a great tent over at my left raised up and out burst Carole, dressed in blue slacks and a blue wool sailor shirt. Her head was thrown back and she was laughing till the tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Hey, Willie," she called, waving her hand and sweeping her hair back in a single movement, "come on in and see me get dunked!"

She was laughing because she was about to enter upon one of the most dangerous moments of her career—when even her bathing beauty experience back in Mack Sennett's slap-stick comedies might not save her from injury.

They were making the storm scene of Love Before Breakfast and Carole had just insisted that she would do the whole thing aboard the storm tossed sailboat herself, rehearsals and shots alike. A few minutes before her stand-in had refused to risk injury aboard that boat, and Carole's answer to the director's problem was a burst of laughter, and a rush to the nearest telephone to call for hot drinks for everybody as soon as the scene was shot.

And then, after exposing herself to as great a hazard as any woman star has taken in Hollywood, she calmly stood on the deck of the slippery boat and passed out drinks to the shivering studio crew—before she changed from her own soaked clothing.

BUT why the Lombard laugh at a time like that? And "but why?" for so many other strange things about her. Why does she shock people with those stories of hers? Why does she play such wild pranks? Why is she so hard boiled and brutally frank at times? In other words, WHY is Lombard like that? To answer that, let's consider her laugh first.

"That laugh saved the day for us," explained one of the workers on the Love Before Breakfast tank set. "Only a few hours before that the launch we had in there had sunk and we were having lots of trouble. It was an especially tough set up—and then when the stand-in was afraid to take a chance we were in a pretty mess. How could we ask the star borrowed from Paramount to risk her neck?

"It was such a risky shot Lombard knew we couldn't go ahead with it if she talked it over with us sanely. So she just made a joke of the whole thing and took it right out of our hands. It was magnificent of her.

"And then, probably, laughing it off kept Carole from thinking about the chance she was taking."

Which is the answer to much of Lombard's wild doings, fantastic pranks and startling remarks—a case of whistling in the dark, or singing past the graveyard. Only it is more often to keep up the courage and relieve the tension for others than for herself.

In spite of her nonchalance, Carole Lombard is sensitive. Defense mechanism the psychologists call it. Carole has admitted that it makes her nervous to have people watching her in a scene—and that tenseness cramps her style. So, just before going in front of the camera, Carole always tries to leave those around her thoroughly relaxed; if you can call being doubled up with laughter relaxed.

CAROLE has an excellent reason for wanting an air of ease—even of abandon where she works. The turning point of her career, the crossroads at which she left the rut of the bit player to take the highway to stardom, was in the picture Twentieth Century with John Barrymore.

Until she made that picture Carole always worked under a tension, under a suppression. But Barrymore taught her abandon—wild, laughing abandon—and she turned in a performance like she never dreamed of turning in before.

"Doing a picture with Barrymore," Carole told me then, "is wild and delicious. It is Experience, with a capital E. You start as one person and emerge as quite another. But you learn.

"You learn abandon—and acting! A week with him, and you trample underfoot every inhibition you have."

But how about her habit of shocking people?

In my first, and never-to-be-forgotten, talk with Carole, she suddenly, for no apparent reason (though I have since suspected she perhaps felt she should explain things a little so my eyes would stop popping) told me why she amazed people. I jotted down her words, and here they are, for the first time in print.

"A girl needs a strong defense," explained Carole. "Mine was to shock people out of notions. When I was just a kid in New York, going around looking for a job in a show, men in the booking offices got notions. I discovered then that if I could startle them sufficiently they would get their minds back on business."

From an original defense weapon, Carole's sense of humor has caused her

Aboard Johnny Weissmuller's yacht, Santa Guadalupe—Guadalupe is his wife's real given name. You remember, of course, that Lupe Velez is Mrs. Weissmuller. His guests are that happily engaged couple, Johnny Farrow and Maureen O'Sullivan, with Benita Hume to include it in her little bag of tricks. For the purpose of taking the starch out of high hats, it cannot be equalled. Carole has shocked many an individual off his high horse and brought him down to earth with the common folk.

Carole's pranks and her funny gifts are her means of breaking down barriers and of taking a short-cut to a mutual understanding.

She sent a ham to Clark Gable immediately after they had finished making No Man Of Her Own. On last Valentine's Day she sent him the most dilapidated old Ford she could buy in a Los Angeles junk yard—and personally saw to tieing an enormous red ribbon around it.

Sending screwy presents and funny little games is a trade-mark of Lombard's. Whenever anyone at the studio is sick or hurt, she first sees that his room is supplied with flowers, and then begins sending games and bringing crazy gadgets. "Give 'em a laugh," says Carole, "that's the best doctor in the world."

UNDERSTANDING the other fellow's viewpoint is also a hobby of Carole's. And this hobby has brought her some strange friends. Take George Raft's colored man, Alex, for example.

Alex never goes by Carole's dressing room without putting his head in the door and asking: "How's Missy Lombard this morning?" Then, the chances are two to one Carole will say: "Come on in, Alex. Let's have a chat." And the subjects they discuss are wide and varied.

Alex has his place in Lombard's scheme of things, also. For he is a great leveller for the democratic Carole. More than once individuals of terrific self-importance have had to stand waiting, while Carole chatted with Alex.

And now as to her reported brutal frankness. Lombard hates deceit and subterfuge. She detests alibis. Also, she believes that a clean cut is sometimes the best remedy.

However, any studio worker will tell you he would far rather have Carole light into him with blazing eyes and lashing tongue, than to have her smile sweetly, and then report him to the front office, as certain other stars do.

Carole gives vent to her feelings, and then forgets it. There are no grudges held—no knifing later on.

There is no trace of Pollyanna in Lombard. She has her faults, and stands back of them. She won't alibi for anything.

And what is the foundation of the stories about Carole Lombard's stony front? You should talk to her friends about that. They'll tell you it's a false front; only a mask.

Carole knows her own weaknesses—and so she sits beside sick beds and plays with silly gadgets, and laughs loud and long where trouble is stalking. Carole thinks that tears don't fit the Lombard rôle—so she puts on a stony front to hide her charities and her kindnesses from everyone.

The exterior Lombard makes herself as conspicuous as possible, so the inner woman won't be ferretted out.

So it seems that the keen witted, straight hitting, loud laughing, perpetually shocking and generally madcap Carole is just a softie, after all.

And that's why Lombard is like that.

Capricious Cagney

"What is going on here?" Mrs. Cagney, always the first to regain her speech after they have all been struck dumb with that we're - packing - you - told - us - you-were-leaving look on their faces, comes forth with the obvious statement: "Why, we're packing!"

This explanation is just as likely as not to bring from that vague husband the astounding question "where are you going?" When, at this point, he is told in screaming tones: "Why, Jimmy! I'M not going anywhere! You told me last night that . . ." Only then the information definitely comes forth that the travel minded man of last night is, today, the twin brother of Alice-Sit-By-The-Fire!

It was last fall, I think, that several of my more solicitous friends spent anxious hours over my prostrate form, trying their best to revive me, after I had been laid prone from laughter upon learning that our colorful friend was on the verge of leaving again, because (this time) "I want to see New England in the autumn!"

It was not so much the idea that Jim wanted to see New England in the autumn that sent me screaming to my couch, as was the fact that here was a man who, having been born and raised in New York City . . . it had never occurred to him that he "had to see it in the autumn" until he found himself some three thousand miles away.

Mr. Cagney has yet to see New England in the autumn, summer, spring or winter!

WHAT a guy!

But it is all so typical of my impressionable friend; so true to form; so absolutely in character.

I have seen him—this adept gangster—sit enthralled at a symphony concert. Not only enthralled, but literally aquiver, his body tingling from goose pimples, brought on by the vibration of his soul . . . yes, SOUL . . . to the music being played.

I have seen him go night after night to performances of the Monte Carlo Ballet. I have seen more than that! . . . and this will knock you for a row of gangster films. I have watched James Cagney execute those same ballet movements with a skill and a grace and a style that would be the envy of any potential Nijinsky.

I hope that it also will help you to understand the actor who so convincingly portrays the ruthless killer; the thick necked, slightly punch drunk prize fighter; the city-wise taxi driver and the lady killer; the mad, irresponsible two-timing aviator of Ceiling Zero . . . and makes you like him—and then tops it all with a Shakespearean performance so delicately wrought, at times so moving as to bring a lump to one's throat and a burst of spontaneous applause from an entire audience.

I hope that it will help you to understand that that actor's knack is not motivated only by a great acting gift, but also by his disposition—a disposition that is at the same time one of virility and one of gossamer-like fancy—of the corner ruffian that longs for New England in the autumn—of the Faun: half human, with pointed ears and goat's feet!

Jimmy! I salute you!

The Case Against Madeleine!

English women, with a nun complex and a teacher's manner and the extremely bored air that so many British university scholars can't ever seem to shake off.

"Lead me," I capitulated, "to it." Might as well get it over with!

And then I met her.

It was on a stage at Paramount, where she's making The General Died At Dawn, opposite Gary Cooper. She'd just finished Wanger's The Case Against Mrs. Ames, you recall—(mustn't miss that one, you movie-goers.)

A mutual friend introduced us. She said "Howd'y'do?" and then she turned her eyes on me. Whoof!—it was like grabbing a live wire. Nun? These were no nun's eyes! If ever a nun looked with eyes like that, they'd go to work exercising at once!

I began to feel better about this, meeting her, I mean. And then we began to talk. And I'll tell you right here that no nun—no, and no British schoolmarm, either!—could put quite the mischievous deviltry into first-meeting conversation that this Madeleine Carroll did. She rather knocked me over when I tried to break the ice (if any!) by asking her what she thought of a certain international actor with whom she'd just finished a recent picture in England. I anticipated the usual polite commonplaces about what a "splendid AH-tist" he was, and how nice to work with, and all that sort of tripe. Instead, this English gal exploded with:

Claire Trevor insists that she plays a better game when wearing her red-and-white checked play suit

"Oh, he's positively the most delightfully Rabelaisian person I've ever met! He was learning Spanish at the time and the first words he learned were all the—ah—startling words. And he tried them out on us. And I speak Spanish, you know.

"Why, on that set, Rabelaisianism began at nine. It was lovely. By tea-time, I was so saturated with it that by the time I got home, I was through sheer surfeiture the purest of the pure; purer than driven snow. It rather surprised my husband, you know. He didn't know me at all, that way. . . .!"

I wondered whether she was "pulling my leg," as the British have it. I don't know yet. That's one British trait she has to perfection—that ability to rag a person, to kid us, without our having the slightest conception that we're being made a goat.

But I liked it. Because, after my fears that I was going to meet a brain-jammed frigidaire, I'd suddenly met one of the liveliest, most charming women I've seen in Hollywood.

AND so we got to talking about her. That crack of hers about her husband launched us on him. He's one Captain Philip Astley, quite a fellow. Captain in the British Royal Life Guards, he's a personal friend of the now King Edward. Got that way when His Majesty was just Eddie, that jolly young Prince of Wales. Captain Astley has oodles of money of his own; Madeleine's picture earnings, fat as they are, are just pin-money. They were married in the Captain's villa on the shores of Lake Como, in romantic Italy. She loves him. But she can kid about him, too.

"My husband visited me here in Hollywood, only a fortnight ago," she murmured.

"That must be love, to carry him 12,000 miles for just a visit," I suggested.

"Why, of course," she agreed. Then the impish gleam popped back into her eyes, and she asked: "But you don't imagine that he was also checking up on whether I was behaving myself in this 'wild' Hollywood, do you?"

"But you were behaving, weren't you?" I wondered.

"Oh, certainly. Of course. Assuredly!" she said—(but the gleam was still in the eye and there was a grin on her lips). And so we got around to talking about herself.

It seems that when she opened her eyes and beheld the world for the first time on February 26, 1910, in West Bromwich, near Birmingham, she looked into the eyes of a pedantic gentleman who was a professor of languages, and to whom scholarship was the greatest thing in the world and money just a pooh. That, she subsequently learned, was her father. He was Irish, not English—from Limerick, which is certainly not English. And her mother was a Frenchwoman.

"SO I'M really not English at all, you see," she said.

Dad, it seemed, wanted Madeleine to follow in his footsteps, win scholastic honors and eventually graduate from the Paris Sorbonne, as he had. He tutored her. She had to take education and intelligence whether she wanted it or not. Heredity counted; she was precocious. At an age when most girls wonder whether or not they're going to make high school, she was entering Birmingham University.

The Case Against Madeleine!

There she discovered that she wanted to be an actress, instead of a nun. Actressing was much more fascinating. In university theatricals, she was as brilliant as in her studies.

One day she told Papa that she wanted to become an actress. Papa fulminated furiously. He brr-r-r-rumphed and he thundered; he declaimed and he pounded a table. Madeleine changed her mind—temporarily. She surrendered to Papa, graduated from the University and taught school.

And then the head of a Birmingham theatrical company, having seen her in university plays, offered her a place in his troupe.

Madeleine thought it out. She'd acceded to her father's wishes so far. Now her life was her own. So she said yes to the theatrical man. Papa exploded again. So violently that once again, Madeleine called the deal off, went back to teaching. But not for long. She knew, in her heart, that acting was her field, and even though her father was dead against it, she determined to follow her own mind.

She didn't have the railway fare to London. It was about $7. So she pleased Papa, who didn't know why she was doing it, by taking a position as tutor to the six children of a second-hand clothing dealer. She got $3.50 a week.

Two weeks got her the $7. A few weeks got her an extra few shillings. One day, she told her astounded father au revoir, and went off to London.

It would be nice to relate, here, that the theatrical and film world immediately collapsed at her feet. But the truth is, that it did nothing of the kind. On the contrary, Madeleine's feet nearly collapsed from her daily fruitless rounds of the agencies and casting offices. Fish-and chips, for a few pennies, became a luxury meal to her.

She modeled hats for a while, to get money to live and eat.

Then came the breaks. Her first job got her three guineas a week—that's about $15—with a touring repertory company. It folded after awhile, and Madeleine modeled more hats. Finally Seymour Hicks, noted actor-producer, admitted this girl might have something the stage needed.

He put her under contract, tutored her, sent her out with road companies, finally allowed her to take a part in a London play under rehearsals.

In the midst of the rehearsals, she got a chance for a screen test. There were 149 other testees. Madeleine, however, got the job—leading part in a picture called Guns of Loos. She'd never been before a camera, even in a studio, before. And stepped into a leading rôle. Up went her heart.

Then down it went again. Four months of absolutely no work followed that break. But then, at last, just when she was wondering whether school-teaching or being a nun mightn't be a good idea, after all, another rôle came her way. This time, it was better. She began to click. And then, in rapid succession, came other rôles—and before she knew it, Madeleine Carroll suddenly found herself at the top among British actresses of the cinema.

After that, it's been all gravy for Madeleine. Life's been very good to her, she admits. She's very glad she didn't go back to teaching. She's even gladder that she never got near a convent. She can't imagine, now, what she'd do without the world and all it offers. She can't conceive of life without her husband, and nuns don't have 'em. She's crazy about tennis, horseback riding, swimming, polo, hockey.

"WHAT on earth sort of a nun would I ever have made?" she wonders now.

And now you're wondering about that "very intelligent" line, 'way up at the beginning of this story. But she is. I mean, she can—and does—turn suddenly serious, right in the midst of her conversational funning. And she thinks seriously, she reveals, when she talks of things like—well—

She's one of the smartest, best-all-round and most popular girls in the film colony. Her name is Betty Furness

"I'm hard at work now, you know," she says, "taking the extreme English off my speech. Oh, I don't want to drop my English accent entirely, you know. That would be a form of affectation—just as it is when an American tries to adopt a very British accent.

"But as to language—I feel that a middle course between pure English and your virile Americanese is the obvious answer to the problem of English speech. I think, too, that it's inevitable. With the constantly growing interchange of actors and actresses between our countries, it is certain that before long, she shall have one language, one English-speaking race, instead of two sharply distinct ones, as now."

It's interesting, too, that unlike any other of her country folk I've ever met, Madeleine does approve whole-heartedly of one Hollywood custom: that is the fact that Hollywood, throughout its twenty-four daily hours, never stops talking, thinking shop.

In England, it's different. "When the studios close down in the afternoon, shop is forgotten. It isn't considered proper even to mention movie making after hours. I go home and become Mrs. Astley, no longer Madeleine Carroll. It's shockingly bad form to carry one's work out of the studio with one," she explains.

"BUT here, you think, talk, eat, sleep, drink, live movies throughout the day and night, whether you're in the studio, at a party, at a café, at some sports affair, out yachting, riding, or whatever. I like it. It fits me perfectly. I'm that way myself. I'm intense in whatever I'm doing. When I'm making a picture, I can't suddenly look at a clock, realize it's 5 p. m., and suddenly cease being the actress. I like to sleep, eat, drink, dream my work, and I do. And I'm perfectly amazingly happy over here, because you Uhmeddicans do it that way, too."

THE girl's charm is amazing. You feel, after talking with her a few moments, that you've known her half a lifetime. She has that faculty, you know. I know that by the time I'd talked with her fifteen minutes, I was head over heels in love with her. They tell me, (and I've heard things, too) that a lot of Hollywood's males, woman-proof though they imagined themselves to be, have gone nuts over this white-gold headed girl from London.

"Right after this picture, I'm hurrying over to Spain to join my husband. You see, we've bought an old ruined castle on the shores of the Mediterranean, just by Barcelona. And we're renovating it—swimming pool, even—and we're going down to see how the work is getting along, and to do a bit of living and adventuring and romancing in Spain."

"Woman," I told her, "that's a cruel thing to say to a writer on a day like this."

"Yes, isn't it?" she grinned, the little fiend! "But isn't it going to be a lovely trip? And when we've got the castle redone, you must drop over and see us sometime. . . .!"

The wench! By jove, I'll save my pennies and do it. For two reasons: Just to show her, for one. . . .

And for the other—well, I'll get her to go swimming with me in the Mediterranean—and then I'll see those beautiful legs from The 39 Steps once again.

It's Smart to be Natural!

"Natural Lips Have Won Fashion's Favor," says HATTIE CARNEGIE, one of America's leading designers.

"Natural Lips Are This Year's Favorite," says MME. LOUISEBOULANGER, noted French couturiere.

That "Painted Look" is out of style... Naturalness is the newest vogue in make-up! • Of course you've noticed that lips are again softly feminine. The hard, coarse "painted look" is passé.

And this new vogue is the reason why Tangee is preferred by today's smartest women. For Tangee can't give you "that painted look" because it isn't paint. Instead, Tangee changes from orange in the stick to a lovely blush rose on your lips, blending with your own skin tones, and giving your lips warm, feminine appeal.

TRY TANGEE. It stays on for hours, its special cream base keeps your lips soft and smooth. And when you buy... be sure to ask for TANGEE NATURAL. There is another shade of Tangee called Tangee Theatrical... but it is intended only for those who insist on vivid color and for theatrical use. Tangee comes in two sizes, 39c and $1.10... at all leading stores.

[UNTIL SHE SMILES]

She evades all close-ups . . . Dingy teeth and tender gums destroy her charm . . . She ignored "PINK TOOTH BRUSH"

It's immensely and vitally important—that first impression...when boy meets girl—when man meets woman.

And the first smile she gives him should be a quick flash of sheer beauty—white teeth in a healthy mouth.

But if she's been careless, heedless—her smile may be just an unpleasant glimpse of dingy teeth, of tender gums . . . and that "moment of magic"—that "instant of glamour" is lost forever.

NEVER NEGLECT "PINK TOOTH BRUSH"

For the sake of your own good looks and good health—go directly to your dentist whenever you see that tinge of "pink." It may be a symptom of a serious gum trouble. But it is far more likely to be a simple warning of gums that need more exercise, more stimulation—gums that will quickly respond to the healthful stimulation of Ipana and massage.

Modern dental teaching emphasizes this fact—today's soft foods are largely responsible for tender, ailing gums. They need far more work and exercise than they get to keep them firm and healthy. And that is why Ipana Tooth Paste and massage is so widely recommended—so widely practiced. Rub a little extra Ipana into your gums every time you brush your teeth, and the reason is soon evident.

For those lazy gums waken. Circulation increases. Gums feel stronger. You'll notice a firmer feeling, a healthier look. They're less "touchy," and more resistant.

Ipana is especially designed to benefit the gums as well as the teeth. So when you use Ipana in addition to massage, you are using the dentist's ablest assistant in the home care of teeth and gums. You are giving the really serious gum troubles far fewer chances. And you are adding, every day, to your own beauty and your own power of attraction.

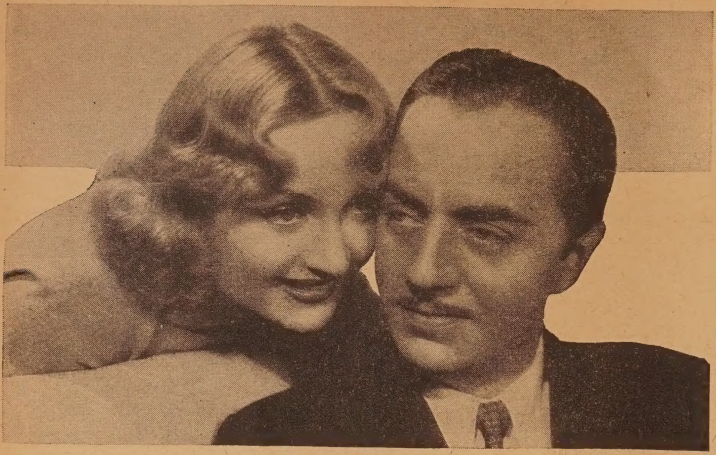
Your opinion is worth money—try for one of the cash prizes!



Another once-married now-divorced pair make a gay picture together—Carole Lombard and Bill Powell in My Man Godfrey. Remember the ex-wedded Margaret Sullavan and Henry Fonda in The Moon's Our Home? What's your reaction on seeing now-dissolved couples making love on the screen?

$15.00 Prize Letter

Don't Poke Fun

I'D LIKE to register a very necessary complaint against the "humorous" treatment of hapless citizens by satirical newsreel photographers. You've seen them, poor creatures—families of sweepstake winners, members of religious orders, political candidates—all photographed from the worst possible angles, all saying things in squeaky voices and making utter fools of themselves. It's funny—I'll admit, it's screamingly funny and the audience, being very superior, howls with helpless glee. I howl, too, till I'm limp in my chair—though undoubtedlv I'd look just as silly on the screen. I laugh and feel a little ashamed. For seriously, the method is both distasteful and discourteous.

I've never been a victim of the newsreel racket, nor have any of my friends, so this is no personal grudge. At any rate, I hope this is the first step toward the elimination of such unnecessary ridicule, and that bubbling cameramen will find it in their merry hearts to curb a little of their heavy mirth.—Estelle Katz, 23 Ellsworth Ave., Brockton, Mass.

$10.00 Prize Letter

Bridging The Years

AT SEVENTY, I have neither the money nor patience for new-fangled hobbies to keep old age at bay, yet I act and look as young as most women years younger. My secret? Two movies a week? There I keep in touch with the rapid social changes of today; I thrill to romance a la Gable and Crawford; I laugh at the rollicking humor of Laurel and Hardy; while little Shirley Temple—my favorite of them all—takes me back across the bridge of years to the most treasured days of life, when my own children were babies. If the real object of life is to help the most people, then the film industry has triumphantly justified its existence. Aye! They have given us "life more abundantly."—Mrs. Alice Flaherty, 1038 Murdock Ave., Parkersburg, West Va.

$5.00 Prize Letter

Memorable Scenes

ETCHING, those little scenes, that reserve a place in your memory—Lewis Stone, quoting Macbeth, and that off-distance shot, which told us much, in Three Godfathers . . . Jeanette MacDonald, singing at the opera, bewildered by the unseen voice of Nelson Eddy, singing the "Indian Love Call" . . . Irene Dunne, seeing the light of day after Robert Taylor's operation in Magnificent Obsession . . . The beauty, and simplicity of Spanky McFarland's funeral in Trail of the Lonesome Pine . . . Gary Cooper's dejected appearance as he was branded insane in Mr. Deeds Goes To Town . . . The meeting of the dog and horse after the long parting in Two in Revolt . . . And, well this could go on and on. . . .

. . . It is these little scenes, that make us go back again to the theatre to find more of them to place in our memory.—Schuyler C. Hill, Box 756, Centralia, Wash.

The Gamboling Kid

WHY is Fred Astaire so attractive? What is his peculiar charm? I mean his charm as a person—still, or in action—but especially still, since any sap can understand why he is attractive when he dances.

I am not going to say he has a "funny face"—though I resentfully admit that he may have one—because most comedians have funny faces and we don't lose our hearts to them. He has a delightful smile and excellent teeth, but all movie stars have smiles and teeth.

Then what on earth is there about Fred Astaire that makes both men and women fall for him?

Well, I am prepared to unriddle the riddle! I thought it all out myself! It is just this: Fred Astaire is the youngest person in the world! He is younger than a puppy, or a kitten, or a gamboling kid—younger than Shirley Temple!—I mean it. Every look, every gesture is the perfect expression of "youngness." Did you ever see anyone chew gum before and enjoy the sight? You enjoy it because Fred Astaire chews gum exactly like an eight-year-old boy, with freckles on his nose and one pants-leg hanging down. He is quicksilver, racing water, the wind, the tide—but most of all he is youth.—Ethel L. Small, 1827 Belmont Road, Washington, D. C.

$1.00 Prize Letter

Another Protest

CAN'T something be done about news reels? In the silent days they presented "scoops" worth seeing, but today they bore you with inane commentators, bathing beauty contests, comedy, (so called) bits, and military propaganda.

They should be just what their name implies—news reels.—Agnes Meeks, 4422 Beryman Avenue, Culver City, Calif.

$1.00 Prize Letter

Follow The Fleet

IN Follow the Fleet we saw two sailors in uniform attending a house party in an atmosphere befitting playboys, brokers and oil barons.

Although we wish we had such opportunities to mingle socially with our superior officers, most of us salty gentry who go down to the sea in ships are not fortunate enough to spend our leisure hours in such a swanky environment.

In spite of this phenomena Fred Astaire and Randolph Scott portrayed gobs in a real goblike manner inspired by two of the swellest gals in cinemaland, nimble-footed Ginger Rogers and Harriet Hilliard of the radio.—R. J. Shelton, Vauclain Home, San Diego, Calif.

What's on your mind regarding movies and its people? Have you, for instance, a pet story you'd like to see filmed—special stars you'd like to see in the leading rôles? Any topic—so long as it concerns the fourth largest industry—that you wish to write about it's okay with us.

We all enjoy reading each other's complaints and pats-on-the-back and since you may win one of the monthly cash prizes, here's your chance to do a doubly-good turn for yourself!

The folk who make pictures (stars, directors and producers) read these columns to learn what you like and don't like to see when you go to their movies. So join—today!—our company of pen wielders who like to make their opinions known. If you wish, we'll not publish your name.

The first letter published each month wins $15; second, $10; third, $5; all others published, $1. Write to The Letter Page, Screen Book, Hollywood, Calif. Time's a-wastin' . . .

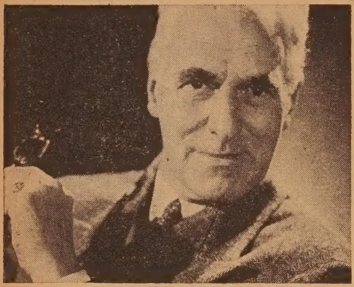
Let's see what the doctor says about laxatives



AS SYMPATHETIC as your doctor is with his patients, he is strictly a scientist in his attitude towards health. He has, for instance, certain definite standards which he demands of a laxative before giving it his approval. These requirements are listed below. Read them carefully for your own good.

THE DOCTOR'S TEST OF A GOOD LAXATIVE

It should be dependable.
It should be mild and gentle.
It should be thorough.
Its merit should be proven by the test of time.
It should not form a habit.
It should not over-act.
It should not cause stomach pains.
It should not nauseate or upset digestion.

EX-LAX MEETS THIS TEST AT EVERY POINT

Next time you need a laxative remember this: Ex-Lax fulfills the doctor's requirements at every point. Doctors everywhere use Ex-Lax in their own families. Mothers have given it to their children with perfect trust for over 30 years. Since Ex-Lax was first introduced, it has steadily risen in public confidence. Today more people use Ex-Lax than any other laxative in the world.

PROVE THE DOCTOR'S POINTS YOURSELF

Try Ex-Lax. See how mild and gentle it is—how thorough. Find out for yourself how easy it works. No upset stomach. No pain. No nausea. Ex-Lax is intended only to help Nature—and to do it without shock or violence.

If you have been taking nasty, druggy-tasting laxatives, you'll be delighted to find how pleasant Ex-Lax is. For Ex-Lax tastes just like delicious chocolate. Children enjoy taking it. And it is just as good for them as for adults.

At all drug stores in 10c and 25c sizes. Or write for free sample to Ex-Lax, Dept. FG 96, Box 170, Times-Plaza Sta., Brooklyn, N. Y.

NINE DAYS A QUEEN—A tense, grim picturization of the tragic life of Lady Jane Grey, who was executed after ruling England for nine days in the sixteenth century. One of the best British-made films of the year.—Gaumont-British.

★★½

WOMEN ARE TROUBLE—Stuart Erwin, Paul Kelly and Florence Rice in a fast-moving reporter-versus-gangster drama. Well-acted, well-written and above average entertainment.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

HIGH TENSION—The amusing adventures and romance of a deep-sea diver and a gal writer of lurid pulp fiction. Brian Donlevy and Glenda Farrell have the leads and it's swell entertainment. —Twentieth Century-Fox.

THE RETURN OF SOPHIE LANG—Gertrude Michael scores in this dramatic tale of a reformed jewel thief who foils a master criminal. Not pretentious but satisfying.—Paramount.

THE BORDER PATROLMAN—The best western George O'Brien has made to date. A drama of the new west, hinging on the activities of smugglers along the Mexican border. Polly Ann Young is the gal.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

TICKET TO PARADISE—Roger Pryor and Wendy Barrie in an amusing comedy-drama, based on the adventures of a chap who simultaneously loses his memory and his heart. You'll like it.—Republic.

THE CRIME OF DR. FORBES—Grim, yet always interesting, is this newest screen contribution to the argument anent "mercy killings." Gloria Stuart gives her best performance to date and Robert Kent scores.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

PAROLE—Henry Hunter and Ann Preston make an impressive début in this dramatic screen exposé of the much-assailed prison parole system. Interesting without being entertaining.—Universal.

HEARTS DIVIDED—Marion Davies and Dick Powell in a musical romance based on the historic marriage of Jerome Bonaparte and Elizabeth Patterson of New York. The song numbers are excellent and both stars make the most of rôles not equal to their abilities.—Warner Brothers.

THE ARIZONA RAIDERS—Larry Crabbe, Raymond Hatton and Marsha Hunt in a western that employs every moss-grown situation in the bag.—Paramount.

THE RECKLESS WAY—Marian Nixon, Kane Richmond and Inez Courtney in a deftly handled comedy-drama.—Puritan.

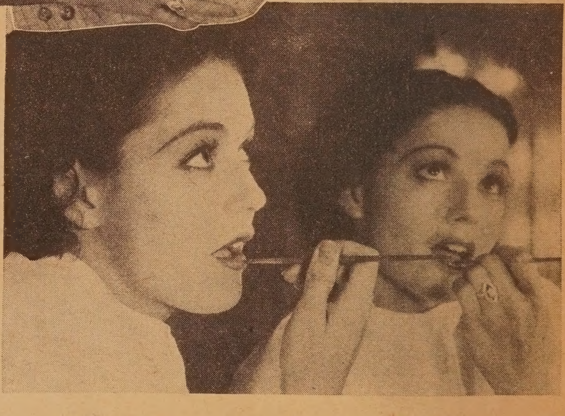
Up the Ladder with Marjorie!

A star in the making gets her first breaks—and a disappointment

Marjorie Weaver gets a warm welcome to the Joe E. Brown set . . . it's in line with her rôle—that of a girl who likes to cling to Joe

First makeup lesson: outlining lips, then filling in with a brush — turning corners of mouth UP to give animation



HOLLYWOOD is doing right by our Margie. She's been here only a few months and has already played in four pictures. It begins to look as though she's going to become famous one of these days. She is, you remember, the little gal from Kentucky who won SCREEN BOOK'S contest and a scholarship in a New York dancing school . . . then a movie contract.

Pat O'Brien himself picked her to play in China Clipper. Next came a lead opposite Dick Foran in Pony Express Rider. She was in seventh heaven—but her ecstasy was short-lived. As she sat in a tiny, dark projection room at the studio watching rushes of the first day's filming, she saw herself on the screen saying "I'll keep both eyes on you, Bill." But the eyes of the girl in the picture were almost closed! . . . unable to stand the bright sunlight intensified by huge silver reflectors held by "grips" to magnify the already glaring light. Her eyes had become swollen and sore and their hurt showed on the screen! She had failed on her first important job! She says that if she hadn't seized herself by the scruff of the neck, she'd have gone off into a corner and cried. Saying nothing, she hurried home to bathe her swollen eyes. But her disappointment was even sharper next morning when she arrived

Famous Paramount Star

A LOVELY screen star—a famous and beautiful woman—Carole Lombard tells you a simple beauty secret you'll find easy and delightful to follow.

You'll be amazed at the way a luxurious Lux Toilet Soap bath peps you up. The ACTIVE lather of this fine soap sinks deep into the pores, carries away stale perspiration, every trace of dust and dirt, leaves skin really clean—smooth—delicately fragrant.

"A swell way to protect daintiness!" popular girls say. Why don't you use this fine complexion soap for your daily beauty bath, too? It's the soap 9 out of 10 screen stars use to keep skin flawless.

New GLAZO puts old-type nail polishes in the discard

You've never seen a polish so lovely, so perfect to use

GLORIOUS news for lovely hands! A new Glazo, so amazingly enhanced in beauty, so perfected in every manicuring virtue, that you must change your whole idea of what a fine nail polish should be.

This new Glazo formula dries to a satiny surface that doesn't chip or peel, that wears for several extra days. Here is a polish that disdains streaking, that flows on with perfect ease and evenness. And so completely has evaporation been eliminated that the polish is usable to the last brushful.

For the newest, smartest note in fingertip charm, ask for Glazo Suntan, Russet and Poppy Red. They're exclusive "misty-red" colors, and the latest additions to Glazo's wide range of authentic, fashion-approved shades. Glazo manicure preparations are now only 20 cents each.

PIE on a Moment's Notice

Doesn't Karen Morley's pie look tempting? Wait until you try it!

For the delicious crust merely roll Sunshine Vanilla Wafers into crumbs

VANILLA WAFERS

Cover pie plate with crumbs and place wafers around the edge

KAREN MORLEY has two kitchens in her home. No wonder she makes good pie!

"The two kitchens were not my idea," she laughingly explained. "The folks who built the house thought it would be nice to have a kitchen in both wings. Why, I don't know, unless the house was overrun with servants who required a kitchen of their own—and while one would do us nicely, it is fun to decide whether I have a blue or red complex when I feel the urge to cook."

Evidently the wife of the builder was interested in culinary matters as I have never seen more attractive kitchens. Your fingers itch to get busy and display your talents. One is white tile trimmed in red, with a red stove and white and red Venetain blinds, while the other is the same, with a white and blue color scheme.

Karen is devoted to her husband, Charles Vidor, who is a director and her son, "Mike." While Mike is still a bit young to appreciate his mother's specialty, Mr. Vidor likes pie and more pie—hence Karen's interest in this type cookery.

The day I tasted Karen's Magic Lemon Cream Pie, I begged her not to skip a detail when she gave me her recipe.

"But there aren't many details," she protested. "The whole process takes about two minutes and is the easiest recipe I know. However, it's a blessing to have it tucked away in a cook book when unexpected company arrives for dinner—so here you are."

A Perfect Pie Can Be Made In The Twinkling Of An Eye

by Joan Davis

MAGIC LEMON CREAM PIE FILLING

1⅓ cups Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
2 egg yolks
½ cup lemon juice
Grated rind of 1 lemon
Pinch of Morton's Salt

Beat the egg yolks and blend with condensed milk, lemon rind and juice and salt. Pour into an eight inch pie plate lined with Sunshine Vanilla Wafers.

SUNSHINE VANILLA WAFER PIE CRUST

Roll enough wafers to make ¾ cup crumbs. Stand vanilla wafers around edge of pie plate. Cover bottom of pan and spaces between wafers with crumbs. Pour in filling. Place in refrigerator to set and thoroughly chill. Pile the pie high with whipped cream and sprinkle generously with wafer crumbs.

Pour the filling mixture over wafer crumbs and place pie in refrigerator

Mix Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk with other ingredients

TODAY'S GOSSIP

JUST before starting work in the Gay Desperado, Leo Carrillo took Clark Gable on a fishing trip to Mexico. Leo has been visiting Mexico for years and was well known by the mayor of the town where they anchored their yacht. In his honor, the mayor gave a dance and Carrillo, of course, took Gable with him. At the dance, Gable was all for going over and asking the beauteous senoritas to dance—but Carrillo warned him that such informality in Mexico would result in nothing less than a knife between his ribs. This, then, was the procedure when Clark Gable wanted to dance: He would cast a roving eye over the assembled maidens, pick out the one he wanted to dance with and indicate his choice to Carrillo. Carrillo in turn would seek out the mother of the girl and go into a prolonged discussion with her about the merits, moral and otherwise, of Clark. Most of the Mexican mothers, never having been to a movie in their lives, were a bit skeptical about the qualifications of Clark, but moved by the persuasive oratory of Carrillo would consent to meet the Mr. Gable in question. Carrillo would then introduce Clark to the mother and she would proceed with further direct questions to pry into his past, present and future. Those mothers who were weak enough to consent to their daughters dancing with Clark, never failed to cinch the agreement with the remark—"You may dance with my daughter, but bring her right back here!" Haw!

WILLIAM POWELL and JEAN HARLOW are married or, if not, close friends are way off in their surmise. What gives credence to the report that they will shortly disclose a secret marriage is the fact that Jean recently sold her home and Powell recently built one of the finest estates in the film capitol.

Bill's home will eventually become Jean's home, so they say, and that will force the wedding announcement.

ALICE FAYE has exercised a femme's prerogative—to change her mind. A short while ago Alice announced that the care and expense of a big Beverly Hills home, swimming pool, et al, was too much for her. So she moved to the fashionable Chateau Elysée in Hollywood. Currently Alice is back in Beverly Hills. You can discount all those rumors of Rudy Valleé marrying Judy Stuart or this girl or that girl.

If and when Rudy does marry, make your bets the chosen girl will be Alice Faye.

IRVING THALBERG is planning an early production of George Washington. No selection yet for the title rôle, but a lot of good character actors in Hollywood, angling for the job are very careful these days about telling the truth for that, according to history, was one of Georgie's assets.

HAVE YOU A "SAHARA SKIN"?

IS IT DRY AND SCALY?

Here's a Face Cream that Lubricates as It Cleanses

By Lady Esther

Maybe you are a victim of dry skin? About 7 out of 10 women today are.

Dry skin is due to several things. One is the outdoor life we lead compared to our mothers' time. We spend more time in the open. Exposure to weather—to sun and wind—tend to take the natural oils out of the skin and make it dry and withered.

Our reducing diets, too, are a cause of dry skin. To keep slender, we leave fats out of our diets. This cuts down the oil supply of the skin and tends to make it dry.

A Dry Skin is an Old Skin

A dry skin is an old skin. It looks withered and wrinkled. It looks faded. A dry skin also fails to take make-up well. It makes powder show up plainly. It makes rouge look harsh and artificial.

If your skin is at all inclined to be dry it would be well for you to look into your cleansing methods. You must avoid anything that tends to dry the skin or irritate it. You must be sure to use gentle, soothing measures.

First, a Penetrating Cream

Lady Esther Face Cream is an excellent corrective of dry skin. For, as this cream cleanses the skin, it also lubricates it.

The first thing Lady Esther Face Cream does is to cleanse your skin thoroughly. It is a penetrating face cream. It actually penetrates the pores, but gently and soothingly.

Entering the pores, without rubbing, it goes to work on the imbedded waxy matter there. It loosens the hardened grime—dissolves it—and makes it easily removable. When you have cleansed your skin with Lady Esther Face Cream, you see it—you can feel it! Your skin instantly appears clearer and whiter. It feels clean—tingles with new life and freshness.

But, Lady Esther Face Cream also lubricates the skin. It resupplies it with a fine oil that overcomes dryness and keeps the skin velvety soft and smooth. This lubrication and freshening of the skin keeps it young-looking. It wards off lines and wrinkles. It gives it smoothness—permits it to take make-up better.

In every way you will improve the condition of your skin with the use of Lady Esther Face Cream. More than eight million women can testify to that.

See With Your Own Eyes Feel With Your Own Fingers!

Suppose you try Lady Esther Face Cream and see with your own eyes—and feel with your own fingers—what it will do for your skin.

I am perfectly willing that you make the test at my expense. Just send your name and address and by return mail you'll receive a 7-days' supply of Lady Esther Face Cream postpaid and free.

Use this cream as the directions tell you. Notice the dirt it gets out of your skin you never thought was there. Mark how the pores reduce themselves when relieved of their clogging burden.

Note, too, how delicately it lubricates your skin and how freshly soft and smooth it keeps it. A trial will prove convincing.

Mail the coupon today for your 7-days' supply of cream. With the cream I shall also send you all five shades of my Lady Esther Face Powder.

(You can paste this on a penny postcard.) (25) FREE

Lady Esther, 2030 Ridge Ave., Evanston, Ill.

Please send me by return mail your seven-days' supply of Lady Esther Four Purpose Face Cream; also all five shades of your Face Powder.

The advent of the story bearing the eleventh child to Mrs. Dionne, mother of the Quintuplets, reveals one of the most unique situations ever. PIMPLES and SKIN BLEMISHES Spoiled My Appearance
-Was Irritable, Rundown
-A Nervous Wreck!

...Yet When Blood and Glands Got NATURAL IODINE All Skin Troubles Ended—Gave Me a Clear, Fresh Complexion and Rosy Cheeks!

Here is good news for you thousands of girls and women—and men, too—who suffer the shame and embarrassment of ugly, pimply, blotchy skin—and who constantly suffer the annoyance of skin "breaking out," disfiguring eruptions and often boils. Usually, the whole trouble is internal, caused by poor blood, faulty digestion and elimination. Now, however, with Seedol Kelpamalt, the world's richest source of vitally needed minerals and iodine, a way has been found to quickly correct the underlying cause of these vicious skin troubles. By stimulating the glands which provide the digestive juices needed for proper digestion, elimination improves, blood becomes rich, red and nourishing—and the cause of sallow, pimply, blotchy skin is quickly removed.

"I had been rundown for two years," writes L. T., "and was constantly troubled with pimples and boils. After two weeks of Kelpamalt, I noticed an amazing improvement and am glad to say that I am now proud of my flawless complexion. I feel fine, too."

Try Seedol Kelpamalt for one week. Note how much stronger you feel, how well you eat, how your digestion improves. If it does not definitely eliminate skin disorders due to internal causes within ten days, the trial is free. Your own doctor will approve this way. 100 Jumbo size Seedol Kelpamalt Tablets—four to five times the size of ordinary tablets—cost but a few cents a day to use. Get Seedol Kelpamalt today. Seedol Kelpamalt is sold at all good drug stores. If your dealer has not yet received his supply, send $1.00 for special introductory size bottle of 65 tablets to the address below.

IDA LUPINO'S Rules for POSTURE

Trained for the stage since childhood, Miss Lupino knows the secrets of graceful carriage and poise

By Janet Lynn

CURLED luxuriously amid the pillows of her dressing room lounge, Ida Lupino presented a picture of charming indolence. But she didn't fool me! I had seen her flashing about a tennis court, placing the balls over the net with swift, sure strokes. I had admired her lithesome grace and beautiful posture on the screen. She was resting now, between scenes of Pickford-Lasky's The Gay Desperado, and apparently she rested with as much abandon as she played.

"Exercise!" she said with a quick, vivacious smile. "Indeed I do—every day! Nothing is more essential to a career on the stage or screen than a good figure and correct posture, and that means training. Fortunately I enjoy almost every kind of sport—swimming, riding, tennis and golf. My favorite exercise, my real pet, is figure ice skating. There is nothing like it for building muscular control.

"I began my training for the stage in England under [Continued on page 76]

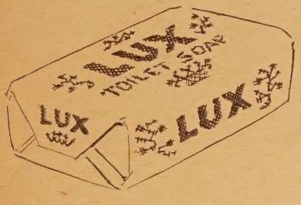
Discoveries in BEAUTY AIDS

By Janet Lynn

IF YOUR approach to beauty is going to be, as it should, from the inside out, then don't neglect any points of health or careful grooming that will lay the groundwork for outward glamour. Your figure, your skin and your hair should all come in for their share of careful attention. Therefore this month I am going to tell you about a valuable aid for each of these primary requisites of beauty.

THE FIGURE—Be sure to augment your good work in exercise and posture by wearing the proper foundation garments to insure correct proportions and perfectly fitting gowns. As these beauty builders are always hidden from view, too often their importance is overlooked. And now that the boyish figure is as dead as the proverbial dodo, more and more clever girls are supplying the necessary aid to a spare silhouette with the built-up brassiere. Meeting the demand for this type garment, the Formfit Company has introduced the Kapok-filled Inflation Brassiere which gives that natural, graceful curve so essential to a romantic figure. Priced at two dollars.



A dependable aid for unblemished skin

THE SKIN—Beauty fads may come and beauty fads may go, but a good soap goes on forever. A clear, unblemished skin is as essential a background for cosmetics as a clean, smooth canvas is for an oil painting. Lux Toilet Soap, endorsed by the Hollywood stars, is a perennial favorite of such dependable quality that it can be used with confidence day in and day out. Hard milled, rich in lather, it is economical for the bath, and its faint clean fragrance provides a neutral background for

FRANK REVIEWS

Clark Gable finds the innocent choir singer, Jeanette MacDonald, an interesting study

San Francisco

YOU'LL be terrified by the wonderfully real earthquake scenes which make the very theatre walls tremble; you'll be moved to tears; you'll find plenty to laugh at; and you'll be thrilled by Jeanette MacDonald's beautiful singing of a wide variety of melodies. Her voice now ranks with that of any of our fine songbirds!

The story has Clark Gable a rowdy night-club owner on the Barbary Coast, to whom Jeanette comes looking for work. She is a church singer, unlike any girl he ever met and of course love rears its head. Their differences of standards come between them, she makes a début in opera, accepts the marriage proposal of Jack Holt who sponsors her career. Holt and Clark are at odds politically, but when Clark faces ruin the girl comes to his aid. Then the earthquake. There is a smashing, dramatic finale in which Clark, handling a difficult part, proves himself a fine actor. The religious theme, merely suggested throughout the picture, reaches a climax.

Jeanette gives a brilliant acting performance and looks lovelier than ever. It seems just a bit incongruous to find her after the devastation, singing on a hillside with nary a white ostrich feather ruffled. Movie heroines always emerge so unscathed! Spencer Tracy, as a priest, and Jessie Ralph have notable individual scenes. Jack Holt, Ted Healy, Shirley Ross and Harold Huber add to the splendid cast. Most beautiful sequence: Jeanette singing "Hosannah" with the little choir boys. This is a film you can't afford to miss.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Anne Shirley, as M'Liss, confronts her drunken father, Guy Kibbee

M'Liss

THIS picture's appeal is in its simplicity. As M'Liss, a wild mountain girl, Anne Shirley gives an admirably restrained performance, although she is whimsical and spirited, innocent and wise in turn. The girl learns about love as well as the three Rs from her school teacher, John Beal. Guy Kibbee delivers both humor and pathos as her too-goodnatured and perpetually drunken father. Douglas Dumbrille gets a break from his usual villainy and does well as a rough-cut but sympathetic character. Most memorable scene: M'Liss goes to a tough dance hall girl to ask, innocently, "What does marriage mean?" It's a well-rounded out screen play.—Produced by RKO-Radio.

Drunken Robert Young calls on newlyweds Gene Raymond and Barbara Stanwyck

The Bride Walks Out

IT'S a delightful farce, with an accent on romance. Barbara Stanwyck handles her comedy well, yet remains sincere and sympathetic. Next for honors is Robert Young's bit as a lovable but frequently inebriated millionaire. The story: Gene Raymond, a $35-a-week engineer persuades Barbara two can live as cheaply as one. The bills pile up, she goes back to work, unknown to him. His pride wounded when he discovers her well-meaning duplicity, they quarrel and separate. The playboy steps in—but you can guess how it ends. Helen Broderick and Ned Sparks are an hilarious husband and wife, and Billy Gilbert has some very funny lines as the bill collector who haunts the bride.—Produced by RKO-Radio.

June Travis and Joe E. Brown thip thider thru a thraw

Earthworm Tractors

Louis DaPron, Eleanore Whitney and Robert Cummings romance while dancing

Three Cheers For Love

THE principals are young dancers. Eleanore Whitney, in a girls' school, falls in love with song writer Robert Cummings, who poses as a music teacher. A couple of old theatrical troupers invade the school with their galaxy of musical comedy actors posing as students, put on a show, hoping to crash Hollywood via Eleanore's motion picture producer father. Everyone picks up the marbles and wins. Best feature of an otherwise drab film is Eleanore's dancing. On the mature side of the cast are John Halliday, William Frawley, Elizabeth Patterson and Grace Bradley.—Produced by Paramount.

In Business

"She looks bright and acts bright—why on earth doesn't she get wise to herself? I'm certainly not going to stand for this. It's either Mum for her or a new secretary for me."

In Love

"She isn't the girl I thought she was. She could be so swell, too, if it weren't for this. Wonder why somebody doesn't tell her, or give her some Mum or something. Well, I can't be bothered."

EMPLOYERS and men in love are alike in this — they refuse to bother with a girl who is careless about underarm perspiration odor.

The up-to-date girl knows the quick, easy answer to this problem. The daily Mum habit!

It takes only half a minute to use Mum. Then you're safe all day long.

Use Mum any time, even after you're dressed. For it's harmless to clothing. And it's so soothing to the skin you can use it right after shaving the underarms.

Mum doesn't prevent the natural perspiration, you know. But it does prevent every trace of perspiration odor.

Remember — nothing so quickly kills a man's interest in a girl as ugly perspiration odor. Don't risk it — use Mum regularly, every day! Bristol-Myers, Inc., 630 Fifth Ave., New York.

Carole Lombard loves Bill Powell, whom she picks up on the city dump

My Man Godfrey
★★★½

JUST as gay a film as you'd expect to see when two such masters of insouciance as Carole Lombard and Bill Powell get together. Carole plays a nitwit but lovable daughter in a screwey household. Mother Alice Brady and sister Gail Patrick always obey that impulse (Carole, too!) even to the point of bringing horses into the library and tossing bricks at plate glass windows when the spirit moves. At a fashionable scavenger party Carole is sent out to get a "forgotten man," brings in whiskered and disreputable-looking Bill Powell from the city dump. He becomes the family butler (wearing his mustache while buttling!!?) and then the fun begins. He helps the harassed father, Eugene Pallette, to cope with his nutty family. The situations are romantic, dramatic and serio-tragic. Funniest scene: the butler puts Carole under the shower. The dialogue sparkles. You'll enjoy it when you're looking for something fluffy. Incidentally, the players had riotous fun making it.—Produced by Universal.

Una Merkel warns husband Hugh Herbert not to over-imbibe at homecoming celebration

We Went To College
★★½

THIS probably will appeal more to those old enough to reminisce about college acquaintances and reunions. If you can enjoy it at all, you'll enjoy it a lot! Walter Abel is a brick tycoon who goes to his college homecoming, accompanied by his wife and stooge Charlie Butterworth, only to sell bricks for a new building. He scorns the caperings of used-to-be collegians but finds himself in the swing, under the wing of his former campus sweetheart, Una Merkel, who mawkishly tries to rejuvenate a youthful crush. She is married to a likable but constantly preoccupied professor, Hugh Herbert. Two marriages are almost broken up—strictly in the comedy manner—but all ends as comedies should. Funniest scene: the floats in the homecoming parade. Walter Catlett plays his usual talkative character.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Escaped convict Cesar Romero confronts his wife, Margaret Lindsay

Public Enemy's Wife

MARGARET LINDSAY is married to Cesar Romero and they are both doing stretches in what seems to be a co-educational Big House. She is paroled, threatens to divorce him; he threatens lead poisoning to any man she marries, and escapes to make good his word. Pat O'Brien is a G-man whose job it is to apprehend Romero. He stages a fake wedding with Margaret to attract the desperado so he can be captured. The marriage is legal (just why, it is hard to understand) and they find themselves wed—with each disliking the other until the final scene. There are many good comedy situations and a "chase" between gang cars so exciting, everything happening afterward seems anti-climactic. Romero cops acting honors.—Produced by Warner Bros.

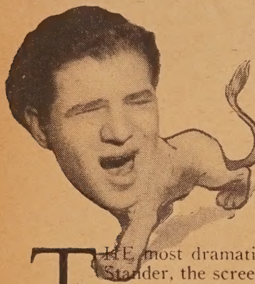
Introducing a new kind of actor to Hollywood—Lionel Stander, who knows all the answers and shouts them from the housetops!

SHY—Like a Lion!



THE most dramatic moment in the busy life of Lionel Stander, the screen's new scream, came when as a kid, a drunk pulled a gun on him in the midst of a crap game. He's been shy ever since. Shy, like a lion; fearful of expressing opinions, meek-voiced. You've noticed that on the screen. Oh, yeah?

"President Roosevelt recognized Russia. It would be a good thing for films if Will Hays would recognize Sex," he bugled forth in discussing the films' dilemma. Lionel, at home, was wearing a royal blue brocaded pajama suit, and very swish it was, too, with its matching dressing gown. His house is a reconditioned vintage dwelling, done into something very modern with low chairs, divans, Venetian blinds, zebra-striped curtains. Schindler, the mood moderne decorator, did it in tomorrow's tempo.

"Sort of Neo-Roman, isn't it?" we suggested, gazing at the tasty tans, the maize-colored upholstery, the low Romanesque seats.

"Uh uh. Japanese," bawled Stander. "All modern art comes from the Japanese," he corrected us. The man is an authority on everything, from collective bargaining to subversive propaganda. That's the trouble with him. He knows too much. Most young actors (he was born twenty-eight years ago in New York City) may be dismissed with the remark that "they're charming fellows—and play accordions." Not Stander, product of several colleges (New York University, Duke University, University of North Carolina), a "prep" (Dwight Preparatory School), Bloomfield Military Academy, Mount Vernon High School.

More than that, he's a graduate, with all the degrees, of Life's School of Experience. Sketchily, from the age of fourteen, he's been waiter, publicity man, promoter, ditch-digger, lifeguard, tile-setter's assistant, chauffeur, cab-driver, newspaper reporter, pulp paper magazine writer, bank clerk, foreman in a picture-framing plant, office boy, messenger boy (he lost $147,000 worth of bonds on that stint, and his job), enlisted soldier. He enlisted to go to the Philippines. Got as far as an Eastern polo field.

During one job, at eighteen, he was bodyguard to a nineteen-year-old dipsomaniac, heir to one of Europe's oldest titles. Every morning the young heir was given a potion to make liquor unpalatable to him. Every night he turned up, sober Stander at his heels, and the young heir roaring drunk. The nobleman had gone to the public library; found the antidote to his morning medicine. Stander lost that job, too.

No, you can't dismiss Stander as a "charming young fellow." He happens to be that anomaly, an actor who thinks. "Oho, I'm an Optimist," he chortles. "I think we're living in the greatest time in all the ages. Never before has there been such a moment in the history of the world as there is today with the struggle of two great classes. I'm glad I'm alive to see it."

Other actors talk about their press clippings. Not Stander. Not even the swell notices he got in the Gary Cooper picture, Mr. Deeds Goes to Town, or the salvos the critics gave him for that croaking-voiced poet in the [Continued on page 78]

Here is Hollywood's happiest couple—Myrna and Arthur Hornblow, who literally "fell for" one another when they first met in 1931. She was born August 2, 1905 in Montana; his birthdate is March 15, 1893—the place, New York City

The Inside Story of MYRNA LOY'S Only REAL Romance

It's never been told before—the unusual story of two charming people so deeply in love

By Frances Kellum

FOR the first time in her life Myrna Loy is in love.

For the first time—after making wives famous on the screen—she is going to be married. Friends say it is only a question of days before she and Arthur Hornblow, Jr. slip out of town somewhere for a wedding. And Hollywood is preening itself in its usual way and saying, "Well, of course we knew it all the time!"

But what Hollywood doesn't know is the story back of that romance—what love has really done for Myrna Loy.

Valentino once said the screen would find its greatest actress when love came to Myrna. And so it happened . . .

For eight years, ever since that miraculous day he and Valentino's wife discovered her when she was sixteen, Myrna labored at her job. Labored? She fought and struggled and slaved. I know. I watched her. There were no vacations. No parties. At night when she left the old Warner Brothers' studio where she was under contract for so long, she drew a curtain down on her private life. But those privileged to look behind it saw a clear-eyed, eager girl at work. Going over scripts. Devouring histories and biographies that would help her with her rôles. Once I saw her at the Japanese temple off Main Street studying Oriental types.

"Do you ever take time off to play?" I asked her. She gave me an impish grin. "Certainly—in pictures!"

You see, Hollywood's idea of play and Myrna's idea of work simply didn't mix. She had a young brother to send through art school. A family she was determined to make financially secure. And with a concerted effort, she ruled love completely out of her life.

There were rumors, of course. Wasn't she engaged to Barry Norton? Hadn't she gone "absolutely mad, my dear," over John Barrymore after that Don Juan production? What about that childhood sweetheart

The Story Behind FRED

One of the most amazing love stories ever told. It reveals some things about Hollywood that you never suspected

By Clark
Warren

ON THE surface, it looked like just another Hollywood marriage story, didn't it?—that item the other day telling how Fred MacMurray and Lilian Lamont flew suddenly off to Las Vegas, Nevada, and came back Mr.-and-Mrs. . . .

BUT—in reality, behind that simple news-flash, there's one of the biggest stories in Hollywood in a long time. And I'm going to tell you the inside of it, here.

It's the inside story of how Fred MacMurray defied Hollywood for love!

It's the story of how he had the courage and the faith to marry the girl he loves, despite Hollywood's warnings that to marry her now would almost certainly mean the PFFT-end of his career!

And more—it's the story of a smart young fellow who, deep in love for three long years, had the strength NOT to marry his sweetheart while he felt he couldn't offer her all he wanted her to have!—but who, WHEN he finally did feel he could give her everything, married her despite all hell, high water and Hollywood!—despite all Hollywood's temptations and taboos.

And that, in Hollywood, is a story!!!

To understand it fully you have to realize, first, the terrifically strong cage that is built by Hollywood around its sudden stars. When a young fellow suddenly flashes across a screen with that indefinable and complex something that, in a flash, sets the film-goers of the land aflame—sets his fan-mail soaring to the top, sets literally millions of young women throughout the world crazy about that man, then things happen.

The studios, warned by past events, at once put the lid on any and all stories of that man's love-life. If he has a sweetheart, they hush-hush it furiously. Interviewers, writers, get little if any news about the girl and the romance. The up-and-coming star himself is warned that it'd be "bad policy" to admit he's in love.

Beyond that, Hollywood goes, too. There begins a more or less subtle campaign to alienate the young star-to-be from his love. This campaign is both deliberate and un-deliberate. The deliberate part of it comes from the studio higher-ups, usually. They have their eyes glued on box-office figures; that's their business and you can't blame them. To them, a prospective star is just so much merchandise, to be protected and made more desirable. They feel that his popularity would suffer if the girls who, all over the world, go crazy about him, were to know he's engaged or about to be married, or even "that way" about some girl. And they see to it that slowly but surely, the star-to-be's mind is turned against romance and the girl.

He, probably wouldn't be married yet if he hadn't been given an unexpected vacation. This picture was snapped immediately after the wedding

At the same time, the other machinery of Hollywood goes to work—suddenly famous, possessed of the innate appeal that makes him the screen sensation he is, the young star finds himself in demand in Hollywood. Beautiful girls, famous stars, clamor for his attentions. They want him as their leading man on-screen. Offscreen, they want him as their escort. For a finger-snap, he could have his choice of any of scores of beautiful and famous girls. It'd be enough to turn the heads of most men. That, and the studio campaign against his romance has killed more than one pre-fame love affair in movieland.

It was three years ago that Fred MacMurray and Lilian Lamont first met. It was backstage, on Broadway. Fred was just a guy who tooted a saxophone in the stage play Roberta. Lilian was just one of the showgirls in the line. One day Fred saw her, liked her looks, got an introduction, asked her out. She accepted. That started it . . .

"Love at first sight" is a trite phrase. But, believe it or not, it's not infrequently true. For Fred and Lilian, it was true—and how true! Well, it was so true [Continued on page 74]

HEADSTRONG MEETS

By Frank Scully

The latest and most exciting act on the Mary of Scotland set

IF YOU remember a little of the battle of wits between Elizabeth and Essex, Catherine and Potemkin, or Victoria and Gladstone you have a pretty fair blueprint of what all Hollywood looked for when John Ford, a violent believer that woman's place was in the long shots, was picked to direct Katharine Hepburn who, with equal violence, believed that woman's place was in the close-ups.

That they were to come together in a picture where the high-strung Hepburn was to play Mary of Scotland, a Sixteenth Century queen so headstrong she literally lost her head, only made the battle lines more sharply drawn.

Here, on one side, was a man who had moved up from directing lowly westerns to winning the Academy Award with The Informer. Here was a pipe-smoking, handkerchief-chewing, coat-patched genius who dressed and acted as he darned well pleased and took the task of directing high-strung prima donnas as so much routine hack work. His favorite picture of all he directed was called Men Without Women!

Opposite him was a wilful bundle of beauty who never thought much of the divine right of kings but who certainly acted as if she thought a picture queen could do no wrong; and even if she did they'd better praise her for it, or else.

You could prove that from the infancy of this royal gamin. She always had her own way. Why in her first performance, a telescoped version of Uncle Tom's Cabin, she reduced the cast to Topsy, Little Eva and a couple of slaves. There wasn't even room in it for Uncle Tom, and Little Eva came off very badly because little Katie Hepburn wanted to play Topsy and so Topsy had to be tops.

Wilful in her childhood she was even more wilful when she joined the legitimate theater after her college days at Bryn Mawr. She walked out of her first part in The Czarine with Kenneth MacKenna because she decided she was not good enough! She returned to a side street off Broadway and studied till she perfected her speaking voice, diction and acting skill generally.

Then she returned to the theater in The Big Pond. The director didn't like the way she interpreted her part and before he could tell her any more she walked again!

She waited three months for the chance to play opposite Leslie Howard in The Animal Kingdom and after six rehearsals she was out again! All you had to do was to tell Hepburn how to play the part and you found yourself talking to the backdrop.

But at last the tide turned. She went into The Warrior's Husband in the star rôle and, for a change, was fired as not being good enough. So the producer thought. Fortunately for the divine fire of Hepburn he couldn't get anybody half as good and had to ask her to return. She was too good to pout.

"I instinctively knew it was the break," she said, "and I took the bit in my teeth."

So she went back with her head as high as ever, but no higher, and walked into a smash success. She was a star—the toast of Broadway overnight.

But everybody was terrified by that old walkout complex of "Will you come at least one day dressed like a gentleman?"

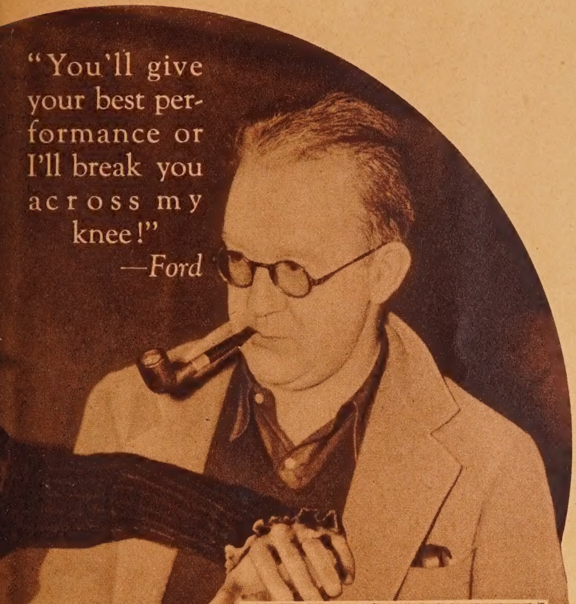
—Hepburn

HEPBURN HER MATCH!



"You'll give your best performance or I'll break you across my knee!"
—Ford

hers and every producer and director lived in mortal terror of it. Like Catherine the Great of Russia, Katharine of Hollywood had always proved that she did as she pleased. Her regal commands had to be obeyed and she cracked the whip on everybody and anybody who tried to take the reins in his own hands. Would Ford, too, go down under the lash of her royal tongue?

I was curious as anybody to see how this headstrong star and this equally stubborn director of her destiny were getting on.

In the studio restaurant, to my utter delight and astonishment, sat the Queen herself, en pantoufles, as the French say. At her right sat Prime Minister Ford and at her left Royal Scrivener Dudley Nichols, winner of the Academy prize for the best script of the year. Also present were Royal Photographer Joe August, Chancellor of the Exchequer Bob Sisk, and the Three-Gun Harry Carey.

With incredible hospitality they offered me a chair, and the Queen, her legs hidden in jodhpurs, those horsey riding pants which she wears when not working, bowed and smiled and welcomed me to dine at the royal table and tell her all the news.

I forgot everybody else in the presence.

"So you wouldn't shake hands with me, eh?" queried Prime Minister Ford, biting a mean briar and fearing I was going too fast into the camp of the enemy after being a Ford fan for years.

"I had a clean glove on," I explained.

"I've been trying to think of a crack as mean as that for weeks," said Katharine the Great, giving Ford a flash of her teeth in a way which made it hard to tell whether she meant it for a gloating smile or an exulting victory.

Ford, dressed in an old tweed coat, which had chamois skin patches from the cuffs to the elbows, a blue shirt, and no tie, old gray trousers and white tennis shoes, puffed at a pipe and studied his star scornfully from head to foot.

"Listen, Katharine," he said. "I'll play you a round of golf."

"For a hundred dollars a hole," countered the Queen who was once runner-up in the Connecticut State Women's Golf Championship.

"All right, for a hundred dollars a hole, and if you lose you'll agree to come to this studio at least one day dressed like a woman."

"And if I win," cracked the Queen, "will you agree to come to the studio at least one day dressed like a gentleman?"

"Listen, Dudley," said the Prime Minister, turning from the Queen to the Keeper of the Royal Seal, "let's put that unhappy ending back on this picture. Let's behead the dame after all."

"Yes, sir," agreed the understanding Dudley.

"And let's do it right now," commanded the obviously annoyed Ford.

"But we have to match for the check first," reminded the Queen, gloating behind her smile of health.

This, it appeared, was a daily ritual. Everybody took one or several matches and hid them in his palm. Each took a guess at how many matches were in all the palms. The one who guessed right was eliminated from the onus of paying the dinner check. This went on like a tennis tournament until it got down to two. The one who guessed wrong between these two got the check. To them that have is given, so the Queen naturally slipped out of this noose in jig time.

As the thing narrowed down to Royal Photographer August and Royal Scrivener Nichols, the Queen said, "Let's change this thing a bit. Let the worst

WE CAN'T SLEEP!

"Don't want to stay awake—but can't sleep. All I do is see funny little men and count black sheep. What kind of gay night life is that?" Edmund Lowe demands

Here are some of Hollywood's champion non-sleepers caught in the act: Jeanette MacDonald; Warner Baxter, who sits up studying lines; Janet Gaynor, who has become very wistful about this business of staying awake; and Herb Marshall, who is about to pop off in the middle of a soothing hot eggnogg

They're not maniacs, but insomniacs wooing elusive Morpheus and having plenty of trouble

Peggy Shane

"AND lastly, your honor, I demand a divorce because my husband has now begun to read The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire."

"Surely, Madame," the judge is talking to a famous Hollywood star—"this hardly seems a sufficient cause—"

"When you consider, your honor, that he is reading it at night with the light blazing full in my face when I want to sleep—"

The judge nods. He is an insomniac himself. He can well understand. And the lady gets her divorce on the grounds of extreme cruelty. This may sound like an exaggerated case. But it's on the court records. Those who find difficulty in getting to sleep at night can sympathize even though they might think the star's methods were extreme. And for many reasons, members of the film colony find it hard to go to sleep.

Warner Baxter, for instance, studies his parts with such thoroughness—usually at night, that very often as he gets well into a part he gets so excited over it that he can't sleep. There is the story that once his wife returned from a short vacation to find her husband standing in a huge tub of hot water. He was being slapped vigorously with a towel wrung out in ice water by a well-meaning attendant.

"What on earth is going on?"

"Well, they say this will make me sleep and so I'm trying it."

Whether or not the remedy was efficacious, he did sleep that night.

But the incident is typical of what a sleepless star will do in order to get back to normal resting. The medical profession believes that merely lying down with all muscles relaxed gives a lot of rest, even if consciousness is not lost. But most people want to sleep. Stars feel that they have to sleep if they are going to give their parts the energy they deserve. They want to wake up refreshed, invigorated. And sometimes this very desire keeps them from sleeping.

Take Janet Gaynor's case. She knows that she has to be on the set early. So she sets her alarm clock and hurries off to bed in order to be fresh for a new day.

After she turns in her first thought is that she is so tired that she will be sure to oversleep in the morning. So she gets up and fusses with her alarm clock. Now the fear strikes her that she will not be able to hear the [Continued on page 70]

We Take You Through The Tones' Doors On Maid's Night Off

This is the first picture published of the interior of Joan and Franchot's home. Notice the corner shelves which are cleverly lighted from inside. The picture on the preceding page shows the house entrance

TO MANY a Hollywood star Thursday night is a pain in the neck. It means a deserted kitchen, dressing in her latest Hattie Carnegie, and dinner out at a night spot.

To young Mrs. Franchot Tone (Joan Crawford to you!) it spells complete happiness. She can fuss around in the kitchen to her heart's content, wearing the stamp-sized aprons she adores ("I'm always intending to buy big, useful aprons that really cover my dresses," she says, "but I never get around to it.") She can boil spareribs with black-eyed beans (an old Southern custom), mix salad dressings, keep a domestic eye on the clock to see that dinner is ready on time for her guests.

Thursday night with Joan is more fun than a pack of simians. She makes it that way through informality. There's no formality, even in the formal dining room with its carpetless hardwood floor, its tobacco-brown drapes, the classic simplicity of its Early American furnishings. Half the time, when the second round of coffee is needed, she says to one of her guests—maybe it's Playwright Moss (Once in a Lifetime) Hart—"Run out to the kitchen, will you, please? and bring in more coffee." And the guest does. The guests love it.

All right, suppose you are invited to the Tone menage in Brentwood Heights for Thursday night dinner. We'll take you (by the hand) from the start of the event to the late finish. You may talk all night in the pine library (simply full of Franchot's books—plenty on the theatre), and long after the hostess has excused herself to retire. That's why we say "late finish." When Joan has an early morning studio call, she believes in excusing herself to her guests and ascending the stairs to a long night's sleep. The guests understand. That's why they are guests . . . and friends.

"My friends are the kind of people who understand the demands of the film business," says Joan. "They know that if I refuse their invitations two or three times in a row, it's not because I want to drop their friendship, but because I am tired from working, or I have to work at night, or I'm studying my script. Without exception they, too, are in the same business, and they know its problems."

Saturday night is the "big" entertainment night in the Crawford-Tone household. That's the night (followed by a restful Sunday) that the best silver and china comes out, and Finnish Mary, the

If you called on the Tones of an afternoon when neither was at work, you'd find them dressed like this in their own backyard—hard at a game of ping pong, at which both are adept cook, and Swedish Axel, the butler and Mary's husband, have Sophie, the extra cook, in to help them, and they get to work on elegant aspics and chickens supreme. But Thursday night . . . that's the night that the Crawford-Tone cronies get together.

If you were to be one of the guests, your 'phone would tinkle and Joan's voice would come over the wires when you answered. "Come for Thursday night supper, will you?" she will say. "Franchot will be working until the middle of the evening," she will continue, "and I don't want to eat alone." Your answer, of course, is "yes."

Your car will take you to Brentwood Heights, two blocks west of lovely Carmelina Avenue, and north of Sunset Boulevard, to a two-story Colonial American dwelling. Punching the bell, you'll wait a moment. The hostess is in the kitchen, stuffing eggs, and there's not a servant in the house to answer your ring. Presently the door will fly open, and Joan will be there, greeting you with a broad, pleased grin. She'll say: "Hang up your own coat and hat, will you, please? You know where the closet is."

You've been there so many times you know that you will follow what Joan calls the "gallery" (plain, old "hall" to us Yankees—Joan's a Southwesterner, a Texan) to the closet that adjoins the powder room. Then you tag along, stopping first at the bar for a snifter, to where Joan is working in her immaculate white kitchen. She's stuffing eggs, as we predicted, and the breakfast table in the dining room is being used as a buffet. It is full of grand food. The kind of plain, wholesome food that Joan and Franchot like. And you, too. Joan's favorite eating is spoon bread.

If Lynn Riggs is there (he's the playwright of Green Grow the Lilacs), Joan has made baking powder biscuits. He loves them. He is probably there. So, too, will be Comedienne Jean Dixon (she's ma-ad about creamed spinach, and Joan has that for her, too), Magazine-writer Jerry Asher ("he's proven to be such a real friend—true and loyal," Joan will say), and Barbara Stanwyck. Joan, sensitive, anxious to have real friends, not sycophants, is all admiration for Robert Taylor's Barbara. There are two girls, Joan and Barbara, starting from "scratch," who have built up amazingly successful lives for themselves.

Domestically-inclined, despite her orchidaceous screen appearance, Joan is telling one of the women-folk how she prepares the stuffed eggs that will soon occupy a place beside the cold cuts—tongue, chicken, ham, head cheese, and the salads. "Hard boil the eggs," says Joan, busy with a spoon, "halve them, mash the yolks with a fork, add vinegar and mayonnaise, but not too much so that the stuffing is soft, then put in salt, pepper, chopped olives and dill pickles . . . ummm, makes my mouth water to talk about it," she finishes with a laugh.

"Joan," asks one of the guests, "is this cooking act of yours something new? How long have you been at it?"

HOW DO YOU

Attention, girls! It's still Leap Year and here's the whole truth and nothing but the truth confessed by our most desirable bachelors

Do You Like A Girl to Telephone You or Do You Prefer One Who Waits For You To Take the Initiative?

Bob Taylor: The girl who waits is my preference.

Gene Raymond: It doesn't matter. However, I don't like chasers—man reserves that privilege! But if they want to call, it's flattering . . .

Dick Powell: Up to the first four dates I like to do the dialing. After that it's swell to know she cares enough to call!

Henry Fonda: I like women to telephone me, if I want to telephone them—

Randolph Scott: One who waits.

Francis Lederer: Let the lady call by all means if she wishes. It's a distinct pleasure.

Would You Prefer To Dine With a Girl Who Wants You To Do the Ordering or With One Who Does It For Herself?

Bob Taylor: Let her order; but preferably not "chicken a la king," or French pastry.

Gene Raymond: If I know her tastes, I like to order the dinner ahead of time.

Dick Powell: In this day of Equal Suffrage, Free Thinking and tuxedos for women, does any girl say, "You do the ordering?" (If found, please notify D. P. care of Warner Brothers Studio, Burbank, Calif.)

Henry Fonda: Let her order what she wants—if she lets me order what I want.

Randolph Scott: A little collaboration helps. Especially if she can read the French on the menu . . .

Francis Lederer: I like to consult the lady's preferences—and then do the ordering.

Do You Like A Career-Conscious Girl Or One Interested Only In Your Career?

Bob Taylor: It's all right with me if she has her own career—so long as she doesn't work overtime at it.

Gene Raymond: I prefer the latter. But it really depends on what the girl's career is and how much of her time it would take from me.

Dick Powell: Both. Let her be conscious of hers in the daytime . . . and conscious of mine in the evenings.

Henry Fonda: Most girls are more interesting when they have careers of their own.

Randolph Scott: I come from a long line of Southerners who were their women's career. That's my idea.

Francis Lederer: A man's career is only as brilliant as a woman makes it. If she uses hers to dim it, the glow is gone. If she uses hers to stimulate it, the glow increases!

Do You Like To Be Sure of a Woman Or Does the Somewhat Unattainable Attract You More?

Bob Taylor: There's more mystery in the unattainable. I like mystery in small doses.

Gene Raymond: I wouldn't like a girl to flaunt her independence. I'd like to know she was honest with me so I could be sure of her.

LIKE YOUR DATES?

By Virginia
Lane

Dick Powell: I like to be comfortable. So I like to be sure.

Henry Fonda: I'm attracted by the unattainable all right. The old moon-wanter, that's me.

Randolph Scott: Puzzles don't interest me. And after all, security means safety! I want to be sure.

Francis Lederer: It makes a man feel bigger if he has to reach . . .

Do You Prefer a Girl To Be a Good Listener or a Good Talker?

Bob Taylor: A good talker—providing she knows when to stop.

Gene Raymond: A little of both. And well mixed.

Dick Powell: The girl who turns her full attention on you and says breathlessly, "Oh, do go on!"—boy, she's the type that's made presidents!

Henry Fonda: If I had to choose between the two, I'd take the good listener.

Randolph Scott: It all depends. If she's cute I'd just as leave she did the talking.

Francis Lederer: A good listener—because that leaves a man free to choose her as a subject.

Do You Prefer Girls (a) Who Smoke or Who Don't (b) Who Use Makeup or Who Don't (c) Who Dress Conspicuously or Simply?

Bob Taylor: Maybe it seems funny, but frankly I don't like to see a girl smoke. If makeup actually makes her more attractive it's okay with me—but half of the time it doesn't . . . I wouldn't know about this dress business. I guess I like best the clothes that are strikingly simple—and of satin when it's possible.

Gene Raymond: (a) It doesn't matter as long as they are conservative smokers. I don't like to see girls take one cigarette after another, though. (b) It's all right if they use it as long as I don't know about it. (c) A girl who dresses simply with taste is always the most conspicuous!

Dick Powell: (a) I enjoy a companionable smoke with a girl—if she honestly enjoys smoking. But where they do it only for effect it's no go. (b) Makeup? As if a man had anything to say about it! (c) I like my girl to be well-dressed enough to attract attention—favorable attention . . .

Henry Fonda: All the girls smoke. You have to get used to it. I don't like makeup. I go for the fresh out-door look sprinkled with suntan. Clothes—I like them simple most of the time. And a few feminine frills for Sundays and evenings.

Randolph Scott: (a) Those who don't. (b) Makeup is fine—in its place. I don't like to see a girl drawing out her compact every five minutes or putting on lipstick across the dinner table from me. (c) A well-dressed girl usually is conspicuous.

Francis Lederer: (a) It doesn't matter whether they smoke or not. (b) Certainly let them use makeup. It makes a girl more sure of herself—and consequently more charming. (c) Simply, by all means. But with feminine simplicity—not tailored.

Would You Rather Have a Girl Even-Tempered, the Kind Whose Actions You Can Predict, or Are You Entertained by Moods and the Unpredictable?

Bob Taylor: Even-tempered. That means she has a sense of humor (you must have, to keep your temper balanced) and tolerance and common sense.

Gene Raymond: Anyone who is the same all the time is uninteresting. Personally, I like a little surprise now and then!

TIRED of BABY

This is the face that Joan built—

A MAN who has met practically every important star, amazed everyone by saying:

"Joan Bennett is the only truly sophisticated woman in Hollywood. She has poise, charm, a divine sense of humor and a casualness that only comes to a woman who has traveled and learned to appreciate the fine art of good living."

Being a wise young woman, Joan knows the value of marital vacations even for happily wed couples, and so sailed on the Queen Mary alone—except for her maid. She wires back that their positions now seem to be reversed, with Joan taking care of Ellie.

Joan is even more a favorite in England than in America, and is having a mad whirl of entertainment in London.

From the top of her beautifully coiffured dull blonde head to the tips of her smart, high-heeled slippers, Joan Bennett spells sophistication with a capital "S." Her street clothes and even her evening gowns are severely tailored. Bows and furbelows have no part in the wardrobe of this ultra-modern young woman. But in spite of all this, there's no denying it's with something of a shock that you hear the low, throaty, measured drawl that is Joan's voice coming from her delicately-bowed mouth. It's the voice of a woman of the world, but her face is still that of a sixteen-year-old girl.

When Joan Bennett was eleven, she confronted her mother with the astounding question:

"What is poise? How do you feel right when you come into a room?"

And her mother, smiling patiently at her small daughter's whim, assured her that poise was something that came as you grew older. And that was that.

But that was not that so far as Joan was concerned. Even at this early age, Joan was not content to wait until she grew older to know what to do with her

The seldom-photographed Markey family . . . Diana (daughter of John Fox, Joan's former husband) joins Gene and Melinda Markey in bidding Joan bon voyage to Europe. She has shopped in Paris for the two girls, but not for herself. She took along eight trunks full of American-made clothes hands and to acquire that self-assurance which she admired so much in grown-up people.

Joan was never a talkative child. She disliked intensely the aimless chatter and prattling of children her own age—and even grown-ups. It was better, she thought, to wait until you were sure what you wanted to say.

And so, when she was sent to Europe at the age of fifteen to attend school, Joan had already developed within herself a sureness and an amazingly adult bearing which belied her child-like face and figure.

Now, at twenty-six, Joan Bennett is still carrying on the old battle that started way back when she was labeled "the baby of the Bennett family." And she's dead earnest about it!

"I'm sick and tired of having people tell me I look like a little girl," Joan announced emphatically. "I'm going to try to look like I feel inside, or know the reason why.

"I'm so bored with the silly girls I play on the screen. They're so dull and spiritless. Why, I'd [Continued on page 81]

DAILY DUTIES

Breakfast at 7:30

1. Take hot water or fruit juice, with morning paper to Madam when your bell rings.
2. Draw drapes, straighten bed, give Madam her bed jacket, pick up things from evening before—such as bag, hat, gloves, etc., and return to proper place.
3. Bring up breakfast.
4. While Madam is having her breakfast put away night make-up, put out day make-up.
5. Always before going down to lunch inquire what dress Madam is going to wear and put it out, also fix bag. Draw bath if not instructed to do so before, inquire what time car is wanted and tell chauffeur.

Lunch at 11:45

6. Start making up room while Madam is dressing. Never—never leave room while Madam is taking her bath without first asking if you may.
7. Accompany Madam to the door with bag, gloves and anything else that is wanted.
8. Finish cleaning room.
9. Errands, sewing and ironing to be done in afternoon.
10. Spend time in the morning before Madam is awake doing your laundry work.
11. Be in dark uniform by 5:00. Draw drapes and turn on lights in Madam's room.
12. Meet Madam at door when she comes in, take her gloves, bag, coat, packages, etc.

Dinner at 5:30

13. Put out Madam's clothes for evening. Put out make-up and draw bath, if desired.
14. Stay in room while Madam is dressing and accompany her to door if she is going out.
15. Turn down beds in Mr. Markey's room, put out pajamas, robe and slippers, also in Madam's room put out night make-up, nightgown, robe and slippers. This to be done at 9:00. If there is company, this is not to be done until after they are gone.
16. Set up Madam's breakfast tray for morning.

CINDERELLA was just a dowdy little girl dressed in rags when the fairy godmother waved her magic wand and transformed the forlorn waif into a beautiful and desirable creature. A fairy tale? Not on your life! For some of the screen's most famous stars have produced the same magic effects with the wand of intelligence and determination. And no clock, tolling off the midnight hour, causes their handiwork to be destroyed.

I was disgusted the other day when a girl with whom I was lunching sighed as Ginger Rogers swept by our table.

"Just look at her. Isn't she lovely? Ginger Rogers has everything—and here I am looking like an old frump. Doesn't it madden you to see these stars looking so beautiful?"

"Certainly it doesn't madden me," I retorted. "Especially when I know to what great lengths many of those girls have gone to acquire their loveliness. And there isn't a girl living who can't learn something from these former 'ugly duckling' stars."

My companion eyed me incredulously. "Don't tell me Ginger wasn't born as beautiful as she is now!"

I pushed my salad plate aside and started in on one of my favorite tales—the metamorphosis of Ginger Rogers. When Ginger came to films from a successfull stage career she was cute, certainly, but no more resembled the svelte, poised young star of today than Garbo resembles Shirley Temple.

I recall one of her early Pathé pictures. Ginger was a hat-check girl in the story and wore a short, snug-fitting satin dress. I couldn't keep my mind on the story at all because I was so intently waiting for the seams in Ginger's little costume to pop! Ginger was fat—no denying that. Her red hair was bunched close to her round little face, adding width to it, and she giggled a good deal, as I remember. Cute? Of course. But the Ginger of that time wouldn't have even been remembered today.

6 Stars Help You to BEAUTY

PIP, PIP, Old Thing —here comes Treacher!

By Harry Lang

SUCCESS hasn't been a battle for this chap. It's been just a buttle . . .!

It seems screwy, but it's true—he's the world's very worst butler, and yet it's brought him fame and money. This worst butler extant gets paid more for his unspeakably execrable buttling than the very best butler in the world, Buckingham Palace included!

The worse he buttles, the more they pay him and the more jobs he's offered.

He doesn't particularly care for buttling, either. He'd much rather be a handsome movie hero; in fact, that's his ambition. But they won't let him. They insist, instead, upon his buttling—and the more guests he insults, the more masters he gets in trouble, the better.

And so Arthur Veary Treacher—who stands six feet four and a fraction, weighs more than 13 stone (a good percentage of which is attributable to his utterly magnificent nose), and who's called "Pip" because that isn't his name—buttles his way to Hollywood fame, shrugs a philosophic shoulder as he contemplates his growing bank balance and the disintegration of his dream of being a second Gary Cooper, and hopes his fellow-Englishmen won't take too painfully his efforts to portray what he calls "the character of an Englishman so dearly beloved by Hollywood producers, more asininely than usual."

About the time you read this story Arthur's mother in England is receiving a copy of the original manuscript sent to her by her son

That, in a nutshell, is the success story of the tall Briton who's rapidly looming as the prime comedian of current screen farce. Shirley Temple thinks he's the funniest man she ever saw, and wanted to know if she couldn't take him home and keep him, after he'd played butler for her in Curly Top.

Since then, millions of film fans have endorsed Shirley's opinion—and now "Pip" Treacher finds himself about to be catapulted to stardom in the rôle of Jeeves, the most famous butler of all literature. As the Jeeves of Thank You, Jeeves, he's to be rewarded by 20th Century-Fox for a sustained period of utter personal disgust that begun

Scoop! The Other

When Freddie was little more than a baby (three and a half years old) he left his parents' care and never lived with them again except to visit

By James
Reid

Poignantly dramatic is the tale told by Lillian May and Cecil Llewellyn Bartholomew who are now living in Hollywood and hope, they say, to win their boy's love back again. Here they are pictured at the Knickerbocker Hotel

A mother and father who no longer have their only son, tell for the first time the story of how they lost him!

THE two most tragic figures in Hollywood today are not movie stars. They are the parents of a movie star. They are Cecil Llewellyn and Lillian May Bartholomew, father and mother of Freddie Bartholomew. They have had to fight for him against his aunt. And, in fighting, they assert that they have been misunderstood. Tragically misunderstood.

The world has not heard—until now—their complete story. Even Freddie has not heard it. They have never had a chance to tell it to him.

An American court has listened to the story. And listened sympathetically. Now it is time that their story went before the greater court of public opinion.

Newspapers, sensing intense human drama, have reported the court steps taken by his parents in the feud over Freddie. But the headlines have touched only the surface of the drama. They have not probed into the emotions behind the actions. They have left the public to interpret those actions. The result, in large measure, has, perhaps, been misinterpretation.

It was reported that Freddie's mother and father intended to wrest Freddie completely away from his aunt, who has guided his career until now—so well. It was reported that they intended to take him back to England, where producers were willing to double his Hollywood salary. It was reported that, because they had been excluded from his life and earnings, they now intended to win complete control of both. It was reported that they were motivated only by a father's and mother's love for a young son. It was reported, in rebuttal, that this interest of theirs in Freddie was something strangely new and sudden.

Aunt Myllicent (Freddie delights in calling her "Cissie") takes her young charge to a "dress up" party

Out of the welter of reports and counter-reports, rumors and counter-rumors, arose a haze of innuendo about parental money-madness. Some people were willing to accept such innuendo. Others, parents themselves, were unwilling to accept it. All of them wanted the inside story. Here it is, as told to me by Freddie's father—with occasional assistance from Mrs. Bartholomew.

Cecil Llewellyn Bartholomew is a short, slight man, sandy-haired, with frank blue eyes and a strong English chin. His thin face is deeply lined, and you wonder if the lines could have been caused by the same war injury that has given him a perceptible limp. He looks like a man for whom life has been none too easy, but who is still capable of fighting—with a broad smile. He does most of the talking for his wife and himself, and talks well.

Freddie's mother is of about the same height as her husband, and a quiet type, timid before strangers. She is dark, slender, youthful-appearing. Freddie looks more like her. When I saw them (just as this magazine was going to press), they were living in a small Hollywood apartment, one of a dozen on the fourth floor of a "walk-up."

This, I discovered, is not Mr. Bartholomew's first visit to America. Before the War, he worked in Toronto, Canada. He enlisted in the Canadian Army, saw service at the front and, after the big fracas was over, married and settled in London.

"Freddie was born in Harlesden, Middlesex, London, on the 8th of February, 1924," he told me. "Every other story has always had it March. My sister has some superstition about February and has always given out March as his birthdate."

And were they happy about having a boy? Both smiled, and Mrs. Bartholomew said, "That was my one desire. I had wanted a boy from the first. I was disappointed when the first two were girls."

Mr. Bartholomew did the naming. "I told my wife that no son of mine would ever have to carry the name of 'Cecil' or 'Llewellyn' around. So I called him Frederick, after my father—and my brother in Canada. I said, 'There'll be no sissy business about that name. When he grows up, people will call him Fred. And he won't mind answering to it, no matter what he becomes.' "

They had no dreams at his birth of what his future might be. "Parents don't start planning that early. They like their babies too much for just what they are. It never entered our heads that he was born to be an actor. Nobody in my family, or my wife's family, had ever been on the stage. My wife had been a bit of a singer, but that was amateur stuff—singing in hospitals during the War."

There is a general impression that Freddie might not have become an actor if he had not gone to live with his aunt and his grandparents. But his father and mother do not share that impression. "He wasn't out of his cradle yet when he started entertaining us with his mimicry. I remember one time—he couldn't have been more than three—when we took him to a fair, and he showed a great liking for the roundabouts and imitating all the people riding them. Their Most Appealing FAN Letters . . .

Fan letters bring everything—from marriage proposals to fearful scoldings. Read what effects they have on players . . .

By John Winburn

Dear Francis Lederer:

I would be a perfect slave girl for you. I am a thirteen-year-old Balkan girl and have been carefully trained in all the graces and virtues. I am faithful and would have eyes only for my lord. I dance as lightly as leaves in a summer breeze and my song is soothing as that of nesting birds in the trees.

My father tells me that only in America is there money to buy the women of our race and I have chosen you, for I would be happier with one who is like one of our own people. The price my father is asking is one hundred pieces of silver. In other days I would have brought ten times that price, but the harems have been closed since Turkey became a republic.

This sincere appeal is the most memorable fan letter the Czecho-Slovakian born Lederer has ever received. The girl, whom he had never met, far from having overstepped the boundaries of propriety, is seeking to fill the only rôle in life that she and all the other women of her family before her have been taught or allowed to fill. According to the custom of the country, she brings honor to herself and to her father's house by so doing.

It goes without saying that Francis has no intention of establishing a harem—or buying a wife, but he was deeply touched by the offer she made.

Dear Ginger Rogers:

I wish I could see your new picture but I can't. I am nine years old and I go to see all the moving picture shows you are in. Now I am in the hospital. They have me in funny strings with weights on. I will draw you a picture of them. Every day they come and pull to stretch my muscles and it hurts pretty bad but while they do it I hold a picture of you and look at it hard, and then I just smile. Will you send me your picture? This one is about wore out.

Yours, truly, Jimmy ——.

That was Ginger Rogers' most appealing fan letter. It made her cry to read about this brave little boy who found ease for his pains by looking at her picture, and while she laughed at the funny picture he drew of the weights and pulleys, she couldn't quite hold back the tears.

She went right over to the still department and got out all the different poses she could find. Then she autographed them all and sent them to Jimmy, with a long letter. Whenever a new still came through, a copy went to the sick lad with a note of encouragement from his idol.

They say that the power of the mind is the strongest factor in curing one who is ill, and certainly to this young boy suffering on the torture rack of the mechanical contrivances made to stretch his muscles, the courage to try to get well came from the photos he clutched in his fists as he tried to forget the pain. Finally he was able to go home. And as a reward, his parents had promised to give him anything he asked for.

He asked for a trip to Hollywood to see Ginger!

And one day "Jimmy" arrived, with his parents.

"He's the sweetest lad ever," Ginger declared. "I showed him my dressing room and then took him to the sound stage. After we were through he took me to one side and whispered: 'Dad's promised me a dog for Christmas. Do you like dogs?'

"I told him that I most certainly

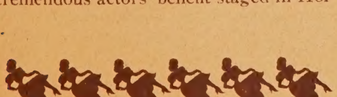
Let's all sing like the birrrrd-eeees sing! tra la la, la la. Betty Furness, James Blakely, Donald Woods, Toby Wing, Tom Brown, Olivia de Havilland, Warren Hull with his Ethiopian suntan, June Travis, James Bush and (seated at the piano) Patricia Ellis, Dick Cromwell and Mary Carlisle open up and give in rehearsal for a big charity show for which they worked long—and gaily!

The goings-on of our young-stars, as told by that popular junior top-hatter and nocturnal prowler of Cinemaland..

Henry Willson

HOW would you like to see twelve of the town's most prominent young stars, singing and dancing in the chorus of a show all done up in hoop skirts and breeches, presenting a replica of the famous Floradora Sextette. It really happened here the other day in the tremendous actors' benefit staged in Hollywood. The show was great but the real fun took place at rehearsals. It is a miracle in the first place that they could even get those twelve together at one time for so many rehearsals a week. Two dance directors taught them the lyrics and steps—and it was really a treat to watch them.



Betty Furness, Mary Carlisle and Tommy Brown would be caught off in a corner every now and then making up their own modern version of the famous Floradora routine that would probably make the original twelve of the gay 90's roll over in their asbestos had they seen the local folks "Going to Town." These stars deserve a lot of credit though, coming to those rehearsals promptly and working as diligently as they did. It was all very informal with slacks, sweaters, overalls and practically anything being worn at the rehearsals; but the night of the show that group presented the world's best looking and most prominent "ladies and gentlemen of the ensemble."

Ten dollars a seat was the price of admission. It was worth that to kibitz backstage—just to hear the old-stars giving the young-stars "guaranteed" last minute tips on how to wow an audience.

SINCE his return from Europe, Richard Cromwell has become about the most popular host among the Hollywood younger stars. For five years Dick has been known as a quiet, stand-offish type of fellow who never liked to mix with groups or crowds of people. Dick was actually bashful.

Today the story is different. The Hollywood younger stars are really getting to know him and include him in their many social gatherings.

Dick has just completed a new swimming pool at his hillside home; so this summer promises plenty of fun for his friends. Kidding about it the other day, Dick claimed he was going to paint signs and put them up, specifying: "Visitors' Day." Tuesdays, Saturdays and Sundays for his friends; Thursdays for his neighbors. (Mondays the pool will be closed.) Wednesdays for his relations (which number [Continued on page 79]

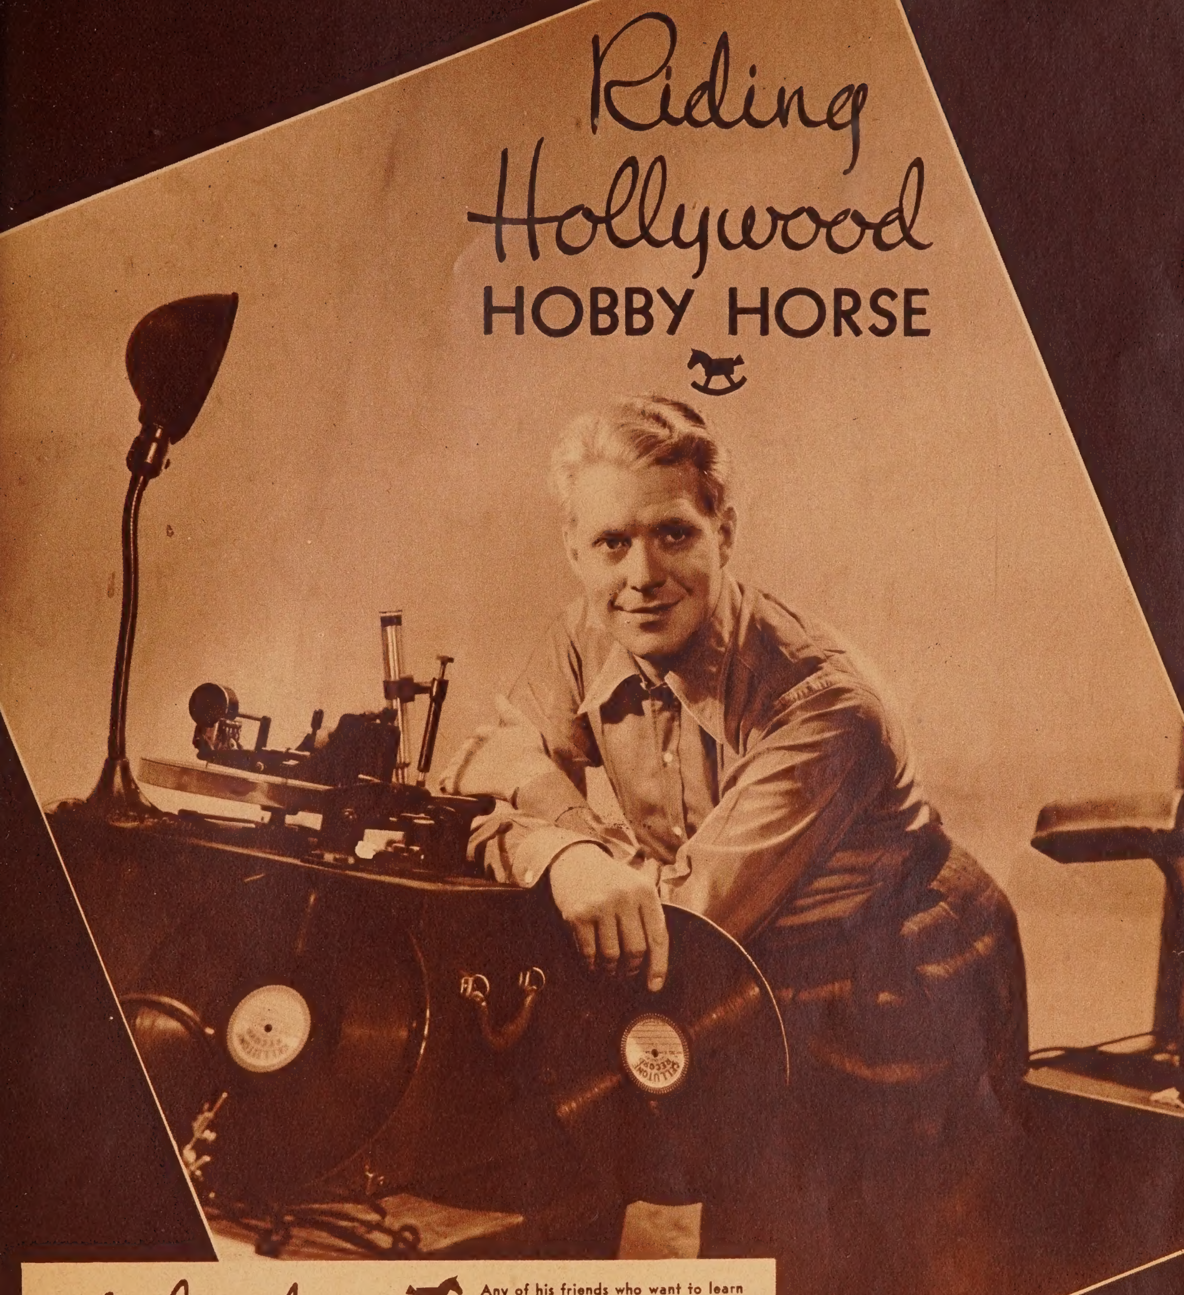
Riding Hollywood HOBBY HORSE



Nelson Eddy

Any of his friends who want to learn how their voices sound need only hint and he will give them a really professional recording. He uses this device to perfect his own singing technique. Being somewhat of a gagster, Eddy has recorded conversations of his house guests—when they didn't know the infernal machine was turned on—and then played back the records, often to the accompaniment of blushes. Picture yourself in that situation, probably hearing your own voice saying ". . . and my dear, did you see the look she gave him? . . ."

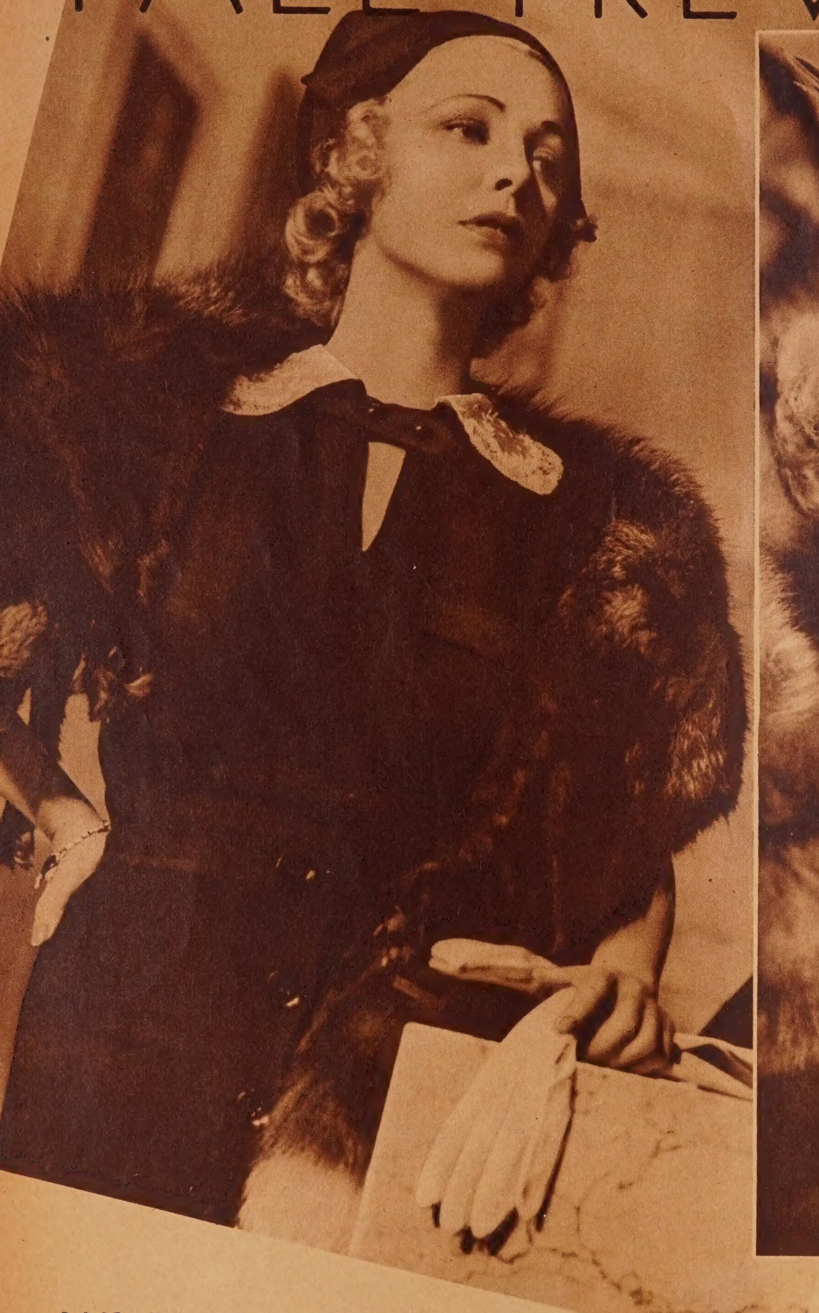
Olivia de Havilland

She's converted a corner of her home into a place where she can ride her hobby of sculpturing in clay without disturbing anyone less inclined to fancy so messy a pastime. Olivia, using simple tools, has become quite proficient and may one day find her models in demand. Having finished Charge of the Light Brigade, she's rehearsing lines for The Green Light, which is to be made from the best-selling novel

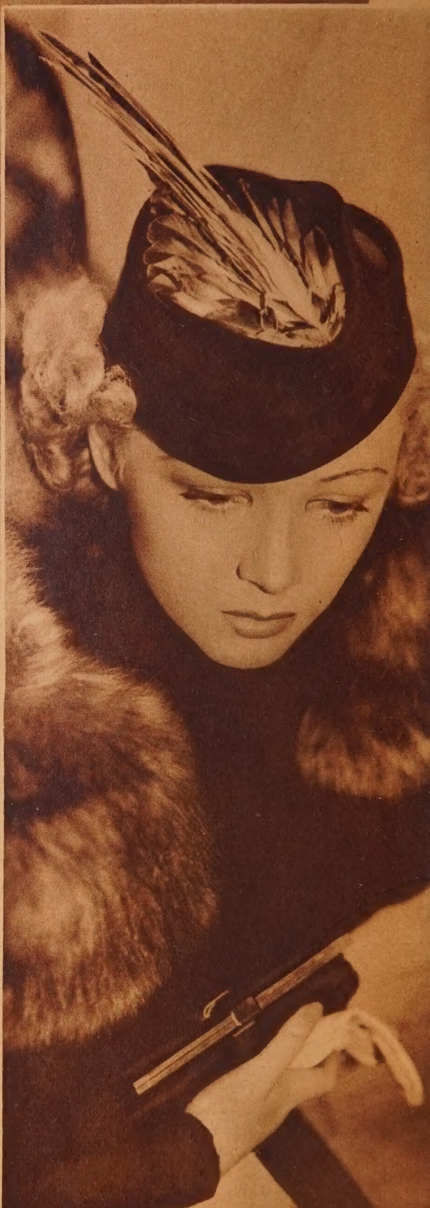
Gary Cooper

Gary once earned his living sketching. In 1919 he set out to be a cartoonist on a Helena newspaper—he was fired with the ambition to become a famous artist. Five years later he went to Los Angeles and asked for a job on a newspaper. The art editor told him to sit down and prove his worth. The art editor was sorry. Gary secured work as a salesman. Soon after he tried for a movie extra job. Thus round-aboutly his hobby led him to the film city and fame

FALL PREVIEW



Isabel Jewell poses in the newest of Fall attire. A black light weight wool two-piece dress with embroidered batiste and lace collar and cuffs



Dressed for the street Isabel wears a smart black coat topped by velvet scarf and luxurious blue fox collar. The coat material features the new cellophane thread, the small hat boasts a blue tipped feather

The correct accessories play an important rôle in Fall fashions. Here Isabel displays a stunning bracelet, earrings and compact to match of aquamarines and zircons to wear with a white fox cape

With a lacquered black satin dinner gown showing the new use of stitching on pockets and belt Isabel chooses sables and a black Sally Victor turban trimmed with exciting buff yellow feather fancies

NOW that the Fall season is under way, we know what some of the world's best-dressed women have bought, and therefore what styles are more or less definitely set, which is a lucky break for many of us. A few of them are pictured above on Isabel Jewell, who has just completed work in the Columbia production Lost Horizon. These clothes effect a return to elegance with smart costume jewelry, befeathered hats and gorgeous furs playing the leading rôles for winter 1936-'37.

The department stores have big ears and they keep them to the ground for all fashion rumblings from the Hollywood studio designers and Paris dressmaking houses that flank the Rue de la Paix, Rue Royale and the Champs Elysees. You can't prove it, but probably the espionage system works as well in business as in politics.

For instance, a new hat is designed for the screen or shown by one of the Big Houses in Paris. A few days later copies of it are seen in one of the leading department stores piled high on tables around which swarm clutching hands. Without "inside information" this would be impossible and it hardly seems like a strange coincidence for two houses or studios with but a single thought.

Isabel Jewell who completed work in the Columbia production Lost Horizon chooses for town a sage green wool dress with hat to match and contrasted it with a golden brown coat and dark brown accessories

MUGS is

By William Frawley

Pat O'Brien points—not at a French pastry, which Emily Post rules is the only thing one may properly point at—but at Wallace Beery, whose homely old kisser has been around a long time

HE'S a mug!

Far from being an insult, this is the most flattering of all slang phrases in Hollywood usage today, for expressing one's admiration or affection for another.

Originally, the word "mug" was coined by the New York city police department years ago, in the photographing of prisoners for the rogues' gallery. If a prisoner was photographed for future identification he was "mugged."

Mugs could be good or bad, smart or dumb, big or little, hot or cold, male or female. Mostly a mug was supposed to be a bad guy with a homely kisser.

An English bulldog has the homeliest mug in dogdom. Yet we have always loved good old English bulldogs. They have the most loyal, affectionate and bravest hearts of all animals.

What could be more suitable than to discard the rascally implication originally designed for "mug" to apply it admiringly and affectionately to those homely guys who take the play away from the good-lookers?

Glance over your Hollywood favorites. Most of 'em are plain, homely ol' mugs who are making the erstwhile ever- and over-popular handsome leading men run second. Personally, we gloat with glee at this turn of affairs, not because we don't like some of the guys with handsome profiles and curly hair, but because it is high time we mugs were getting the breaks.

Meet our gang, folks.

Pat O'Brien

THE O'Briens were kings in old Ireland. Pat is a king in the hearts of mugs he never forgets.

Here's a Mick who was born in the German-est town in this country, Milwaukee. He shook that off by playin' football at a Mick university, Marquette. When the Notre Dame lads were through playin' with Pat, he got smart and decided to become an actor, along with Spence Tracy.

This mug misses bein' handsome by a few shamrocks. In the map of Ireland the best features are a pair of Killarney eyes and a stout Donnybrook chin.

Pat is so Irish it hurts. He'll fight with a pal, but let some lug make a crack ag'in said pal, and he'll fight for him. He likes leprechauns, sentimental poetry, fellow actors, baseball, football, handball and fights, German beer, singing ballads in late night quartets, entertaining hosts of mugs, going to church and adopting children.

No great lover is Pat, but with that fast-talkin' Irish gift of gab, he can blarney any gal (on the screen) into saying "Yes" to the mug instead of the Lothario.

Spencer Tracy

A VERY, very intellectual actress recently said to me: "Spence Tracy may be a rough and ready rowdy, but I have found him a perfect gentleman—and what is more important, there is no finer actor in pictures." She voiced our sentiments to a T.

Spence used to be a bad boy now and then, here and there, but you can throw those innings out, as he was just poppin' off excess steam.

MUGS

Some unknown facts and amusing "off the record" fancies about our biggest actors—presented by a writer who knows them best

Charles Laughton, our British cousin, a mug? You'd be surprised! And Spencer Tracy, above, is a rough-and-ready rowdy—still perfection in his own way

Three of the finest—Fred Austerlitz, Claude Dukinfield and Harry Lillis Crosby, who have always been on the up and up and who have made the spirits of vast audiences soar. The boys, Fred Astaire, W. C. Fields and Bing, long ago discarded their youthful names—but not their youthful ways

He was born in Milwaukee, same as Pat O'Brien, and they grew up together on the stage. Used to swap rôles. Once while playing a bit with Ethel Barrymore in New York, some caustic critic said that he "looked as if he had been picked up by the property man." This made Spence mad, so he made the Theater Guild so the guy would have to eat his words. And did.

Essentially a man's man, Spence is a popular mug in Hollywood. He won't wear make-up in pictures or hats in public. He goes around in riding britches, boots and a sweat shirt.

Recently he was bitten by a polo spider. He likes his ponies so much he eats with 'em. His best friend and idol was Will Rogers, which will tell you what kind of a mug he is better than words.

Bing Crosby

HERE is a mug who is right as rain, and as well liked as the sun itself. Just ain't nothin' wrong with the guy, so don't start askin' us if he is nice to his folks.

A plain mug who believes in Lady Luck. A few years ago croonin' out arias with two other larks in Paul Whiteman's band, and today every note bubblin' from his throat worth about eleven bucks a "bub."

A crooner whose lazy, caressin' voice is merely a swell reflection of his own amiable personality. Romance clad in old sweaters and floppy pants. But when he turns on the heat, a mug who can take the play away from the Don Juans.

A young western rancher come to town to play golf and drink a few beers with the gang at Lakeside. Too smart for the wise guys who manipulate the ponies, he buys, breeds and bets on his own ponies.

No ladies' man is he, except for a golden-haired honey he calls Dixie. No swanky parties, no night clubs, no high, wide and fancy steppin'.

Strictly a family man and a man's man. That's Bing!

Fred Astaire

IF FRED ASTAIRE couldn't dance a step, he would still be one great mug.

Here is a little guy from Omaha, looking just as funny as Chic Sale, Odd McIntyre and some of the rest of us country mugs. But, not only has he been showing the world how to dance for several years, but he had the crowned heads of Europe at his feet.

If there is anything that makes Fred mad it is when some one refers to him as "the best-

Are YOU the Double

Hollywood has become "double" conscious—even Laurel and Hardy play twin brothers

$500 in PRIZES for ANY "TWINS"

$50 for photograph most resembling Stan Laurel
$50 for photograph most resembling Oliver Hardy
$50 for photograph most resembling one of the Our Gang kiddies
$50 for photograph most resembling a male star
$50 for photograph most resembling a female star
$50 for photograph most resembling a child actor
$50 for photograph most resembling a character actor
$50 for photograph most resembling a character actress
$50 for photograph most resembling a juvenile, male
$50 for photograph most resembling a juvenile, female

You may not resemble any of these well-known players, Spanky MacFarland, Joan Crawford, or Joan Blondell—but you may look like some other screen personality—man, woman, juvenile or child. If you think you do, by all means send your picture OPPORTUNITY—that much-talked-of lady—is knocking at your door. She's calling all men, women and children.

If you've ever been told—or if you've ever thought that you look like a movie player, then send in your picture right away. There are many prizes. Think of it—$50 for a photograph.

Perhaps you have one facial feature that makes you resemble some screen personality. Just this one point of similarity may make you a winner. If you are a young woman, you may have a smile like Janet Gaynor's, hair like Kay Francis', eyes like Claudette Colbert's—some facial feature that marks your similarity to any girl player. If you are an older woman, send your picture if you think you resemble any one of the dozens of character actresses.

If you are a man, perhaps you have some resemblance to a male player—Guy Kibbee, for instance, or Robert Montgomery, Robert Taylor, Jack Oakie, Ronald Colman or Bill Powell. If you are an older man, the chances are that you do look just a bit like one of the myriad of successful character actors or comedians.

Perhaps you are a child or know of a child who looks like Shirley Temple, Sybil Jason, Jackie Cooper, Janie Withers, Mickey Rooney, Edith Fellows or Alfalfa of Our Gang.

Some famous physiognomists have said that every one of us has an exact double somewhere in this world. This has been proved in many instances. John Boles' double, Wilbur McGaugh, looks so much like Boles that he can fool the camera even in a close-up. Warner Baxter and his stand-in, Frank McGrath, are now vacationing in Canada—and the other holidayers at the resort cannot tell which is which.

There are innumerable such instances of astounding resemblances.

This is your chance to capitalize on

Hollywood's MOST

So unique in appearance and personality was the late Will Rogers that you'd never expect to find any-one who looked even remotely like him # of a MOVIE STAR?

Whether you're young or old, ugly or pretty you have a chance to win this contest and become known as a movie double

Two and two equal what? . . . Laurel and Hardy in an hilarious comedy titled Our Relations, in which each plays his own twin brother any similarity you may have to any one of the countless people you have seen on the screen. It makes no difference what age or race you may be—for Chinese Anna May Wong and Keye Luke, and Negro actresses and actors (Louise Beavers, Bill Robinson, Stepin Fetchit and little "Buckwheat" of Our Gang) have enjoyed great success in Hollywood.

Just so, you have an equal chance to win in this contest—to win one of the cash prizes and have your photograph published. It may be a stepping stone to fame—as it was in the case of Marjorie Weaver, who won a SCREEN BOOK contest a few months ago and was, as a consequence, given a movie contract. She has already made four pictures.

Perhaps some trick of make-up will emphasize your similarity to one of Hollywood's players. You are at perfect liberty to use what art you can command to make this resemblance more pronounced.

Ginger Rogers' stand-in, Marie Osbourne, doesn't startle anyone with her likeness to Ginger until she puts on a curly light wig over her own smooth dark hair, curls her eyelashes, and makes up her mouth and eyebrows to look like Ginger's. When she has done this, even the people who work with these girls must stop and look twice to discover which is which.

Perhaps the player you resemble only slightly looks more like you when he or she is photographed from a certain angle. You can use a few make-up tricks and have your picture taken while you are posed like the star is posed in some photograph you may have. That's all permissable in this contest—for the art of make-up plays a large part in movies.

FAMOUS DOUBLE!

A. A. Trimble, a map salesman, won fame and fortune because he could — and did! — double for the beloved cowboy philosopher

CONTEST RULES

1. Any man, woman or child is eligible—and welcome!—to enter a photograph in this contest, except employees of Screen Book or anyone who has accepted pay for doubling for movie players.
2. The winners are to be judged solely by their likeness to current screen personalities, selected by the editorial staff of Screen Book. The judges' decisions are to be final.
3. The contest closes midnight, October 10, 1936, and all eligible entries will bear postmark on or prior to that time.
4. In case of a tie, duplicate prizes will be awarded.
5. No photos can be returned, and no correspondence entered into regarding them.
6. Mail your photo with filled-in coupon attached, to Doubles Contest Editor, Screen Book Magazine, Hollywood, Calif.

Every country in the world has its Laurel and Hardy imitators. Here are a few of them. Top, is the Chinese Laurel and Hardy team, who are famous for their clever impersonations. Next, are two young men from Antwerp, Belgium, who earn their cakes and ale through imitation. Directly above is another pair from the Orient

East Meets West to Film

A part of old China has been transplanted to America and three years consumed in filming

The Good Earth

Paul Muni has gone into social retirement because he shaved his head to play Wang Lung, the Chinese farmer, in the filmization of the great book. Luise Rainer co-stars as his wife. All the available Chinese around the Film City were employed and it was necessary to send to San Francisco for 600 more. George Hill, who committed suicide last year, was first assigned to direct the picture three years ago. In China he filmed backgrounds, purchased properties (bamboo huts, buffalo water wheels, cooking utensils, implements of the field, etc.), in fact, transplanted a whole Chinese village. In California, the studio leased for a year acres of hill country. Chinese farmers planted Chinese crops in native fashion, terracing hillsides for miles into the hills, installing irrigation. Now the irrigation has been withdrawn and the crops are withering naturally for the drouth sequences. The two water buffalo imported three years ago are now sextuplets.

Don't let adolescent pimples keep YOU from being admired

UNSIGHTLY skin blemishes are a big trial to many young people during the years that follow the beginning of adolescence—from about 13 to 25, or even longer.

Important glands develop at this time, and final growth takes place. Disturbances occur throughout the entire system. The skin, especially, gets very sensitive. Waste poisons in the blood irritate this sensitive skin, and it breaks out in pimples.

But even severe cases of adolescent pimples can be corrected. Fleischmann's fresh Yeast clears these skin irritants out of the blood. Then, the pimples disappear.

Eat 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast regularly each day, before meals. Eat it plain, or dissolved in a little water until your skin is entirely clear. Start today.

Don't BE A WALLFLOWER!

By Linda Leath

"THE only way any woman can single out any particular man—and win him—is first to deliberately make herself attractive to the entire male sex!" said Joan Blondell. "Women should get over the idea that they can pick and choose between suitors—because they can't do any such thing!"

But first maybe I'd better go back to the beginning. You see, the reason Joan was going on about women was because I'd been pumping her about how you get to be "a man's woman." And the reason I was pumping her was because I had been egged on by my husband. When he gets wound up about her—or any other blonde—I usually listen. It pays. You certainly can get a lot of good ideas, listening to your man talk about another woman!

"I've never met a man who didn't think Joan Blondell was simply wonderful," said he. "So you gals better start thinking a little," he added, the brute. "Ask yourselves: what has she got that we haven't got . . .?"

"Better still, ask Joan herself!" he went on. "Ask her how she got to be such a riot with the men, and could any other woman do it, and how? Bet a nickel she'll be just sport enough to tell you. And if she does—you'll have a story!"

JOAN laughed when I explained my errand.

"Every magazine I pick up lately seems to have an article in it about how 'any girl can get her man if she puts her mind to it,'" she said. "Personally, I think that's a lot of bologney!

"For instance, I came across a good example of this mistaken point of view in the last issue of a sophisticated magazine, when three Smith girls wrote in to describe what they liked and disliked in their escorts. They said they particularly liked Norfolk jackets, clean shaves, white shirts, and so on—and added that 'midnight blue dress clothes may go places in Hollywood—but not with us!'

"Now that's a ridiculous and Even my sister used to say, when he was very small, 'Freddie's a born actor.'

"When Freddie was three and a half, we went for a holiday during the month of August to Weymouth, a beautiful seaside place. On the return trip to London we had to pass near Warminster, where I was born and where my parents lived. We broke the journey by stopping to see them for the week-end. They fell in love with Freddie—the baby of the family. He was such a good youngster, and so amusing, and had such pretty baby ways. When it came time for us to start for London, they suggested that Freddie should stay for another two or three weeks. Warminster was a pretty little place—'much better for him than smoky old London,' I said. We decided we would let him stay till the end of summer. My parents were coming up to London after a bit, and they could bring him with them.

"We'd be expecting them when we'd get a letter saying they weren't coming just yet. I'd write back that I'd be coming down after Freddie. They would ask to keep him 'just a few weeks more—then we'll either bring him up to London or you can come down after him.' Things dragged on that way until Christmas, when we went down to Warminster for the holiday and had a family reunion. They hated to part from Freddie and asked to keep him 'just a week or two more.' We let him stay.

Then we had the same old thing as in the summer, putting off his return from day to day, week to week. But eventually they did come up to London and stayed a month, calling on old friends.

"When my parents went back to Warminster, they asked if they could have Freddie 'another week.' Or maybe until Easter, which wasn't far away. They pleaded so that we couldn't refuse them. Easter came and went, and still no Freddie. But that time it was almost summer. They had a fine place, with acres of ground. He could be outdoors all the time. It would be good for him. Better than London, certainly. Especially the part of London where we lived—the West End, which is like your Broadway. He was happy at Warminster, and thriving. That was the important thing. Even though it meant that we weren't seeing much of him. We knew that he was in good hands. His grandparents couldn't do enough for him. Neither could his aunt. We did not foresee the trouble and heartache it would bring."

ABOUT that time, Freddie's aunt embarked upon his education. "Many people suppose that at one time she had been a teacher. As a matter of fact, she had never been out to any kind of job . . . She simply took a book off the library shelf and started reading to him. She discovered that he had a remarkable memory for what he heard. She started having him memorize whole passages from the classics. When he was just a tot, he could recite yards of Shakespeare.

"He did his first bit on the stage when he was five. He was in an amateur Pierrot show put on at Warminster. He and two others did a dancing turn, fitted out in clothes suitable to the occasion. His stage poise was very noticeable. In fact, he was a draw. It was marvelous, what he could do. The director of the show coached him for the job. And the job went on for the whole winter.

"While Freddie was doing that, my sister met some agent and he had a look at Freddie and said, 'I think he'll do for a bit at the Islington Empire Theatre.' Naturally, we were delighted—and nervous, too. Having him appear in an amateur show in small towns was one thing; but seeing him go on in a regular theatre was another thing.

"From that he got several offers. Then we saw more of him. He and his aunt spent a lot of time in London, hunting for parts around various studios, calling on various agents. Much of the time they stayed with us. Other times they stayed with friends who were in a position to drive them around."

Sometime during that period, they signed an agreement with his aunt that the first five hundred pounds that Freddie made in any year should go for his maintenance and further training. That agreement seemed only fair to them.

"Sugar and Spice was his first film. It was a pantomime, a Christmas fantasy, in which he dreamed of receiving gifts. Then he went into Fascination with Madeleine Carroll, in a very good rôle, and was in one or two other things. Then the law stepped in and said that no child under twelve could act on the stage and that no child under fourteen could work in pictures. The government was very strict.

"He was seven and a half or eight when the ban begun. He stayed on in London and went for a time to a famous school of dancing. A very expensive school, which charged fees beyond the average person. But the manager took Freddie on at almost nothing, on the understanding that he would get a percentage of anything Freddie might make later. My sister managed to break that agreement, somehow.

"With no money coming in, and all their small savings going out, she couldn't live in London. She suggested that she and Freddie return to Warminster and forget this stage and screen business—leave it alone. She would concentrate on his education.

"Freddie never went to school until he was nine years of age. My sister taught him at home from the usual school books. I suggested finally that he should be going to a proper school. There was a very good private school in Warminster, the Lord Weymouth Grammar School. Arrangements were made for him to enter at the beginning of September. I agreed to pay all the necessary fees—until I could make arrangements for his transfer to a good London school, where he could be near his mother and me."

SOON afterward loomed the big crisis in the lives of all the Bartholomews.

"Miss Italia Conti, who ran a school of dancing and trained children for the stage, was asked to find a boy for the title rôle of David Copperfield. A handsome boy, very English and very talented. She tried every pupil she had; nothing doing. She had seen Freddie and knew what he could do. She sent for my sister and Freddie, and they arrived in London. They were told that he would have to go over to Elstree, which is like your Hollywood, and be tested.

"It was practically settled then and there, but I didn't know it. Neither did the government. If it had, Freddie and his aunt may not have got out of England—because of the government's attitude toward children working in pictures. Soon after the test, my sister began talking about a two-month holiday in America. 'If you go and any film business results, I want to know about it before anything is done,' I told her. 'We don't want our boy away from us too long—especially so far away.' She knew we would never let him go, if there was a chance of any long separation from us. So she kept insisting that the trip was only for a holiday.

"Then she hopped a boat at Southhampton with Freddie, without letting us know. The first word we had was a wire from Cherbourg, telling us that they were on their way. 'Will write later.' I didn't like the looks of it, sailing without telling us. I went that same Saturday morning to the Daily Mail and interviewed their solicitors about steps to take.

"I got in touch with the United States Labor Department and had her detained in New York for three days on Ellis Island and investigated. Miss Frances Perkins, the Labor Secretary, informed me that the trip was only for a holiday. My sister visited friends in New York for a few days; then she dropped from sight. I had people in America trying to locate her. Eventually, we tracked her down. She was in Hollywood, and Freddie was making David Copperfield,

"Since then he has made Anna Karenina, Professional Soldier and Little Lord Fauntleroy. I never heard from my sister from the day she arrived here. I sent her cables and letters, including letters warning her that I should take steps to have Freddie returned to us.

"My brother-in-law, Capt. Keith Ellison of the Royal Engineers, who is married to another of my sisters, saw Freddie and Cissy off on the Berengaria. So did Italia Conti and my parents. Ellison suggested that they should form a sort of trust company over Fredde—and an agreement was drawn up roughly. Myllicent would be one trustee, he would be the second, and Italia Conti number three. It is this trusteeship, about which we knew nothing then, that we have been trying to break up.

"My sister knew that I would not have let Freddie come, if I had known of the possible long stay he would be making. Not only because I didn't want my son away from me too long, but because I wouldn't have let him come without everything straight and aboveboard, leaving England. I wouldn't have taken any such chances as she took,

"That 'phone call from the Daily Mail gave her the fright of her life I think. It was the reason why she never wrote to us, her actual excuse. 'After I spent three days on Ellis Island,' she asked me when I saw her, 'how could you expect me to write to you?'"

Freddie and his aunt sailed for America on July 15th, 1934.

Peep at what goes on between scenes. Ginger gets a going over by her hairdresser, Louise Sloan, who winds Ginger's naturally curly hair around her finger to produce ringlets. In a moment Ginger will be chanting I Won't Dance—but dancing with Astaire

"And it has taken me right up to now to untangle the situation—a tragic situation to Mrs. Bartholomew and me. Separated from our boy by seven thousand miles. Never hearing from him. Or of him, except by reading newspapers and American film magazines.

"I interviewed the Foreign Office, the Home Office, even the film company's agents. They certainly tried to help me. But even the film agents never got a reply to their letters. I went the rounds of solicitors, seeking legal advice. I spent a lot of money to find out how I could get my boy back. And it's only in the last six months that I was lucky enough to find a firm that could help me. This firm, by the way, has an interest in Gaumont-British—which probably led to the rumor that I wanted to take Freddie back to England to work in British films, for some fabulous sum. I want to kill that rumor. I want to remind people of the English law banning children in pictures.

"I've had to sell out my home in London to get my wife here and myself here. I've had to put my two daughters in a different school. I've had to lose my pay in civil service—though my job is always there, waiting for me. I've had one round of expense since the day my sister sailed with Freddie."

"Finally, it was arranged that my wife should come to America and take our case before an American court."

WHEN I talked with the Bartholomews, each of them had seen Freddie only once since arriving in America.

His mother told me: "I saw him in Town House Hotel for an hour and a half through a court order. In appearance, he was the same little Freddie, only taller and thinner. He had grown inches since I had seen him last. But, inwardly, he was changed. He hardly spoke. I went up to him, shook hands and kissed him. I asked him how he enjoyed the journey over and he said he was seasick the first day out. I did not talk about the lawsuit. But he had been told all about it. I'm afraid he knows more about one side than the other. . . ."

His father told me: "I stayed with him a week-end, from five-thirty on Friday until Monday morning. He was very delighted to see me. 'Hello, Daddy! Enjoy your 'plane ride?' That was the first thing he said to me. You know, the studio won't let him ride in planes. But he does practically everything else. He has become a wonderful little step-dancer, I found out; he showed me. He has a home-movie outfit that some big star gave him and he's an expert with it. He ran off pictures for me of himself, taken on a ranch, dressed in a cowboy suit and riding horseback, taking jumps and all of it. 'Yahoo! Yip-pee!' he would yell. He has a scooter-bike with a motor wheel, and I saw him go down the road at twenty miles an hour. He's taking up boxing, with one of Jack Dempsey's old trainers teaching him. He's taking dancing, and piano lessons. His education is in the hands of a studio governess, Miss Murphy . . . At a ship's party on the Bremen coming over, I picked up a toy model of the ship's siren, and I gave it to Freddie when I saw him. Well, I heard that whistle all week-end . . . He doesn't let you know he's a big star. But he isn't shy. There never has been any shyness in him. Most children are awkward when they first perform. He never was.

"I asked him when he would like to go back to England. He shook his head. He loves California and he loves the work at the studio . . . I asked him what he would like to be when he grew up, and he answered, 'An actor.' . . . So his mother and I are staying in America, and we're sending for Freddie's sisters. We shall probably live near Freddie.

"I'M NOT out to ruin Freddie's career. That's the reason why I've given my sister the guardianship of him. By that, I don't mean adoption. I don't want to hamper Freddie in any way. He has a fine chance here in America. But it appears that he has been pumped with a lot of nonsense about his own mother. The job I have now is to explain to him just what has happened. He is very sensitive, very highly strung, and I'm not anxious to say too much about it. He likes his aunt and wants to stay with her. But the more he sees of us, the more he will realize our love for him. Words won't be necessary.

"American courts, we have discovered, deal out fairness. We can see Freddie now whenever we like. Naturally, we don't expect to see him while he is making a picture. We don't want to interrupt his routine. But between pictures we shall see him—either at our house or his, which ever is most convenient to him."

By official court decision, the battle of the Bartholomews is ended. Freddie's life is no longer overweighted with emotional conflict. He lives with his aunt, yet his parents can be with him often.

A Los Angeles court has just approved a financial settlement of his $1,250-a-week earnings.

"We came here to see something besides the almighty dollar. We came here to see our boy, to be near him. After all, deeply though she may love him, a spinster aunt cannot be to a young boy what a mother and father can. Particularly as he grows older."

made him a millionaire. During the making of Modern Times Charlie Chaplin invited Coogan to the studio and had the complete picture—ten reels—run off for him. During the showing of the picture Chaplin's auditor came to the projection room to show him a check just arrived from Calcutta, India, for $1,250 representing payment for showing of the picture in 1935 in India. Still going in India, China and Russia, after sixteen years. Imagine!

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S camera car which the company uses in making outdoor shots is, actually, the big Locomobile 6-48 which Charlie purchased in 1916 and has used continuously ever since. Chaplin has had the same Japanese chauffeur for twenty years. Which comes under the head of a steady job.

JACK OAKIE wise cracked Cecil B. deMille and the famous director got a real laugh out of the crack.

Seems deMille was master of ceremonies in a big radio broadcast and told of the time he first started in a little barn, then went on and upward, etc.

"That was great," said Oakie, "what a career? Started small, went to the top and—now you're selling soap."

What Oakie meant was that, on the program, part of C. B.'s job was to do the commercials, telling the value of a certain soap. All in fun.

FRED DATIG, famous casting director for Paramount for years tells a story which proves Hollywood is a funny old place. A director, making a South Seas picture, needed two Tahitian girls who could sing, dance and, of course, possessed of plenty of pulchritude. Datig searched all over and finally had to send to Tahiti for the girls. When they arrived in Hollywood plans to make the picture were abandoned and the girls stayed on. Later another picture company planned a similar picture and needed two girls. The company went to Tahiti to make the picture but had to send back to Hollywood to get the girls.

MAURICE COSTELLO, father of Dolores and Helene and himself a screen idol in the days gone by returns to the screen for a very brief rôle, as a motion picture director, in Hollywood Boulevard, a forthcoming Paramount picture. In the same picture will be seen many idols of other days including Charlie Ray, Theda Bara, Florence Turner, Betty Compson, Francis X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn, Herbert Rawlinson and Esther Ralston.

CHARLIE FARRELL has returned from Australia where he starred in a picture and made several personal appearances and radio broadcasts. He is wildly enthusiastic over New Zealand but not so enthusiastic over the taxation thing there which means Charlie will stick to this country until taxes get reasonable "over there."

MAE WEST, while in San Francisco recently, was prevailed upon to make her first airplane trip back to Los Angeles. She enjoyed the experiment hugely and was incog to the extent of registering for the plane trip as "Miss North."

When she went to Chicago recently she registered as "Miss South" and on a trip to Ensenada as "Miss East" so that washes up the points of the compass.

HAL ROACH, who has been making short comedies for twenty-two years at his studios, made his last one a week ago.

It was the 1,095th comedy—what a record.

In the future Roach will devote his time to feature length comedies and his first series will co-star Patsy Kelly and Lyda Roberti.

SONJA HENIE, famous Olympic Champion skater, has been placed under contract by Twentieth Century and an announcement was made that she would teach Shirley Temple to skate and that Shirley would appear in a picture with her.

However, at a radio broadcast, Miss Henie was asked what she was going to do in the picture and she said she was going to be the star. Guess Mrs. George Temple will have something to say about that.

BABY LEROY is advising all children to forget about pictures. He points to his own experience "washed up at four."

His name in the lights, brief fame and all else now gone. All he has left is a trust fund which will provide him a college education but he can't get that for fourteen years.

He parted with his studio on good terms after they had talked it over with him, man to man.

JAMES CAGNEY after playing heroic G-man rôles in a number of pictures made a special visit to Washington for the sole purpose of finding out for himself just how G-men actually worked. That's sort of locking the barn door after the horse has gotten away.

LORETTA YOUNG was one of a group including Mr. and Mrs. James Gleason, Director and Mrs. John Ford, Jack Oakie, George Raft and the Bing Crosby's who were honored guests of Rev. Frank J. Caffrey, head of the San Juan Batista Mission in Lower California, at the week's religious celebration at the famous Mission. This group makes the pilgrimage each year.

MARLENE DIETRICH is going to Europe after all, but not as has been printed so many times to make a picture for Alexander Korda. Her trip abroad is chiefly to place her daughter Maria, in school and when she returns she will go to Paramount and pick up where she left off making Hotel Imperial with Lubitsch supervising.

Incidentally, they do say, that while in Europe Miss Dietrich plans a little talk with her husband, anent their marital differences.

KAY FRANCIS has been mentioned many times by experts as one of the ten best dressed women in America.

She is at least going to try and live up to that fame with the aid of Warner Brothers who plan one of the smartest pictures of the year for Miss Francis. It will be Mistress of Fashion and that spells clothes and plenty of them.

AMOS AND ANDY are established as Beverly Hills residents and doing all their broadcasting from the film city.

Annual visits to Palm Springs and contact with the picture colony enthused the boys to becoming permanent residents, and here they are!

RICHARD BARTHELMESS is another Hollywood actor who is finding gold in London. Dick is playing the star rôle in an English picture Spy of Napoleon. Mrs. Barthelmess and the children have left for London which indicates that Dick is going to stay for more pictures.

Our Gang*, those perennial favorites introduced by Hal Roach whose first members are now grown into adults, are now called Baby Patsy, "Buckwheat" Thomas, Darla Hood, "Alfalfa" Switzer, Pete the Dog and Spanky MacFarland. The dog is the fourth canine to bear the name. Do you know a child who looks like any of these famous baby players? See the story on page 54

No girl can be too sure of her daintiness to make this "Armhole Odor" Test

If the slightest dampness collects on the armhole of your dress, it will cling to the fabric, and the warmth of your body will bring out an embarrassing "armhole odor" each time you wear the dress . . .

IF you have been taking your daintiness for granted, because you deodorize regularly, you will be wise to make this simple "armhole odor" test. You may be unpleasantly surprised!

When you take off your dress tonight, smell it at the armhole. If you have ever perspired in that dress, even slightly, you will find that the fabric at the armhole bears an unmistakable and unlovely odor . . . in spite of your careful deodorizing! The way that dress smells to you—is the way you smell to others! And the warmth of your body brings out the offending "armhole odor" each time you put on the dress!

Complete protection only in underarm dryness

It is not enough to keep your underarm sweet. Only a dry underarm can keep you and your clothes safe from perspiration. When there is any moisture at all, it is bound to dry on the armhole of your dress and rob you of that perfect exquisiteness that is your goal.

Thousands of users discover with relief and delight that Liquid Odorono gives complete protection from "armhole odor," because it definitely keeps the underarm not only sweet but perfectly dry.

Your doctor will tell you that Odorono works safely and gently. It merely closes the pores of the small underarm area, so that perspiration is diverted to other less confined parts of the body where it may evaporate freely without giving offense.

Saves expensive frocks

Odorono is safe for your pretty frocks, too—no grease to make them sticky and messy. It will save you too-frequent cleaner's bills and the often permanent stains that follow underarm perspiration.

Odorono comes in two strengths—Regular and Instant. You need use Regular Odorono (Ruby colored) only twice a week. Instant Odorono (Colorless) is for especially sensitive skin or quick emergency use—to be used daily or every other day. On sale at all toilet-goods counters.

Send today for sample vials of both types of Odorono and descriptive leaflet.

Their Most Appealing Fan Letters

liked dogs, and said nothing could part me from Yankee Doodle, my frisky little terrier.

" 'I'm going to send you my dog, when I get him,' he said. Yes, he was going to give me the one thing he wanted most—his dog. When a boy is willing to give up his dog, that's about the most touching demonstration of esteem you can imagine."

Ginger persuaded him that, since she had one dog, and the new home she is occupying with her mother since her separation from Lew Ayres, is pretty small, maybe he'd better keep his dog.

IT WAS on account of a dog that Chester Morris came into possession of his most touching letter. An item appeared in a gossip column erroneously stating that Chester had given away his dog.

He promptly received an indignant letter from one of his unknown fans. The man wrote:

> I've long been an admirer of yours, but when I read that you had given away your dog, I changed my mind about you. Any man who would give away his best friend, who would let his dumb but loyal companion go into strange hands, is a base ingrate and I'll have nothing more to do with him!

"I feel about as strongly on that subject," Chester told me, "so you can imagine how much I was concerned over this letter. I couldn't figure out where the story came from, but I answered right away.

" 'I didn't give away my dog,' I told him, 'and you couldn't make me part with old Michael for any amount. And you're right; when a dog has been your pal for years, you must be an ungrateful brute to have the heart to give him away.' Then I enclosed some snapshots I'd recently taken of Michael.

"It wasn't but a few days before I had a letter back from this fan, telling me he was sorry he had made a mistake. He was so nice about it that in spite of his bawling out, we got to be great friends and corresponded regularly.

"Then one day old Michael died," Chester continued. "I was broken up over it. So were the children and Susie. I sat down and wrote my friend about it. I'm glad I did, for his reply was the most touching letter I have ever received, and did much to lessen the loss of that faithful old Dane."

Chester's dainty little russet Spaniel, Lady Elizabeth, came and rested her nose on his knee. He scratched her head affectionately.

"I've got six dogs now," he smiled. "Lady Liz has proudly presented us with five pups."

KATHARINE HEPBURN'S most treasured fan letter came when she was in the midst of The Little Minister. It was from Sir James Barrie, author of the book, and it said:

> I congratulate RKO-Radio for having such a fine actress as Miss Hepburn to play my Babbie, and for having such a fine Scotchman as Mr. Watson to "keep them right."

The beloved author of Peter Pan had written this fan letter with his left hand, for he lost the use of his right arm some time ago. Rare indeed are the letters that come from his pen of late years. But he wanted Miss Hepburn to know of his admiration for her, and to put in a good word for his friend Robert Watson, the Scotch novelist who acted as technical advisor on the picture.

JEAN HERSHOLT was working with Greta Garbo in The Painted Veil when he received his most poignant fan letter. It came from Copenhagen, Denmark, and was written in Danish. The letter was from an old man whose son had gone to America to seek his fortune twenty years before.

"Many times have I been to see your cinemas," wrote the old father, "and the feeling grows on me that you are my long lost son. In every way you resemble him, particularly in The Student Prince. Can it be that you are my boy who went away to America? For twenty years I have waited to hear from him, but no word comes."

Mr. Hersholt was deeply moved by the letter, and replied in Danish immediately. He sent photos of himself and explained that, although he was a fellow countryman, he was not the long lost son. The old man practically adopted Jean, anyway, and their correspondence undoubtedly has done much to brighten the old man's declining years.

GENE RAYMOND'S most touching fan letter might not be so thrilling to a family man, but for a young bachelor one must admit there's a kick in having a baby boy named after one!

Gene told me about a letter he received from a young wife who was anticipating a blessed event. She wrote in part:

> "I hope my baby, if it's a boy, grows up to be just like you. I suppose that a lot of mothers look into the future and wonder what will come to their offspring in the way of fame and fortune. For me, nothing could be nicer than to be the mother of a lad like Gene Raymond."

Gene replied gratefully to the author of these cordial sentiments. Time passed, and one day Gene's mail contained an announcement that the child had arrived. It was a boy, and his name was to be Gene Raymond!

"Did that give me a thrill?" grinned Gene. "You bet it did! Maybe it's all just in the day's business for a President to have a youngster named after him, but put yourself in my shoes. Wouldn't it make you feel that you have to live up to that young mother's expectations? I wouldn't want that boy to grow up and be ashamed of his name, that's sure. I tell you, that was my most touching fan letter!"

Gene went down town and picked out a lovely cup and spoon of silver, with the baby's initials engraved on them, and sent it off to his god-child. When his namesake had another birthday not long ago, Gene dispatched a gift.

"He's got to toe the mark, that infant," Gene wrote, "because he is going to be a pretty swell fellow if he lives up to my expectations of him. Tell me all about him, please! Because I'm mighty proud of him and I want to be a dutiful godfather."

OF THOSE few, don't forget to include Jean Harlow, whom I would nominate as the most consistently popular star in Hollywood—if fan mail is as reliable an indication as we all believe it to be. Her mail, according to studio statistics, averages twenty thousand letters a month.

And so, to round out this story of the fan letters received by the stars, I went to ask Jean about hers.

I learned that she has over five thousand regular correspondents! All their letters are answered and filed, and some write as often as once a day. Many in this vast group of regular writers send Jean a letter three times a week.

"I couldn't possibly choose the one letter that has affected me most," Jean told me. "There have been so many of that nature that I can't begin to tell you what those letters mean to me."

Her secretary had told me that Jean often dictates replies to more than a hundred letters during an evening, far more than the average business executive handles during a day's work. But she doesn't complain of this chore, she enjoys it and reads every letter containing a personal message.

"You can't imagine the good those letters do me," Jean went on. "They pep me up when I feel discouraged, and their loyalty is beyond my attempt to describe it. All of these friends seem very close to me. They tell me what they think of my clothes, give me advice, intelligent criticism—even their most cherished recipes and beauty secrets.

" 'Don't act in roles where you have to talk out of the side of your mouth,' implores one.

"They have very definite likes and dislikes, particularly in the choice of leading men. Their letters definitely influence me in my choice of roles, for these are the people I am trying to please on the screen.

"I feel very keenly my obligation to them. It's not alone their little gifts and remembrances, understand—it's bigger than that. These fans did their full share in bringing me what success I have enjoyed on the screen; without their support no star can continue in pictures.

"In their letters I read of their heartaches and problems, and their courage in meeting them is inspiring. It's an intangible thing, this contact with my friends, but their influence is very real."

Is it any wonder that Jean Harlow, feeling as she does this kinship with her loyal correspondents, has received more poignant fan letters than she can enumerate?

On the other hand, one of the deciding factors in Jean's change of character—and the attendant dyeing of her spectacular platinum hair—was the tone of another entirely different kind of letter she received. She was brought to a point of rebellion by the audacity of some of the comments written by men who assumed that her sexy characterizations invited freedom of expression.

THE unseen friends of Hollywood stars need have no fear that their letters fail to inspire and thrill the stars. All of them have received their share of poignant communications, of which these are but a few examples—and all consider them to be their most precious reward for their work on the screen.

TOBY WING, vivacious, and fair-skinned, Hal Roach comedy star, says, "Summer sun, dust and wind will never give you a dry, aged looking skin if you nourish and protect it with Creme of Milk."

MARION TALLEY, former Metropolitan Opera Star, now a Hollywood & Radio celebrity says, "The milk-oils in Creme of Milk are so fine and penetrating you can fairly feel your skin drink them in."

ROSINA LAWRENCE, blond, piquant, youthful Hal Roach star in "Mister Cinderella" says, "Creme of Milk is the fastest and most thorough skin cleanser we Hollywood stars have ever seen. It is truly an all-purpose creme.

*MILK in a beauty creme at last!

MILK contains natural glandular oils that possess superior power to penetrate, cleanse and nourish the tissues of the skin. No creme, lotion or soap has ever been able to equal their marvelous results. And now scientists have discovered a way to extract and condense these precious milk-oils to make Creme of Milk the first really new face creme offered in modern times.

Creme of Milk, is a complete, all-purpose creme. It cleanses, nourishes and clarifies the skin with amazing speed. Dryness goes almost at once. The penetrating milk-oils make short work of blackheads, clogged pores and other blemishes, leaving the skin soft, smooth, fresh and youthful in appearance. Creme of Milk does more and lasts longer than any creme you know of. Every jar is guaranteed to stay sweet and fresh and it will not grow hair. Try Creme of Milk and you will discover the one beauty creme you have always hoped for. Use the coupon to order a special one-week trial jar for 10 cents or better still, order a full 2-oz jar for 50 cents or the large 5-oz jar for $1.

CREME OF MILK POSITIVELY AND PLEASANTLY PREVENTS SUNBURN

We Can't Sleep!

alarm. She is now well on her way to a sleepless night, ready to try counting sheep, hold conversations with her fingers and toes, instruct her muscles to relax. She may even pretend she is a tree, trying to stretch her roots down into mother earth (a practice highly recommended by some authorities). It is all no use. She lies sleepless.

In the morning she is on the set looking as fresh as a daisy, and feeling like a daisy that has just been plowed under the earth about six inches. No doubt she has rested. Her doctor would tell her that she has been asleep part of the night without knowing it—but he'd better not. For if there is one thing a person who has passed a bad night hates to hear—it's that.

When these periods come on Jeanette MacDonald she puts on her dancing slippers and seeks the Hollywood night spots. "If I can't sleep, I can't sleep," she says. "And lying in bed does absolutely no good. So I always go out and try to have fun."

Which is the most sensible thing she could do, according to the best authorities because insomnia, they say, is largely a mental habit. There is something about not being able to sleep which strikes terror into the average heart. Being afraid of not being able to get to sleep keeps you from getting to sleep. And thus begins the vicious sleep-stealing circle.

Groucho Marx is one of Hollywood's leading insomniacs. The mere mention of the word is enough to keep him awake nights—he dreads it so much. Recently he turned down a large sum of money to appear on the radio—merely because he didn't want to have to stay up nights. But he said he worried so much about it before-hand that he couldn't sleep. Later he stayed awake regretting the money he had lost.

Groucho is an insomnia cure collector. In a hotel he can't sleep above the twelfth floor. He takes epsom salt baths to make himself sleep, and has a special vibrator for his neck. Fortunately there is a bright side. When things get too bad he goes to the theater. He can always sleep, he says, through a good show.

Ted Healy had a specially built room made for him by a specialist who said that light and sound were the two biggest enemies of complete rest. Built of cork, each window had a small ingenious device (which cost a fortune) but which was able to catch even the smallest sound that tried to enter the room and muffle it.

Black drapery concealed doors and windows. The gloss was rubbed off the furniture lest a ray of light be caught and held in the room. Exceedingly scientific tests, said the specialist, had established the fact that light rays were as apt to keep you awake as sound rays.

Then came the testing night when Ted was to have his first perfect night. His friends gathered round for a farewell toast. Then with many loud expressions of good wishes they ushered him into his scientific apartment.

Healy has never revealed what went on in the room that night. But in the morning he did not rise bright and early. It grew very late, and finally a member of his household decided to open the door.

As the sound proof door swung wide, he was greeted by a blast from the radio. At the same time he was almost blinded by the glare from a ceiling light which originally had been installed solely for the benefit of the cleaners.

Ted Healy was sleeping peacefully The light blazed on his classic countenance, and the radio which he must have acquired at some period during the night, was working its way manfully through the Marine band's playing of the Marine Hymn.

In spite of Mr. Healy's big experiment, there is still a movement going on in Hollywood to have rubber bottoms put on ash cans. Early morning milk wagons are already equipped with rubber wheels, and some of them even have low, musical horns that sound like doves, and are calculated to soothe the most jaded Hollywood nerves.

There is a theory that all the sleeplessness is produced by the system of options. Actors, writers, directors are often under contract to work for a certain period at a good salary. At the end of that period the agreement is that they are to have a salary increase—or to get the sack! To a star, to a writer who is living up to every bit of his salary (and there are few of them that are not supporting several other people outside their own families) it is something to lie awake and wonder about—will the option be lifted? Or won't it? Thus half the colony feels itself to be on a transient basis.

OF COURSE there are lots of stars that do not know what it is to lose a night's sleep. Gable, and Crawford—that devotee of exercise, and Harlow and Gary Cooper. Bob Montgomery takes a book to bed with him and reads himself to sleep. And Nelson Eddy is lucky enough to be able to sleep standing up—as he proved on his recent singing tour.

Madeleine Carroll once tried to elope with her insomnia, but she found out it was not a satisfactory process.

"It was in London," said Madeleine, "and I had been playing on the stage, making a picture, and trying to lead a social life with my husband and my friends. After awhile I got out of the habit of sleeping which made me feel rather strange, so—the doctor ordered me to go away somewhere and take a complete rest.

"Now, I could have gone down to my house in Sussex. It would have been the sensible thing to do, but I had a romantic notion of going to a particularly sleepy, quaint, adorable little Inn. So, nothing would do—but there I must go.

"As my car drew into this village I stifled a yawn. Soon I was tucked in bed.

"Suddenly I found myself sitting up in bed. Nearby something was going on that sounded like the shelling of Verdun. I leaped out of bed. Across the street—from the quaintest little church in the world—were coming the most bloodcurdling sounds. Merely the village bells ringing out the hour of nine o'clock. But what bells! My first sleep in months rudely interrupted.

"At ten they came again. And at eleven. By midnight I was ready for them, shouting, 'Ring out wild bells,' as I packed my bags. I knew that I was wilder than the bells could ever hope to be.

"In London, among the accustomed noise and shouting of the city, I fell into a dreamless sleep. I've never suffered since."

The Inside Story of Myrna Loy's Only Real Romance

who spent hours tagging after her? Rumors . . .

Myrna smiled and went serenely on her way. But there came a time when the last necessary dollar had been put in the trust fund she'd established for her mother. She had seen her and the brother off to Paris where he was registered at the famous Ecole des Arts.

IT WASN'T the kind of day when you expect things to happen. A lid-less sun beat down unmercifully on sweltering people crossing Santa Monica boulevard. The road was gummy and soft with the heat. "United Artists would send for me on a day like this!" thought Myrna, parking the old coupe with a disgruntled air.

Slowly she walked into the outer office of the studio. "Mr. Goldwyn, please?"

"That door, miss."

"That door" opened swiftly as she went to it. A man came hurrying into her arms.

"Sorry. Terribly sorry," he apologized as he righted her. "Did I hurt you?"

"Not at all." He's nice, she thought. Not that he was handsome. But he had the unmistakable air of culture and good breeding that distinguishes a man.

Five minutes later Sam Goldwyn was introducing them. "Myrna, do you know Arthur Hornblow?"

Arthur Hornblow, Jr. Son of the famous playwright and producer who was responsible for such standbys of the theater as The Lion and the Mouse and Bought and Paid For. So it was natural for Arthur to have a heritage of the best in American dramatic and literary life. He came to Hollywood in 1926 and in short order he developed into one of the outstanding young producers in the industry.

"Mr. Hornblow," Goldwyn was saying, "is going to be associated with me in this production of Arrowsmith. Now your part, Myrna . . ."

As the days went on she decided she liked it better and better. Her dressing room was perfect (it was exactly on a par with the one she occupied at Warners but she didn't stop to figure that out.) The company was the pleasantest she'd ever worked with—had Ronald Colman always been so fascinating? And certainly Helen Hayes was the most charming woman on earth. She'd never been so happy. She didn't know why . . .

It was the thirty-seventh time Myrna Loy had played the part of the Other Woman—and the first time she'd ever fallen deeply in love. But it took her two years to find out that she had!

She only knew that she was completely dismal when the picture was finished. And completely thrilled when Goldwyn called her back to make Devil To Pay. That her feeling was in any way connected with one Arthur Hornblow, Jr. she had not the vaguest notion.

"He seems to be friends with everybody, that Mr. Hornblow," she remarked to another girl on the set.

"Well, you can't help but like him, he's so decent to everyone . . . Did you see that picture of his wife in yesterday's paper? She's an actress too, Juliette Crosby . . ."

A cold wind blew on Myrna. "No," she said in a small voice, "I didn't see it."

"Oh, they're separated. People say they're going to get a divorce."

The wind suddenly was no longer cold. It must have been a draft.

DURING the months that followed she developed a casual business friendship with Hornblow such as she had with dozens of other men. It wasn't until that morning when Myrna stood, figuratively speaking, at the crossroads of her career that they began to understand the feeling that lay between them.

She had come into his office like a worried child, brushing off her hat with a characteristic gesture. "I don't know what to do, Arthur. I'm at a standstill, right back where I started from. My agent says that every casting director in every studio can't see me even yet as anything but a vampish Oriental. And I'm so tired, tired, TIRED of those rôles! I tell you they haunt me! What do you think I should do—go to New York?"

Myrna, the self-reliant, the capable young career-ist, was actually leaning on a man's strength. And loving it . . .

"No, not New York. You're known here. Better stay and we'll work it out together somehow."

Together. It can be the most important word in the dictionary at times.

To Hollywood at large it was given out that Myrna was away on a vacation. In reality she was home studying the script of Animal Kingdom, and it was Arthur Hornblow who coached her. Very adroitly—theatrical genius that he is—he brought to life the Myrna Loy of today. For it is Hornblow who is chiefly responsible for the glamorous, amusingly clever Myrna, the most sensational screen "discovery" of the last two years . . .

RKO officials when they saw her tests for that picture were a little stunned—

Boris Karloff may be the meanest man in town on the screen, but off-screen he spends most of his time nurturing rare plants for his garden then blazingly enthusiastic. M-G-M, who had her under contract, followed it up immediately by giving her the lead in The Barbarian.

Love can do anything for a woman. It made a star of Myrna Loy . . .

"She's going to marry Ramon Novarro!" chorused the news gatherers. And proceeded to print five million words on their "romance." Hadn't he invited her to dine with his family—something he'd never asked any actress to do? And hadn't she rented his house while he was in Europe? But filmdom never guessed that one of the most frequent visitors there was a certain Mr. Hornblow.

EVEN when they began to go to parties together no special import was given it. And he is the first man she has ever been seen in public with consistently. Hollywood, usually so keen in such matters, didn't lift a single eyebrow when Myrna, bright luminary of M-G-M, ducked over to Paramount for Wings in the Dark. They called it merely a "friendly interchange of stars between the studios!" And no one thought it significant that Mr. Arthur Hornblow, Jr., was the producer of that picture.

He called her aside for script reading just as he did other members of the cast. They sat apart from the others and occasionally his voice would float across the stage—"In this scene, Miss Loy, you'll need to give particular emphasis . . ." And she would nod quietly just as if her heart was not pounding wildly.

Their social life was something else again. You'd see them at those brilliant small parties the Benjamin Glazers give, or at King Vidor's or at any of their other intimates and the thought would come to you startlingly—"Why, they act like Nick and Nora in The Thin Man! The same casualness, that gay sustaining nonsense of theirs . . ."

Hornblow is a head taller than Myrna. In Hollywood if you want to describe an innate gentleman you say, "He's like Arthur Hornblow." The first thing you notice about him is his voice. It has a quiet quality that somehow makes everything he says sound terribly important.

Small wonder that a year ago Myrna took the boat to Europe following his.

He had, you see, telephoned her one fine spring evening and said he was headed for England to submit the adaptation of The Light That Failed to Rudyard Kipling. Gary Cooper is to star in it . . . He wanted to make it one of the most impressive productions on the Paramount schedule . . . Myrna listened, feeling oddly stricken. And at the other end of the 'phone Arthur was wondering how soon he could catch a ship back.

He had been gone three days when Myrna did the most drastic act of her life. She ran away from Hollywood.

In New York they said she was there to discuss her contract with the studio. Back on her home lot Luise Rainer was rushed into the place she left vacant opposite William Powell in Escapade. Actually, Myrna was finding out the full meaning of loneliness.

Hornblow sailed on the Champlain. She sailed on the Paris with a companion-secretary. And one afternoon Mr. Hornblow looked up from his London News to find a young redhead standing in front of him. "Oh, please, sir, it's such a large city—and I think I'm lost!"

They smiled delightedly at each other. "Oh, no, not lost," he assured her. "Not ever lost!"

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief of Pain

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and waste out of the blood. If they don't pass 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing.

If you have trouble with frequent bladder passages, with scanty amount which often smart and burn, the 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes and dizziness.

Don't wait for serious trouble. Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills—used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help flush out the 15 miles of Kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

The Story Behind Fred MacMurray's Elopement!

that, believe this or not—from that day when they first met, neither Fred nor Lilian has gone out with anyone else! In all the parade of beauties he has met on stage or screen, there's never been any girl for Fred but Lilian. And in all the men she's seen, there's never been anyone else for Lilian but Fred.

They were nobodies, then. Just a sax-player and just a chorus girl. Fred took her home, showed her to his mother. With Fred's mother, Lilian clicked just as instantaneously and just as thoroughly as she had with Fred. Mother okehed Fred's girl—and that was that. Since then, Lilian has been almost as much a member of the MacMurray household as though she'd been born into it!

Their romance went on, as young folks' romances do. Fred and Lilian mentioned matrimony, once in a while, talked it out frankly. Fred pointed out that he was just a small-timer, as yet—that he didn't make much money; that he didn't have anything to offer except love.

That, Lilian told him, was all she asked.

But Fred had his own ideas of playing the game fair. "I won't," he told himself, "ask any girl to marry me unless I know I'm set. Unless and until I know I have the certainty of an income and a future that will enable me to give my wife everything I want her to have—everything she wants—a home, comfort, surety and position."

And so, aching with love for this girl, Fred MacMurray was fair enough and strong enough not to ask her to marry him, yet.

Then came that spin of Dame Fate's wheel that landed Fred in Hollywood. It was Fred's number—and the pay-off was great. That's an old story now—and I won't bore you here with a repetition of the story of Fred's skyrocketing ride to film fame.

He went to Hollywood.

Lilian followed him. She quit the New York stage, went to Hollywood, found herself a job as dress model!—to be near Fred. In Greer's swanky gown shop on Sunset boulevard, she paraded before the stars opposite whom Fred was playing. She, a voiceless, mannikin, had to strut like an impersonal automaton before the very beauties to whom Fred was making love before the cameras of Hollywood.

I often wonder what thoughts must have passed through Lilian's mind, those hours. Lilian is no fool, no empty-headed doll. Lilian has brains! All those who know her tell you that. Lilian knew what sudden film fame meant—she knew how easy it'd be for a man to go Hollywood, in all the term implies. She'd read tales of the broken romances that crumbled in the wake of other careers.

But no matter what she thought, Lilian had faith in Fred MacMurray. And that faith was well placed. Fred didn't go Hollywood. And all his spare time, he spent with Lilian.

The story of their love-life in Hollywood isn't a glittery, glamorous, brightlighty and jazzy tale. Fred and Lilian don't go to the nightclubs making whoopee; they didn't play around in the flashy set of Filmland. Instead, when the day's work at the studio and at the coutourier's was done, Fred and Lilian jumped into that old ramshackle car of Fred's, and took a ride, somewhere. Likely as not, Mother MacMurray was along.

It was a homey sort of love story—as homey and as simple and as unostentatious as Fred himself. Now and then, Fred and Lilian would sneak a surprise over on mother—why, I remember the holiday, not long ago when Fred sent his mother over to a friend's for a visit—and then he and Lilian, like a couple of small town kids in love, bought a turkey and trimmings, and went home. And in the kitchen, they put on aprons, like two children playing house—and they cooked the turkey and the trimmings—and had it steaming on the table to surprise mother, when she got home. That sort of fun. . . . !

Their friends were simple, obscure folk. Their best friends were—and still are—Mr. and Mrs. Dean Jagger. Dean is another lad, like Fred, trying to crash pictures. Lady Luck hasn't pulled his number out of the bag yet; Dean's glad to get bit parts and even extra work. They have a little simple home up in Laurel Canyon, miles from ritzy star-studded Beverly Hills. But the Jaggers' shack is where Fred and Lilian liked to visit. They'd go there often, for Sunday morning breakfasts. The names of those who were there never appear in magazines; they're still Hollywood nobodies. But they were Fred's and Lilian's friends.

No mushy-mushy, moony-moony stuff for Fred and Lilian, either. They weren't the out-under-the-moon, sighing-their-heads-off, hand-holding, kind of lovers. Here were two kids who were pals as well as lovers. Fred'd watch Lilian, and listen to her—and get a kick out of her. He'd tease her oftener than he'd kiss her. But it was the sort of teasing that you know is built on a firm foundation of respect, admiration, love and above all, a warm, rich, great friendship.

Now and then, of course, Fred had to talk about Lilian. Usually, when interviews were arranged for Fred, as he skyrocketed toward higher film triumphs, the studio press department hinted and suggested to the interviewers that they not ask Fred about romance or love or his own love or things like that. Sometimes, to some interviewers, they said that Fred didn't like to talk about such things. To others, they admitted, more frankly, that it wouldn't do Fred any good to publish the story of how he loved and stayed in love, despite all fame, with that little obscure dress-model from Greer's.

But Fred didn't object to talking about her at all. He loved her and he was proud of her. One day, at lunch, he told me about her—months before they married.

"We're not officially engaged," he grinned. "But hell, you can pretty well guess that we'll be married sooner or later, can't you? Of course. But not until I'm ready—I'm not sure yet that this isn't all a flash in the pan for me. When I'm sure, then—well, you know. . . ."

It was like that with Fred. There never was any other girl in his mind; there never was any idea in his mind of not marrying Lilian, when he was ready. It was just part of the idea to Fred—and in everything he ever said about Lilian, that shone through.

And that's why when they did marry, it happened as it did. With all the appearance of a casual, offhand, shoulder-shrug, maybe. It was like this—

Fred had been away on location with the "Texas Rangers" for about a month—a long, long month, away from Lilian. In that time, he learned most deeply how he missed her when she wasn't near him. And, too, in the long, desert weeks he had time to think it all out. He realized, suddenly, that his income and his future were, at last, assured. He realized those two things—first, how much he loved and wanted Lilian for his wife, and, second, that now at last he was ready to ask her to be his wife. . . .

They went back from location, and one morning, Fred came to the lot, and was greeted with:

"Beat it—we're through with the picture—that was the last 'take' last night. Go take a vacation."

It was sudden. Fred hadn't expected a vacation. For just a moment, he was bewildered. Then his face beamed. He leaped into his car, and drove like a bat out of hell around to a little apartment on DeLongpre avenue, not far from the studio, where Lilian lived. He pushed the bell, hoping Lilian was home. She was—the buzzer hummed, and Fred bounded in.

"What," Lilian asked, "are you doing here? Been fired or something?"

"Nope. Gotta vacation," yelled Fred. "Let's get married . . . !"

Like that! Casual? Maybe it seems so—but it was Fred's way of doing things. For three years, Lilian had waited for this moment, had dreamed of it. Now it was here—and Fred pulled it off like he'd order a glass of beer. But Lilian knew her Fred; she knew that behind that MacMurray casualness, there was a strength and a depth and a sincerity and a faith that withstood three years of every kind of buffeting and above all, Hollywood. She knew that this casual proposal was the most uncasual proposal Hollywood had ever heard.

"Oh, okay," she said, just an nonchalantly. I don't believe they even kissed. Fred didn't have time. He was too busy at the phone, arranging for airplanes and things. You see, Nevada is only an hour's flight—and in Nevada, you don't have to wait three days between filing your application for a license, and marrying, as you do in California.

A half hour later, Fred and Lilian and Fred's mother were in the plane. Another hour, and they were saying their "I-do's" in Las Vegas. Still another hour, and they were back in Hollywood.

Fred called the studio.

"Say," he asked, "are you sure I have a vacation?—sure you don't want me for retakes or something?"

"Hell, yes; we're sure," they told him. "What are you so jittery about?"

"Well—aw—uh—you see, I just kind of got married, and if you won't want me, I figured we might like to have a sort of honeymoon. . . ."

That's Fred MacMurray for you.

Of course, they told him to take his honeymoon. They hadn't wanted him to marry, but what could they do about it now? So Fred bought a couple of tickets to Honolulu, and that's where they are, on the Hawaii boat, in mid-Pacific now.

At the studio, they're wondering whether Fred's marriage to the obscure little dress-model will smash his promising screen career.

But on that honeymoon boat, Fred doesn't give a damn.

Fred's got the wife he wanted, and that's all that matters.

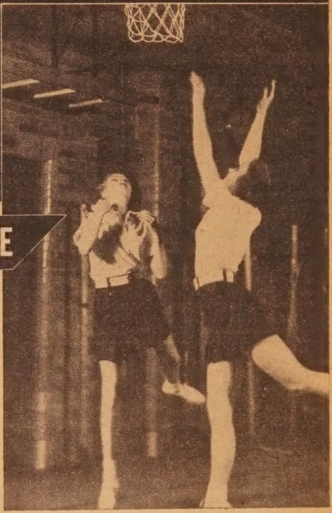
Attaboy, Fred!

Women ask me:

"WHAT DOES KOTEX OFFER THAT OTHERS DON'T?"

The answer is: These exclusive Kotex features that Can't Chafe . . . Can't Fail . . . Can't Show!

Mary Pauline Callender
Authority on Feminine Hygiene



KOTEX CAN'T CHAFE

The sides of Kotex are cushioned in a special, soft, downy cotton to prevent chafing and irritation. Thus Wondersoft Kotex provides lasting comfort and freedom. But sides only are cushioned—the center surface is free to absorb.

KOTEX CAN'T FAIL

Kotex has a special "Equalizer" center whose channels guide moisture evenly the whole length of the pad. Gives "body" but not bulk—prevents twisting and roping. The filler of Kotex is actually 5 TIMES more absorbent than cotton.

KOTEX CAN'T SHOW

The rounded ends of Kotex are flattened and tapered to provide absolute invisibility. Even the sheerest dress, the closest-fitting gown, reveals no telltale wrinkles.

3 TYPES OF KOTEX
ALL AT SAME LOW PRICE

1. REGULAR—IN THE BLUE BOX—For the ordinary needs of most women.
2. JUNIOR—IN THE GREEN BOX—Somewhat narrower—when less protection is needed.
3. SUPER—IN THE BROWN BOX—Extra layers give extra protection, yet it is no longer or wider than Regular.

my father's tutelage when I was seven years old. Dancing was a part of that training, both tap and ballet, and I still dance every day, because it is fun and because it is, by now, a part of me. I have studied with both Ernest Belcher and Le Roy Prinz since coming to Hollywood.

"Dancing has a tendency to create heavy muscles in the calf and ankles and that is why so many professional dancers have knotty legs. To keep my legs and feet smooth and supple, I constantly flex my toes and ankles like this. . . ." She thrust a slim foot over the edge of the lounge and wriggled her sandals up and down over her toes.

"It is, however, only the consistent, regular exercise that keeps the figure in line. These calisthenics I do every day—without bending my knees I touch the palms of my hands to the floor, fifty times to the front, fifty to the right and fifty to the left. Then I bend backwards from the waist as far as I can the same number of times.

"An exercise for reducing the hips and waistline taught me by Jim Davies, Paramount masseur, is to sit on a bench with the legs extended straight out from the waist. Have someone hold the ankles firmly. Then slowly let the upper half of the body fall backwards until the head touches the floor. Then slowly raise the body to a sitting position.

"Another exercise which is excellent for muscle development and weight reduction is a homemade tug-o-war. Sit on the floor with the legs stretched ahead, facing your opponent who is in the same position. Brace your feet against a book and grasp a two-foot cord between you. First your opponent falls to the floor backwards, tugging you forward. Then you tug backward, drawing your opponent to a sitting position as you let yourself backward to the floor.

"The best of figures," Miss Lupino continued, "can be ruined by incorrect posture. One should always remember to keep the small of the back arched inward, the shoulders back, and the chest held high as if attached by an invisible string to the ceiling.

"The walk more than any other habitual action characterizes an individual. That is why an actress will change her walk to suit the rôle she is interpreting. If she walks across the stage with a slouch, hand on hip, and flops into a chair, the audience immediately recognizes the character as a trollop.

"One should strive for a graceful, rhythmic walk by standing erect and placing one foot directly in front of the other in a straight line. The walk should be natural, without exaggeration, as small mincing steps and long gawky strides are equally unflattering. Above all, don't slump!

"Another important point to remember in walking," she went on, "is not to let the knees sag. Wobbly knees are disastrous to good posture. If the back muscles have been trained to play their rightful rôle of keeping the body erect, don't let protruding, half-bent knees betray you into the general collapse of everything that stands for vim and beauty. Keep the knees back in their sockets where they belong—don't let them rob your walk of all grace."

Miss Lupino stood up then, interested in illustrating her next point. Although small in stature, her pose was dignity and charm incarnate. "When one stands still for any length of time, rest the weight on the right foot. This gives a graceful line to the thigh and to one's gown, particularly if the gown is floor length. To stand rigid with the feet planted firmly together gives a stolid look.

"Sitting down with ease and some semblance of grace should be the easiest thing in the world, yet so many girls do it badly. If you are standing beside a chair, place your hand on the back of it as you walk around to sit down, measuring it with your hand. If you back up to a chair, measure the height of the chair seat with the calf of the leg. Flex your knees accordingly and sit down—don't drop.

"Personally, I never, never sit with my knees crossed. It pushes the calf out of proportion and thickens the line of the ankle. Sit with one foot slightly in front of the other, the soles of the feet squarely on the floor.

"Nor do many girls seem to know what to do with their hands or how to carry them. For the girl who is hand conscious I would suggest wearing a ring on the left hand which she can touch or hold between the thumb and middle finger of her right hand. I don't mean to twist and play with the ring, but it does bring the hands together naturally and gracefully and has the effect of giving them something to do."

I asked Miss Lupino then about her beauty routine—those habits of care which must always complement even the most perfect figure.

"I follow any kind of exercise with a cold shower," she said. "And then I enjoy a fragrant dusting powder as a finishing fillip.

"Equally important to the care of the figure is the care of the skin and hair. I use the same brand white soap for my face that I do for my bath. After washing my face, I go over it again with a pad of cotton saturated with a mild astringent before applying make-up.

"An actress has very little time to appear in street make-up. Therefore cosmetics to me mean either screen make-up or evening make-up. And here's my favorite eye make-up trick for evening. I spread a small amount of grey eyeshadow evenly over my lids from the base of the lashes to the top of the eyeball. Over this I smooth a drop of oil which gives a luminous look to the lids that is particularly flattering under artificial light."

The bungalow telephone rang peremtorily. Miss Lupino was wanted on the set . . . Nino Martini was waiting to sing her a love song. And what girl wouldn't hurry away under those circumstances!

Fitch's Dandruff Remover Shampoo and Ideal Hair Tonic will keep hair lovely, scalp healthy your favorite perfume. On sale wherever soap is sold.

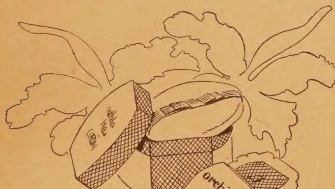
THE HAIR—Before there is any discussion of sculpture curls or hair ornaments, every girl should make sure that her scalp is clean and healthy and that her hair is in the best of condition. 'Tis said that the hair picks up and holds more dirt in an hour than the entire body does in a day. This calls for a constant cycle of brushing and shampooing. If you are a victim of that hoodoo dandruff, then you will find Fitch's Dandruff Remover Shampoo especially beneficial in keeping your scalp immaculate. It is applied to the dry hair and then massaged with a small amount of water into a veritable ocean of lather, which you remove by the handsful. After rinsing with clear water, your scalp tingles with renewed life and the hair is glossy and tractable. Under normal conditions the hair should be shampooed once a week, but if you work or live in a dirt-laden atmosphere, twice a week is not too often.



Corday's lovely Orchidee Bleue scents face powder and bath powder, for the girl who likes perfume harmony

PERFUME AND POWDER—Subtle fragrance is an integral part of feminine charm, and the ensemble in perfume and powder marks the truly fastidious woman. Exciting news to the users of Corday's Orchidee Bleue perfume is the announcement that this famous French perfumer now manufactures a powder scented with this delightful bouquet odor. The face powder is gossamer fine and comes in five exquisite shades, selected to blend with every type skin. A smart and useful addition to each box is the genuine lamb's wool puff which fits snugly into the top, preventing the powder from spilling and the puff from becoming overladen.

Completing the Orchidee Bleue ensemble is a bath powder of velvety texture. This, too, has its own puff—large and fluffy with a ribbon pleated strap through which to slip the hand. You will find these powders so expertly perfumed that even after months of use, the last grains in the box are as fragrant as the first.

If you would like the name of a product to fill a particular beauty need, write Janet Lynn in care of SCREEN BOOK, 1501 Broadway, New York City. Kindly enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

Shy—Like a Lion!

Hecht-MacArthur film (Stander's first) The Scoundrel. His most recent release is the Edward Arnold-Columbia released film Meet Nero Wolfe. It will be followed by There Goes the Bride.

With idle curiosity Stander asks about other film personalities. But it's all very casual. He's really not very much interested in them. He refers to Jean Harlow and Clark Gable not as persons but as names symbolizing Sex Appeal and Glamour in The Films. Motion Pictures, he thinks, have by no means attained their full stature. They could be made much more important. The Cinderella story that Hollywood tells and retells is just so much four-lettered-word.

Frank Capra, thinks Stander, is a genius. He directed Mr. Deeds. The piquant flavor of Capra's films, such as the Award-winning It Happened One Night, comes from Writer Robert Riskin's adroit handling of the hackneyed Cinderella theme, plus Capra's technique of slam-bang realism. It's a sure-fire combination. Academy-Award Director John Ford, Stander says, is also a man of genius. Ford does the frothy stuff well, but can also do stuff with guts, like the dramatic Informer (the best film Stander has ever seen) which won Star Victor McLaglen and Director Ford honors. But Ford, says Stander, is ably assisted by a "class-conscious" writer, Dudley Nichols. Take it or leave it, it's great to hear Stander analyze. He flavors his speech with strange words like "wacki." "Wacki" means "not so good."

"Hawaiian?" we ventured.

"Yes, I believe it does come from the Islands," says this two-legged encyclopedia. Yet, you don't want to wring his neck because he's so smart. "Films," he continues, "are the synthesis of all the arts." He squints his green left eye, looks sharply through his brown right eye. Nature gave Belle Cantor's son eyes of two colors. ". . . writing, acting, music, painting. The theatre has always reflected life. In medieval times the feudal baron was always the hero. As the system changed, the baron became a villain . . . et cetera."

If a crap game, early in life, gave Stander his biggest dramatic moment (see opening paragraph), crap shooting has dominated his life. Even his speech, today, is vividly embroidered by the single-syllabled word. At nineteen, he got his first stage part because he rolled the "bones" with great natural talent. Interested in the theatre, Stander stayed to appear on the New York stage in Him, House Beautiful, Red Rust, The Bride of Torozko (Jean Arthur seen with Stander in films Mr. Deeds, If You Could Only Cook, was in this stage play, too), Final Balance, Reunion, plus twenty-six flops!

Poppa Stander (Louis E., a Certified Public Accountant) hoped that Lionel Jay would follow him into the debit-credit business. Brother Alvin is a medical student (like Momma Belle Cantor Stander before her marriage); Sister Frances is an advertising copy writer. But no. Lionel was adamant. He didn't want to chase figures—on paper. Stander would have been the son of a War profiteer if the Armistice hadn't come along when it did in 1918.

Poppa Stander, you see, in addition to being a CPA, was also a civic government official (New York School Board, etc.), and, further, he was a manufacturer of khaki puttees. He outfitted the First American Expeditionary Force, and, like a good business man, put his half-million profit back into puttees, figuring that the Second Expeditionary Force would have to have its legs covered, and he would make about eight million dollars covering them. You know what happened on the 11th of November, 1918. Away went the Standers' fondest dreams of wealth. Also their profits.

THIS was not the permanent blight on Lionel's life that you might imagine. He is so catholic (with a small "c") in his interests . . . also as regards women, he tells us . . . that he can't be bothered about thinking of what might have been. He's too busy thinking of what will be, and is.

When he is not working in a film, Stander spends the night and half the early morning reading in his cromium-and-black den (that is, if he is not studying feminine psychology with a fair companion at a theatre, or somewhere), sleeps until noon, wanders about his acre estate (he bought it eight months ago), and spends the rest of the day and night in conversation. He's a great talker, need we say? He'd rather talk with directors, writers, producers, than actors.

Stander gets his political news from two of the world's greatest newspapers: England's Manchester Guardian, New York's Times. He reads the local editorials for his laughs. Never looks at the sports section; the "funnies." Likes to read between the lines of important dateline items concerning political maneuvers. The kind of drama he likes is not the synthetic stuff that he enacts, but the kind that is seething beneath newspaper headlines. He scoots up to San Francisco, during vacation, and hob-nobs with political reporters and editors. Talks "shop" with them. He has no desire to write his memoirs. They'd be good reading, if he did. "What do I want to 'louse' up clean paper for?" he asks, grinning like a satyr.

Stander, of German-Russian descent, prefers women from "fifteen to forty," changed it to "fifty," upon seeing our disappointed look. He also likes them to be "dignified." To him, Jean Arthur has "dignity." He has been six feet in height since he was sixteen (or was it fourteen?), now weighs 160 pounds, played football for four college years, has no university sheepskin to prove it, doesn't care much about that, indulges in few active sports, and says, with a roar, that "Jackie," a trained film lion, is his favorite male screen actor.

His favorite screen actress is, laugh this one off, Lynn Fontanne. But she has only made one film, we reminded him. "I know it," he answered with a grin. If he had been born in Iowa, with that mammoth voice, those lungs, Stander would probably have been State Champion Hog Caller.

HE HAS no suppressed desires. They are all vigorously expressed. Vigor, as a matter of record, is his outstanding personal trait.

Our Hollywood Frivolities!

about thirty-three, cousins, aunts, uncles, brothers and sisters)—which would in itself make quite a pool full.

Fridays haven't been spoken for; so I wager that is Grace Durkin day, 'cause Dick is awfully crazy about Grace right now.

Grace and Dick have been exchanging these ardent looks since January! . . .

PATRICIA ELLIS and Paula Stone have really gone "monopoly" minded in a big way. If you have played this game Monopoly (as you undoubtedly have), you realize how it really gets you real estate minded. The topper last week, though, was Paula wiring birthday congratulations to a friend saying: "We can let you have a happy birthday and 'park place' for two hundred dollars. Love—Paula."

The fellow took the happy birthday and the love, but left "park place" to the Indians and Patricia.

Mary Rogers (daughter of Will) really created the latest thing in party transportation last Saturday when she hired a beautiful, two-room trailer, hitched it to the back of her big car and drove from house to house picking up her fourteen guests and taking them the twenty-mile drive to the Annual Spinsters' Ball at the Midwick Country Club.

The trailer is furnished beautifully and contains a radio, a bar, and all the comforts of a small sitting room. In fact, Mary even proved its practicability by doing a bit of ballroom dancing en route with Kelly Anthony, son of Earl C. Anthony, wealthy Los Angeles financier.

Incidentally, if Mary Rogers ever accepts any of those movie offers she has had, you will get to see a really gorgeous looking girl—and one with plenty of talent for star material. At this moment, however, she is off for Ogunquit, Maine, where she will delve into another summer of stage work in stock to garner a bit more experience before tackling motion pictures. To date, Mary has had featured rôles in nineteen stage plays.

SAY, this new fellow, James Stewart, is certainly beating everybody's time around Hollywood with the young movie queens. At a recent social gathering, six different prominent young screen ingénues came up and said, "Henry, do me a favor—" and after the fourth one, I had the answer. The favor was each time, "—introduce me to James Stewart."

But one beautiful and famous little redhead inadvertently illustrated "how to get your man" in one easy lesson. She did not ask to meet him, but he did meet her; which resulted in a luncheon date at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer commissary the very next day.

TOM BROWN, who receives more fan mail than almost any other young player on the screen, has really set up an enviable system of taking care of the fans' requests.

Each letter is opened and read by Tom, and the name and address of the sender is recorded on a special ledger book. If the envelope requesting a photograph contains a quarter, the fan receives an 8x10 of Tom, personally autographed: "To Mary, Best Wishes—Tom Brown."

If the envelope contains no money, you still get a picture, but it is a 5x7 saying just: "Sincerely, Tom Brown." However, if you are a member of a Tom Brown Fan Club and do not even send a quarter, you are specially taken care of with a "To Mary, Best Wishes—Tom Brown." signature.

Now and then, a request for a picture accompanied by a dollar rolls in, and the author of this epistle receives an 11x14 portrait with a few extra words thrown in.

"—And for five bucks," kidded Ida Lupino, "maybe you'd get Tom Brown in person."

But all kidding aside, Tom spends more money, more time and effort in taking care of his fan friends than any other young fellow I know on the screen.

I think he is rewarded by the thousands of loyal followers that are his both in this country and throughout Europe.

Incidentally, I forgot to mention—if you just send a postcard, you don't get a picture; so conduct your requests accordingly.

WE ALL agree that Major Bowes really started something with his amateurs and discovering new talent for stage and screen via the radio. He has combed the country, all the little towns and hamlets, for talent—but we give the medal of the month to Ben Alexander, Hollywood's twenty-five-year-old majordomo. Ben Alexander thought up the idea of discovering talent in Hollywood. It seems no one ever thought much about there being talent right here waiting to be discovered—so with the backing of the Kellog Company, Ben Alexander is presented once a week over the air with his talent parade—featuring coming young stars, dancers and dramatic players of great merit. The auditions are held each Friday and the local young people have their chance to try out for a spot on the program. Studio executives are paying particular attention in backing up the embryos unearthed by Major Alexander.

Dick Powell: You have me here. I like 'em even-tempered but unpredictable.

Henry Fonda: Moods in a girl are stimulating—if she isn't the moody type. I'd hate to know always what she was going to do next.

Randolph Scott: I'd rather have her even-tempered so long as she wasn't stolid. I'd be a mindreader if I could tell what any girl is going to do next!

Francis Lederer: Moods and the unpredictable—make a woman most fascinating.

What Do You Notice First In A Girl?

Bob Taylor: Her voice. If it's low and a bit husky she certainly registers with me.

Gene Raymond: The hair and eyes, I think. If her hair is neat and becoming, you know she's fastidious and has taste. And the eyes speak for themselves.

Dick Powell: Gosh! . . . How can I tell?

Henry Fonda: If she looks like a good sport.

Randolph Scott: I don't. Notice anything first, I mean. She's one continuous picture to me.

Francis Lederer: Appearances are sometimes deceiving. But her laughter tells much. That's what I notice first.

Do You Prefer a Girl Who Enjoys Small Gatherings and Twosome Company or One Who Likes Gay Night Club Life?

Bob Taylor: I'll take the one who enjoys small gatherings.

Gene Raymond: The girl who likes to dine in some small, unique place and go on to a good show later—a deux— is my choice.

Dick Powell: I like night club life myself—in twosome company!

Henry Fonda: Jim Stewart and I only own half a dress suit between us. She has to like small gatherings!

Randolph Scott: What's the fun of being together if you're going to get lost in a crowd?

Francis Lederer: I hope she'd think that dinner for two would be much more interesting than dinner for twelve.

Which Appeals to You Most—the Woman-of-the-World or the Ingenue?

Bob Taylor: A man doesn't like a girl to know all the answers. And fluttery young things . . . Well, I'm kind of like Bolo—I like them "a little of one and a little of t'other' and a lot of poise in between.

Gene Raymond: What do you mean by "ingenue?" If you mean a girl with fresh ideals, the answer is Yes!

Dick Powell: Ingenue preferred. Because no ingenue simpers these days; she's too busy being a Woman-of-the-World!

Henry Fonda: Neither.

Randolph Scott: The ingenue—if she isn't a clinging vine as well.

Francis Lederer: It depends on one's frame of mind.

Have You Any Preferences (a) About Her Complexion, (b) Her Height, (c) Her Personality?

Bob Taylor: I like brunettes (as a rule) and I like them small (not over 5 feet, 6 inches). A little sophisticated and definitely not the gushing type.

Gene Raymond: (a) No. (b) No. (c) If she has charm, what does it matter whether she's cute or stately, outspoken or mysterious?

Dick Powell: If they're brunettes I think they're marvelous; blondes I think are grand; redheads simply wonderful. I think tall ones are spiffy and short ones are swell. But I'd rather have them sweet and peppy, when it comes to personality.

Henry Fonda: (a) Well, so far it's been brunettes. (b) Medium size. (c) It doesn't matter if she's the companionable sort.

Randolph Scott: "No" to the first two. As to personality, I'd like to have her typically modern but a home lover too.

Francis Lederer: (a) Certainly not. (b) Ditto. (c) Yes, I prefer the girl who is not afraid to be very feminine and gentle.

Do You Like the Popular Girl Type—the One Whose Telephone Is Always Ringing and Whom The Stag Line Favors—or The Girl Who Is Choosy?

Bob Taylor: The girl who is choosy—providing I'm the choice!

Gene Raymond: I haven't a lot of patience with busy lines. If the girl is attractive to me, the stag line's opinion doesn't count. I'd much rather she'd be particular.

Dick Powell: A little competition stimulates business. Too much competition ruins it . . . I'd say every girl ought to have a business training!

Henry Fonda: Party girls are not in my line. I like the choosy ones.

Randolph Scott: It makes a fellow feel much better if he's her selection instead of one of the mob.

Francis Lederer: Popular girls usually are popular because they make each man think he is the chosen one. I'd rather have a woman honest—and particular.

Up the Ladder With Marjorie!

on the set—to see another girl wearing her costume. She was, then, out of the picture. Mentally, she was packing her bags, contemplating a long, sad journey home—a failure!

But Max Arnow, Warner's astute casting director, told her she need only rest a few days and she'd have a chance at something else. Polo Joe, a film starring Joe E. Brown, was that chance—and while working in the attractive riding clothes she had worn so often while riding in Kentucky state fairs on her own five-gaited horse, she attracted the attention of Drew Eberson, who asked to have her in the company of Loud Speaker Lowdown, which features Glenda Farrell and Ross Alexander. So she found herself spending alternate days on these two pictures, and happy again.

Watch for her in God's Country and the Woman, a gorgeous all-color picture which is now filming. You can write to Marjorie at Warner Bros. Studio, Burbank, Calif. Watch her progress—you may one day have her chance, for SCREEN BOOK is interested in helping talented young men and women to screen fame. A future contest may be your chance!

Tired of Being a Baby Face!

no more think of putting up with the foolishness they do than fly. They're so darned sappy, I lose all patience with them. I must appear awfully stupid to the people who've had to look at me on the screen as an insipid ingenue all these years!

"In the first place, I didn't come into this business on a load of peaches," Joan went on, getting more and more upset at her favorite peeve. "I've been on my own since I was eighteen. No one has ever accused me of lacking spirit or of not fighting my own battles in my private life, but to look at me on the screen, you'd think I'd never had a thought of my own!"

"Just recently, I was up for the part of a young mother with a three-year-old daughter. They told me I didn't look old enough to be a mother. And me with two daughters of my own! It's too silly.

"I'm not trying to change my type," she said seriously. "But I'm determined to make myself look like I feel—a grown-up woman.

"First, I decided to darken my hair and change my hairline to form a widow's peak, thereby lengthening the lines of my face. Then I altered the line of my eyebrows so they would curve upward, which gave me a more sophisticated look. Shadows were effected with makeup in the middle of my cheeks to take away their natural roundness and white make-up placed on my cheekbones made them appear more prominent. My mouth, which is naturally small and pouty, was widened. It really is amazing how you can change your facial personality on the screen with the aid of a good makeup artist. I want to look something like what I really am—a woman—not an ingenue."

Joan's home, itself, reflects the personality of a woman of culture, intelligence and the ability to appreciate good things. Each article of furniture, each old silver bowl, seems to have its own important part in her living room. An air of old-world charm mingles with a definitely modern trend.

In her library are many books on French history—Joan's favorite literature. There is nothing more fascinating to her, she admits, than the study of the lives of the great ladies of France, Marie Antoinette and Pompadour in particular. And surely there was never a more sophisticated era than existed then.

No one loves a gay evening of dancing at the Trocadero more than Joan does.

No one can think of the absurd jokes to play on people, including husband Gene Markey, that she can. And when it comes to giving a party, well, I defy you to think of anyone who could cook up an idea like having all the guests bring passports to be admitted—and real, honest-to-goodness passports, at that, taken especially for the occasion.

And I also doubt whether you could think, just off-hand, of anyone who had planned an elaborate farewell party, such as this was, only to find that the husband for whom it was intended had changed his mind at the last moment and decided not to go. And, what's more, who but Joan would have had the ingenuity to go through with it, farewell place cards and all, and then change the entire note of the party to a "welcome home" affair, indicated by a large horseshoe hung over the door with those words written in the middle! Which is what Joan did, in her usual quick-witted and ready-for-any-emergency manner.

THERE was a time, not so long ago, when Gene greeted Joan one morning in a somewhat frigid manner. He was provoked at something she had done and she knew perfectly well just what it was. Joan ignored his attitude outwardly, and then sent the maid down to the nearest ice-distributing plant to purchase a cake of ice, wrap it in pink tissue and ribbons and present it to that husband when he came home at night! Needless to say, it broke the ice and they both burst out laughing.

That's one of the most important rules in Joan's "how to stay happy though married" scheme—a sense of humor. No marriage, she feels, no matter how otherwise compatible, can survive without it. From the very first time they met, Joan and Gene have been able to laugh together, not only at the most ridiculous things, but often at some situation that might have become serious, thereby avoiding most of the pitfalls that invariably present themselves to even the most ideally mated young married couple.

And beneath all her worldliness and her knowledge of the right thing to do at the right moment, there's another and more important phase of Joan Bennett. That is her love and appreciation of her home and family.

The entire Markey menage looks forward with anticipation to Sunday mornings. It is at that time, when they're all together, that these two busy people really have a chance to enjoy their home and the two youngsters. Breakfast, of a Sunday morning, is an affair of much hilarity. Melinda, aged two, is bound to pop up (with her already-noticeable flair for humor) with some witticism that will send the rest of the family into gales of laughter.

This is Joan's first trip without her family—the only time she will have for many months to take her vacation. And there's been a little pang, during all the excitement of shopping, packing and making the rounds of farewell parties, every time Joan has visualized her loved ones on Sunday mornings while she's away. So she's written little notes to each one which they will receive each Saturday she's gone, to be opened during breakfast on Sunday mornings.

And while she's enjoying her much-deserved rest in England, France and Sweden, where she plans to go, in her usual methodical manner, she's left behind long lists of instructions so that her household will run along smoothly and in its usual well-ordered, well-planned manner.

And she's hoping, too, that when she returns to resume her screen career producers will have waked up to the fact that she's through being an ingenue and will let her show herself to motion picture audiences as she really is—a charming, modern, sophisticated young woman—who's outgrown her title of "the baby of the Bennett family."

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c at all drug stores. © 1935, C. M. Co.

Pip, Pip, Old Thing—Here Comes, Treacher!

when he was given his first butler rôle, three years ago. Because it was sheer disgust, boredom and annoyance that made him what he is today. He told me all about it—

"I'd been a leading man in many plays here and abroad," he said, "and came to Hollywood rather expecting to be the same. I got my chance, and was told to report to the studio in full dress and topper. I did, and the first scene they gave me was to walk down stairs with my topper on my head and Nola Luxford on my arm, conversing with her. I was to be her handsome young English admirer.

"Well, we came down the stairs. We came down the stairs all day long. But every time they got the microphone near enough to register Nola's voice in sound and my face in celluloid, the mike showed in the scene; and every time they kept the mike out of the scene, you couldn't hear what Nola said. Finally they told me I was tall—fawncy that! As though I didn't know it . . .! And told me to come back next day.

"I did, and they told me they had a comedy bit for me instead. I was to be a butler. They gave me the script—two lines. I read it, and was stricken. I waved the script at the director.

"'I say,' I said, 'where's the comedy bit?'

"'That's it in your hand,' he said.

"'Is this supposed to be funny?'

"'Well, if you don't think it is, just give us a comic look; that'll do,' he said.

"Well, I was so utterly disgusted and annoyed, and by the time they shot the scene, I was so bored, too, that I didn't care whether I got the job or not, so I did my buttling in the worst possible fashion. I was rude, and I took no pains to conceal my feelings—and I expected to be kicked out of the studio. Instead, they told me it was screamingly funny, and raised my salary! And I've been that way ever since!

"Just once I tried to better myself. I was called for a butler rôle, and I learned something about butlers, and parted my hair in the middle and came prepared to really buttle properly. The director screamed at me: 'Stop it! STOP it! If you can't buttle the way you buttled in the other picture, you're fired!' I've never tried to really buttle since."

He's buttled through twelve successive movies, now. And Jeeves will be his thirteenth buttling rôle—and his biggest. Treacher shouldn't be superstitious, for this is one 13 that means all the good luck in the world, for the rôle of Jeeves has been bitterly fought for by Hollywood actors, as one of the character plums of the century.

But even so, Treacher is worried about it.

"Have you ever read Jeeves?" he asks, his face screwed up into that utterly ludicrous mask you've seen on the screen.

You assure him you have. He says:

"But I cahn't be that Jeeves at all, you know!" (You have to say this in the very most English fashion, to get the full effect of it as Treacher says it.) "Wodehouse's

The dog, a blue-blooded Dobermann-pinscher, is as German as Der Wacht Am Rhine, and George Brent is as Irish as the Blarney Stone—but they're master and slave, and inseparable pals. By the way, George and Kay Francis are co-starring again famous Jeeves is a pudgy sort of fellow, you know—shortish, and with a bit of—ah—embonpoint, eh? Well, now, I positively can't be that sort of thing!"

You consider his 6 feet four, and his hard slimness and you agree and ask him "so what?"

"So," he says simply, "I shahn't be Jeeves at all; Jeeves shall be Treacher, you see!"

Maybe you're wondering why I keep calling Arthur Veary Treacher "Pip." Well, it's like this—

You see, explains Pip himself, "my father's name was Arthur, so they couldn't call me Arthur, too, because it would create—ah—confusion in the family circles and all that. And they couldn't call me by my middle name, Veary. Good heavens! — one can't call anybody Veary, can one? So they had to call me something. Well, my father had an excellent friend named Percy, so they decided to call me Pip, you see."

PIP was born in Brighton, Sussex, England, a number of years ago. He won't say how many, but it doesn't really matter. His ancestors were barristers and brewers. His father wanted him to be still another Treacher barrister, and set him to studying law. But Pip periodically ran away from law study to join theatrical troupes. That went on, with Pip becoming neither a good lawyer nor a good actor, until the war. Of course, he joined up, and when the fuss was over, he was an artillery captain. After the war, when he failed to pass bar examinations, he said to hell with the law, he was going to be an actor. His father and mother swooned, and before they recovered, Pip had gone.

No use wading through the story of Treacher's career. First with little companies, then bigger ones, he made good. Believe it or not, behind that face and that nose there dwelt a voice, and he was a singing leading man for a while. Reckless Reggie is one of his most famous numbers. Pip knows some verses that he couldn't sing from the stage, but which prove Reggie's recklessness quite quaintly.

Pip came to Hollywood in 1933, fired with the determination that he could be another Valentino or Colman or Gable or something like that.

"And look at me now—a butler."

The man's happy, though. He says so frankly. He's quite glad, thinking it over, that he hasn't become a handsome hero. They don't last as long as character men, he tells himself. "I mean, I can be a silly butler a great deal longer than I could be a pretty leading man, eh? And he answers himself, profoundly, with that amazing "Yur-r-r-r-rzzz" that is his screen affirmative.

He's superstitious, satisfied and single. He lives in a Hollywood apartment with a colored maid. That is—ahem—I mean he has a colored maid in to do the housework and the cooking. He also has a canary, named "Henry," if that matters.

Henry is an important adjunct to Pip's morning ritual of awakening. The ritual begins with the arrival of the colored maid, who at once sets one of those whistling teakettles on the gas stove. When the water boils, the kettle whistles. That awakes Henry, and Henry outwhistles the kettle. That wakes Pip. By that time, the boiling water has been translated into tea, with which Pip starts his day in patriotic British fashion. That, of course, stops the teakettle from whistling, but not Henry. Henry whistles throughout the rest of the day.

ONE of Pip's greatest worries in his mounting fame is the increase in fan-letters he's received. He doesn't know what to do about them. They say such startling things! He got one from a Los Angeles YWCA girl, who charged that the recent death of King George was just a cheap publicity stunt on Treacher's part, although how she reconciled the two ideas was never stated.

Another writer protested, after reading announcements that Treacher was to play the butler-rôle created by Wodehouse, that "I am surprised at you going to be a servant for this gentleman Mr. Wode house, because I think your destiny is to be a public entertainer in some capacity or another and you should not go into domestic service."

Next to fan-mail, his greatest worry is the attitude of Englishmen concerning his screen Englishmen. "Although there are a few Englishmen now who are beginning to admit it's 'not so bad,' he says, relievedly. No real Englishman ever behaved as he does, he insists, and if any butler buttled as he does, he'd be sacked.

"But how can I help it," he laments. "I don't know any butlers; I don't even know any people who have a butler. I've never even met a butler socially—unless it were in a pub, and then I wouldn't know whether he were a butler or not.

Even his mother, who wanted him to be a barrister, has forgiven him, and now subscribes to an international press-clipping bureau, which sends her every printed item it can find about her son. She reads them and sends them on to Pip, over here. Pip reads them, feels occasionally violently embarrassed and sometimes ill, and throws all the clippings away save those which say his work is lousy. Those he saves. He has quite a few, and every time he feels a swell-head coming on, he reads them.

PIP is a militant bachelor. Not a woman-hater—don't misunderstand. Between being a militant bachelor and being a woman hater, there is a great, wide gulf. Pip doesn't hate women. On the contrary, he admires them and loves them, whenever he can. But he doesn't intend to marry one, if he can help it.

He has that extreme courtesy of the British gentleman. He is well built. He radiates vitality and the joy of living. He's as easy to talk to as somebody you've known all your life. He knows foods, wines, etchings, dogs—the things that make a man of the world likeable and interesting.

He even has that something called sex appeal, if his fan-mail is any criterion. For among the letters, there are daily letters from girls and women who frankly voice their admiration—and more—for Pip. But they confuse Treacher, frightfully.

"Look at this, I say," he shrilled at me, the day I talked with him. He flipped a scented missive toward me. I read it; it was from a girl in the midwest, who raved over his performances, and then went into this—

". . . and you have something more, Arthur. You have a good, big dose of S. A. I mean sex appeal. Why, Arthur, when you look down into the eyes of the girl beside you, you've got a lot of sex appeal, Arthur; believe me. I'd like to know you better."

"Isn't that," asked Arthur Veary "Pip" Treacher, as I handed the letter back to him, "an emetic, now . . .?!"

We Take You Through The Tones' Doors

a half-scornful look in his direction, and answers with typical Crawford candor: "New? I cooked my way through school!"

Dinner is never late. The guests are early. That's why they are snooping around in the kitchen. Joan needs no help in preparing the food. "What kind of an executive are you if you have to have the salt and pepper handed you?" she asked one well known movie tycoon. "The things are right on the stove in front of you. Reach for them."

Six-thirty or seven forty-five is the usual Crawford-Tone dinner hour. The hands of the kitchen clock touch six twenty-five. Joan shoves a plate of bread, crackers, rolls, into the nearest hands. "Take it to the table, will you?" she asks. And you amble away with it. Soon the entire party is grouped about the buffet, helping itself to food. Then it sits to table, where conversation commences to fly.

If Franchot is home (Joan didn't expect him, but he hurried) and one of the guests delivers a vital statement, or perhaps Franchot disagrees with him (he's not a Cornell man for nothing), Tone becomes the host oblivious to all the requirements of his guests. He is entirely engrossed in talk. But if the guests prove a little dull, he is the over-attentive host. "Where's the coffee?" he sotto voces to Joan. and "Where's the brandy? . . . Where's the wine?" He leaves the table to get the liqueurs. Every man is a worker at the Tone home, on Thursday.

Supper over, do you think that Hausfrau Tone leaves the dishes on the table, the cigarette butts smoking, the glasses half-filled, plates untidy? Not on your life. "Mary has enough to do when she comes in the morning," is Joan's dictum. "We'll all help clear up." Sometimes Joan washes the dishes. Yes, really. Sometimes not. When she doesn't, she carefully scrapes the plates, stacks them. Stacks the cups (after she's rinsed them). Salvages the chicken, cold cuts, deviled eggs, puts them into the refrigerator for use on the morrow. She's as thrifty as a Dutch housewife.

Then the party adjourns to the music room. Well . . . it's the music room and bar. A very slick room, too. It does credit to the interior decoration of William Haines. He's done the walls in leather, and the ceiling in cork. The result is something beautiful in green and tan. The lounge is leather and green corduroy. The cushions are green corduroy. The piano is green. Bill is always on the lookout for something nice, in Early American, for the Tone home.

The drawing-room is beauty itself, in Crawford blue and white. "Deeper than powder blue—between powder and a Royal blue," defines Joan of the color named for her by Decorator Haines. On the floor of the drawing-room is a white needlepoint rug, bordered with Dubonnet and purple flowers. One large couch in rose-color carries out the warm tones of wine with its two Dubonnet pillows.

Now comes the surprise, and we are back in the music room. If you thought you were going to play charades or "Guggenheim" with the Tones and their friends, you are wrong, and you can run home if you want. (You won't want to). You are going to hear operatic recordings on the Tones' phonograph (you don't bother about changing platters on this marvelous machine). The operas will be old favorites, easily understood; no strained suites from Stravinsky. You will hear "La Traviata" (Joan's favorite), "Il Trovatore," "Aida," "Barber of Seville," probably sung by the famous La Scala group of Milan.

You won't think you are hearing "canned" music, either. The radio-phonograph is out of sight. The music comes to you, as from an unseen source. The machine stands in the gallery. When the Tones want a concert-hall effect with their radio music, they turn on the gallery radio and a smaller one in the dining room, and sit and listen in the music room. Perfectly synchronized, the music comes to them from two directions; the same effect as anyone sitting in an auditorium would get. They use this reception on Saturday morning for the regular Metropolitan opera broadcast.

Joan, in the meantime, has hauled her current hooked rug out of the closet. (She's made fifteen; kept some herself, given others to friends). She sits there punching the yarn-needle through the canvas with her small strong hands. Another rug frame stands at her side. It has two Scotties printed on it, and the border is only begun. Jean Dixon eyes it, and begins to laugh. Joan does too, over the clear tones of an Italian soprano. The Scottie rug has a story. Joan bought it for Jean to work on.

Joan gave Jean her first (and only) lesson. The big needle punched in and pulled out of the canvas as Joan showed her friend the mysteries of hooked rug-making. Jean, the wise-cracking comedienne of Crawford's Sadie McKee (that's where they met), grew so interested that her cheek almost touched Joan's hand. "Wham!" went Joan's fist as she pulled the needle out of the canvas. It landed an uppercut on Jean's cheek. In a moment Jean, again engrossed, leaned forward. "Wham!" Another beauty on her cheek.

"Her face was black and blue by the time she left," Joan tells it in slight exaggeration. "And her interest in hooked rugs was entirely gone." Nevertheless, for a laugh, the Scottie rug always makes its appearance when Jean Dixon is a Thursday night supper guest at Joan's.

It takes a good two hours to play off an opera recording. Often a lively discussion starts at the end, and talk goes on at a rapid pace until far into the night. Jean Dixon has an early morning studio call. She leaves when she wants. Joan, too, must be early on the M-G-M set (filming The Gorgeous Hussy, wherein Husband Franchot, her second in real life, plays the second husband to her historical character of Peg O'Neil).

Joan says "good-night" to her guests. Mounts the stairs to her Crawford blue and white sitting room. Prepares herself for her bed on the outdoor sleeping porch. Franchot's adjoining suite is done in brown and white.

And, thus, is another informal Thursday night with Joan brought to a close. "Come again," she says as she leaves. Or maybe, you like a little gentleman or lady, leave first, and Joan speeds you on your way with a sincere "please return."

guesser pay the bill and the second worst, the tip."

She could afford to be magnanimous about it, since in either case she was so lucky that it was rarely out of her pocket, and when I say pocket I mean pocket.

"Let's get back to Court," ordered the embittered Prime Minister, looking at her pants and ill concealing his irritation, "or your royal birth won't come till after your royal funeral."

The Queen got up and everybody rose as one man. All eyes in the restaurant followed her.

A LITTLE later, on the set, I found the air warm with hospitality—the kind of hospitality that surrounds a hanging.

There was the Queen, every inch a Queen, now dressed in royal robes of wine-colored velvet and doing a defiant love scene with the handsomest Scots heart-breaker this world has ever seen, Fredric March, the Earl of Bothwell, murderer of Mary of Scotland's second husband, Lord Darnley. Lord Bothwell's family name, incidentally, was James Hepburn and the Virginia Hepburns, from which Katharine Hepburn came, originally migrated from Scotland. Isn't it a small world?

The scene finished, there was a moment's relaxation. Ford lay down his pipe. Hepburn picked it up and puffed it. Everybody laughed. Everybody but Ford.

After a bit of this, the fighting Ford led me to one side and before we knew it we had walked out a side door into the sunlight.

"They haven't worked for a week," he explained. "They've been having no end of horseplay and all of them are going to get one Helvetian bawling out from me. That's why I didn't want anybody there. People like you distract them. They play up to you instead of each other. But I've got to get the best performance of her life out of her and I'll get it or break her across my knee."

We were glad to be out of earshot before the furniture began to fly or Hepburn, head high, walked out of the studio, her red hair on fire at being bawled out by a hot-tempered Harp.

Just how Queen Kath came out of having the riot act read to her I never knew and didn't dare ask, but personally I did swell. A fine briar pipe made in the Irish Free State by that other fine old Fenian, Peterson of Dublin (and Stockholm), arrived on my birthday. It was a gift from Jack Ford.

The blowup must have come out all right because not only did the Queen and her Prime Minister finish their task together and on time, but Jack Ford threw a party at his home after the production was completed. The party was for the cast, and the electricians, grips and technicians generally.

Ford was all spruced up and, surprise of surprises, Katharine the Greater arrived all smiles—and wearing a beautiful evening dress!

for Marvelous Taste!"

DENTYNE'S AN AID TO BEAUTIFUL TEETH. Explorers marvel at the strong, white teeth of savages—their teeth are kept healthy by foods that require plenty of chewing. Our soft, civilized foods give teeth and gums too little exercise. That's why many dentists recommend Dentyne as a daily health habit. Its firmer consistency invites more vigorous chewing—keeps mouth tissues firm and healthy—teeth sparkling white.

YOU NEVER TIRE OF DENTYNE. Its goodness is inexhaustible—A delicious, aromatic taste that's just indescribably good! For many discriminating men and women Dentyne is the only chewing gum. They appreciate its superior quality—its delightful, lasting flavor—and the smart flat shape of the package that slips so neatly into pocket or purse (a feature exclusively Dentyne's).

6 Stars Help You to Beauty

much attention in that movie as the pert little flapper. Remember her flip phrase, "Cigarette me, big boy?" Ginger was registering.

When Gold Diggers of 1933 was produced Ginger was given a feature rôle and was cute but still very chubby. After her success in this, she took stock of herself. She had something, she knew, and her chances for stardom were very good indeed, but she also knew there were obstacles to overcome. And the greatest of these was weight. If she continued to carry around those excess pounds she would never escape from the ingénue class. And Ginger had been bitten by the bug of stardom. Naturally plump, it was a hard battle for the little red head to attain and maintain a slim, beautifully-proportioned figure. But a Rogers never says die and before long Ginger's figure was the envy of girls every where, and much mention was made of her tiny 23-inch waist.

Today Ginger, who is five feet four, weighs 112 pounds and has one of the loveliest figures in all Hollywood. The loss of weight took that babyish rotundity from her face and revealed a really beautiful profile. Ginger's hair, which is naturally red, photographed quite dark, and so the ambitious Ginger put herself in the capable hands of experts, and today her red-gold coiffure, which photographs a lovely blonde, is among her most distinguished features.

Her new loveliness gave Ginger confidence and poise and she now finds herself equally at home in the rôle of a comedienne or dramatic star. As for the Rogers dancing—even that changed. The plump little Ginger was queen of the Charleston. The new slim Ginger forsook the hotcha dances for the graceful steps and gyrations befitting the partner of Fred Astaire. Incidentally, since Ginger has become Fred's dancing partner, she doesn't have to worry about her figure. She loses pounds, and pounds while they are rehearsing dance steps. So without the new slender figure, she couldn't have become Astaire's partner, and from these dancing rôles stepped to stardom in her own right. Do you think Ginger regrets her arduous efforts to become really beautiful and svelte? She does not. She is reaping a rich reward. And so from Ginger you may learn lesson one.

KEEP YOUR WEIGHT DOWN IF YOU WANT BEAUTY! CONFIDENCE! POISE!

ONE of the most remarkable changes in a filmland Cinderella was that wrought by Bette Davis. Not one of you would have turned around for a second look at Bette when she first came to Hollywood. And guess who assisted Bette in playing fairy godmother to herself? Not Max Factor or one of the famous Westmore brothers but George Arliss.

Poor little Bette was decidedly not a beauty, then. Her hair was a drab shade, her mouth was made up incorrectly, she wore undistinguished clothes. Just a very ordinary-looking girl rapidly getting nowhere in pictures. George Arliss was considered slightly mad when he chose her for the rôle of a very beautiful, smartly-dressed young woman in The Man Who Played God. But Bette, secure in his confidence in her, set about to justify this faith, and lo, what wonders were performed. One day there walked upon the set a stunning creature. Hair, a goldeny blonde and smartly coiffed, blue eyes carefully made up to show their beauty, sullen mouth audaciously roughed to accent its sulleness and the smartest, most sophisticated of clothes, setting off all this loveliness.

It was the new Bette Davis—a Bette who has remained golden and sophisticated ever since and has achieved the heights of stardom in a comparatively short time. Bette capitalized on her sullen mouth and insolent eyes and made a distinct place for herself on the screen. Once having achieved beauty and glamour, Bette daringly cast it all aside to play the unattractive little waitress in Of Human Bondage where she allowed herself to appear as ugly and repulsive as any woman could. But Bette and the fans know that she, herself, is lovely, and the drab, retiring little girl who first came to pictures, is gone forever.

Take lesson two from Bette, girls.

ACCENT YOUR MOST STRIKING FEATURES WHETHER THEY BE ALONG CONVENTIONAL LINES OR NOT.

WHO had ever heard of an insolent, spitfire heroine before Bette came along? Bette made us gaga over "hussies." Instead of hiding her sullen mouth behind a conventional Cupid's bow, Bette played up every natural curve of her lips. Unheard of? Of course—but Bette, all along the line, has dared to be different.

Joan Crawford was never ugly, but even the most ardent Crawford fan will admit that the Joan of Sally, Irene and Mary fame, could never compete in a beauty contest with the Joan Crawford of today. Joan is not the petite type and has never pretended to be. It is a pity that some of those girls who are lucky enough to have Joan's lovely breadth of shoulders and general build, hunch themselves up in an endeavor to look tiny and cuddly.

Joan was too heavy when she entered pictures, and by the most grueling attention to her diet and the correct amount of exercise, la Crawford carved for herself a beautiful, statuesque figure, that is Adrian's delight. It was Joan who started the vogue for exaggerated lapels and shoulder treatment; style features that most wide-shouldered girls would have never dared. It was Joan who made up her generous curve of mouth in a manner to accent its size. And Joan long, long ago gave up the conventional short, waved bob for a very long hairdress, swept off the face, and with but a slight wave to relieve it.

LEARN COURAGE FROM JOAN.

THE single hair eyebrow isn't for Joan, either. She prefers to wear her eyebrows in a fairly full and entirely natural manner. How many of you would have dared introduce these styles? Certainly you follow them, because the famous Joan Crawford introduced them. But have you the courage to step out of the crowd and make some unconventional change in appearance that will really improve you.

Have the courage to wear what you want to regardless of what is said to be fitting for your type.

I wish every girl who bemoans her red hair and freckles would stop crying long enough to look at some pictures of Myrna Loy. Myrna has red hair and freckles and is there one of you who wouldn't love to look like her? I thought so! Of course when Myrna was playing that long succession of Oriental sorceresses and vamps she was not beautiful. In fact, Myrna herself, would be the first to tell you right now that she hasn't classic features. Her nose has a funny little tilt, her eyes slant in a different manner, but the whole effect is utterly devastating. So a fig for the Grecian profile. Make mine Loy.

When they finally unwrapped Myrna from her Oriental trappings, let her take a deep breath and plunge into pictures where she was actually supposed to be white and a heroine, too, they discovered a most unusual thing. Myrna was a very attractive and normal young woman. She didn't go in for shaved eyebrows, false eyelashes or peroxided hair. She wore her hair in a short and becomingly-waved bob, her clothes were the sort any well-groomed young woman would wear—in other words, Myrna was a natural and darned determined to stay that way. She has, too, and that's what makes her so different today.

She has freckles, yes, and they are plainly visible when you see her in person. So what? Her hair is a lovely red and it's still worn in a simple style. Myrna never did go in for a Garbo bob. Maybe it was her reaction from playing so many exotic rôles, but whatever the cause, Myrna Loy has determinedly refrained from dramatic make-up and always presents a picture of any normal young American girl, whose personality and features are best set off by smart but simple clothes and make-up.

IF YOU HAVE NO PARTICULAR FEATURE TO BE ACCENTED TAKE A TIP FROM MYRNA LOY AND BE NATURAL.

JUST look at the lovely results Myrna has achieved.

One girl who got breath-takingly lovely results from waving the magic wand is the luscious Carole Lombard. Carole is one of the real beauties of the screen and her blond loveliness of face is only equalled by her gorgeous figure. Tall, slim, a vision in bathing suit or formal dress, Carole brings forth sighs of envy wherever she goes. But with the beautious Carole, 'twas not always thus. Not by about twenty pounds!

I well remember one of Carole's first pictures after she had graduated from Mack Sennett comedies. Carole was playing with Bill Boyd in an old Pathé picture. The story took place out in a desert and the couple was stranded in an old shack. A terrible sand storm had arisen and it was impossible for Bill to reach a town where he might get food. Carole was wandering listlessly around the shack and finally sank down on the floor, almost dead from hunger. It would all have been very pitiful and heart-rending except for one thing. The starving Carole was just too, too plump and curvacious in her smart frock, and when she sank to the floor I mentally remarked, "I'll bet that little honey just consumed a chocolate marshmallow sundae before she came on the set!"

Carole's hair wasn't particularly attractive then, either, and there was absolutely no evidence of the spirited, dynamic, breezy Miss Lombard of 1936. Hair tinted to a soft gold that contrasts beautifully with her deep blue eyes and fair skin.

And speaking of hair—Carole, as you probably have noticed, has an exceptionally high forehead. I have known girls who hated this feature in themselves and covered it with curls and bangs. Carole's perfect features allow her to wear her hair in whatever manner she pleases, and she has often appeared with a soft bang covering her brow. But to me, the smartest Lombard hairdress is that characteristic one of hers. Hair brushed cleanly back from her face and forehead and that lovely serene expanse of brow displayed.

Merle Oberon is another girl who stresses her high forehead to achieve distinction.

ARE YOU MAKING A MOUNTAIN OUT OF SOME "DEFECT" MOLE HILL?

IT TOOK a long time for Jean Arthur to wave her magic wand but when she did, she got results that still have Hollywood talking. Of course you all remember the Jean of a few years back. A pretty and very sweet-looking ingénue, showing no exceptional ability, but always a very satisfactory little brown-haired heroine. From a sweet but uninteresting little ingénue, Jean had been transformed into a palsy-walsy, ever-so-slightly hard boiled little person, with a trim, blonde bob replacing the former dark curls and ringlets.

Jean's greatest transformation, however, was her voice. Casually glancing at Jean's pert little face, one might still hazard a guess, "ingénue," but one earful of that throaty Arthur voice and the ingénue tag would be quickly discarded.

SO IF YOU'VE WORKED ON EVERY POSSIBLE FEATURE AND YOU'RE NOT SATISFIED WITH YOURSELF —HOW ABOUT IMPROVING YOUR VOICE?

JEAN ARTHUR couldn't (and shouldn't) disguise her naturally sweet expression but she achieved an entirely new and sparklingly different personality when she waved the wand of study, hard work and determination and brought forth an enchanting speaking voice.

Now after hearing all these tales aren't you ashamed of yourself for complaining and being ready to give up the ship? The obstacles these girls have overcome, you can overcome, too.

Don't be afraid to branch out into a new style of make-up or hairdress. If you look terrible in close-fitting necklines and Dame Fashion says necklines must hug the throat, shop until you've found a becoming V-shaped collar. If you are dressed your flattering best, no one is even going to notice whether you are wearing the latest style from Paris or a style that was in vogue in 1934.

Don't sit by the fireside and sigh for a fairy god-mother to change you into a beauty. Use your own wand (brains, good taste and determination) and you, too, can produce fairy tale results.

Mugs Is Mugs

dressed man." He bites nails. Around the studio Fred wears an ol' sweat shirt and slacks, and knows every guy in the crew by his nickname.

This mug will never take any beauty prizes either, but when he turns on that Astaire smile, croons in Ginger's ear as they go whirling all over the set as if it weren't there, the femmes of all ages swoon with delight. Like Bing Crosby, Fred gets the male vote too, 'cause somehow he looks and acts like a regular mug. He's strictly a two-fisted little guy, who would rather be out there on a baseball diamond than on a dance floor any day.

At the world series last year, he swapped autographs with Dizzy Dean, a photo for a baseball. Each mug thought he got the best of the deal. They're both a couple of genuine-dyed-in-the-wool mugs.

George Raft

HERE is a mug you gotta know to appreciate. We figure that we know him as well as anybody, and we find him a high, wide and handsome mug. George is an Italian lad from the sidewalks of New York. He sort of eased his pan into the picture racket. It didn't take the folks long to realize, however, that here is a personality.

In this mug's lean days he had a pal. They sort of stuck together through thick and thin. Now that George is in the money and the fame, his old pal is right up there sittin' beside him on the plush and velvet. If George Raft is your friend, you got yourself a friend.

Maybe you think George looks like one of those sleek Latin gigolos, but don't ever make the mistake of thinkin' that out loud anywhere within a hundred miles of him.

Dick Arlen wants to be a mug, so we let him in to kibitz on George Raft. If George is your friend, brother you got yourself a friend!

Speaking of mugs, we present the writer of this article, Bill Frawley, as the champeen tough mug with a heart of gold. He can look tough, a-squintin' his eyes and wise-cracking out of the corner of his mouth; he can act tough, and make you shiver to contemplate his very dirty work—in pictures. But in real life he's a lovable mug like the rest of the mugs limned in this story. (Editor's note.)

Wallace Beery

HERE is a mug whose homely old kisser has been packing 'em in ever since movies began to flicker.

This big, rough-and-tumble circus elephant trainer showed he was a mug right off by making the folks yell at his antics as Sweedie, the Scandinavian servant girl in those ol' Essanay comedies twenty years or more ago.

First thing you know Wally quit making funny, and became the meanest man the screen has ever known. In the old silent days mothers used to quiet their bad kids by threatening them with Berry.

When sound pictures came along and Wally heard for himself how really rough a mug he was, he insisted on playing Jackie Cooper's pal occasionally just to prove to the folks that it's all in fun.

Wally is probably the best nimrod in Hollywood, and he even flies his own plane after grizzly bears

Dick Arler

THIS handsome young mug Arlen has been pesticatin' around our club for so long that the rest of us mugs decided that he was on the level about it. When he resigned as Mayor of Toluca Lake, and turned the job over to Bing Crosby, we had to admit that he was regular.

Dick is one of those brawny good lookin' young lads that go over great in those he-man opuses of the great out-doors. He is strictly an out-doors guy on his own range.

He's happily married to that grand little Joby, and they have a husky youngster who looks like the next white hope.

He owns a yacht, which we would hold against him, except that he navigates the skiff himself. He can beat our ears off knocking that little white golf ball around. He's the movie champ and a pal of Walter Hagen's. He can handle his dukes and showed us a snappy throwing arm and batting eye in a benefit baseball game.

'Course he has gotta work at being a mug, but Bing has promised to get him Andy Devine's job at Toluca, which means that he will probably be the next fire chief.

Charles Laughton

"NO, NO, no!" you say, "not Charles Laughton a mug!" Well, you would be surprised, ladies and gents, mightily surprised. Our British cousin regards himself as a very hard mug, indeed. He describes himself as having been a very nasty little fat boy, who grew up to be a homely cuss, hell-bent on going around playing tough, mean guys who scare folks.

If you saw Charlie as ol' Henry the Eighth, or, the terrible gendarme in Les Miserables, or, one cruel Captain Bligh in Mutiny on the Bounty, you know he's a mug. He gives us the shivvers.

'Course Charlie has his tender side, as when he plays mugs like Ruggles. The point I'm making is that it takes a great mug to turn in performances like those.

Harold Lloyd

HOLLYWOOD'S family man is one of those swell little guys who is so doggoned modest that he doesn't even suspect that everybody else thinks he is one grand mug.

Harold has made several millions and kept a few, but he remains as plain as an ol' shoe, as he was when he first hit Hollywood—a gawky kid from Nebraska.

Here he is today with the most beautiful estate in California and a large and happy family, but his ol' pals can still park their tootsies under his dining room table.

Once a year he makes a picture to keep his hand in, and to let the millions of folks who like him know he is still a funny man. Harold can do most anything he wants to do, associate with the world's best, but he sorta likes to stick around Hollywood with the boys and girls who grew up in the game with him.

W. C. Fields

NOW you got us laffin', folks. Here is a real double-distilled, triple-chilled, extra special fancy funny feller and a very gay mug with it all. Where you found Bill Fields there was laughter, the kind of laughter that does your heart, stomach and liver good.

For some thirty years or more this grand ol' mug clowned his way around the world, gathering to him more loyal pals than any guy we know. Only a few months ago when Bill took sick over at the Paramount studio where we work, there wasn't a laugh to be heard for days.

Among Bill's likes: stag parties, ranch life, golf, little birds, providing they're not swans, the fights at Jim Jeffries' Barn, tennis with Gregory La Cava, and to call all the girls "my little chickadee." They loved it, too.

He's comical, but what a mug!

DON'T get us wrong, folks. There are several more grand mugs out here in Hollywood, but we sorta picked on the ones whom the picture-goin' fans like even better than they do the handsome leading men. At least, that's what the box-office tickers say.

It wasn't exactly fair to admit Bill Fields, 'cause great comics are always more popular with the mob. Folks like to laugh.

We gotta admit a weakness for comics. They're almost always regular mugs. We're not featurin' these lads, but we gotta tell you about 'em.

Take Bert Wheeler and Bob Woolsey, for example. Two swell-and-funny little gents. They have been teamin' together for many years, for plenty of laughs and popularity. They're known personally from Hollywood to Eithiopia, all ways.

Bert always has a funny story, and Bob always tells it.

Amiable Babe Hardy and Stan Laurel, our ol' curly-haired pal, Leon Errol, easygoin' bald-headed Edgar Kennedy, Edward Horton, Charles Ruggles, Frank McHugh, Charlie Butterworth, Chic Sale, Guy Kibbee, Frank Craven, Jack Holt, and that grand ol' mug who retired from Hollywood several years ago—Bill Hart—all dyed-in-the-wool members in good standing of the Ancient and Honorable Society of Mugs.

In closing, I give you the last and the best,

Will Rogers

HERE words could never express just what our Will, the grandest ol' mug of them all, meant to his profession as well as to the whole world.

Will used to get sorta embarrassed and kinda mad when folks said nice complimentary things about him, so we reckon there's nothing much we can say except to lift some of Will's words about another grand feller.

Seems Will said after his ol' Indian painter pal, Charlie Russell, had passed on that he reckoned God had taken Charlie away to heaven 'cause He needed some good men up there.

No words could better suit Will himself.

Don't Be A Wallflower!

adolescent viewpoint," exploded Joan—"considering several facts. Mainly that the marital batting average of Smith grads compared to the Vanities chorus is humorously low; but mostly because no preconceived notion about what a girl wants in a man, or what he shall look like, is important. It doesn't matter whether a man talks with a Harvard or a Bronx accent, wears Back Bay evening tails or Hollywood slacks. What does matter is that each and every girl should make a whole-hearted attempt to make herself attractive to the entire male sex, so that when her particular male comes along, he'll be one of the number!"

So Joan, having figured this out early in life, became a "man's woman." Furthermore, she doesn't see why any woman should care much about anvthing else except whether she pleases the men. And if anyone can think up any good reason why Joan may be wrong—well, then, Joan would be interested in having her go ahead and expound!

But how did she go about becoming the sort of girl men admire?

"Well," grinned Joan, "I got me a couple of theories. For one thing, men are supposed to like lots of peace and quiet—but I don't believe it. Not too much of it, anyway. So I try to take care of that. Keep'em riled up. It's good for'em.

"Then I always try to be a little bit different every time they see me. Perhaps the first time I meet a man, I may be a little quiet and demure. So the next time, I'm a tom-boy. A little later, I get just a wee bit coy. And still later, I'm the pal type—just one of the boys!

"Pretty soon the man says to himself, 'What is this anyway? What's going on here?' So he has to keep on seeing you, of course, to make up his mind—and then by the time he's figured you out, you've got him roped!" snickered Joan. "You see, it's fatal to let them think they've got you 'lined up' too early in the game.

"MEN like a girl to be a little religious, too. Yes, they do—they like her especially for not being ashamed to show it. Too many girls today are all flip—afraid to show their finer feelings, and that's a mistake. If a man shies away from a girl for showing a little religion—well, I don't think she'd be very happy with him anyway.

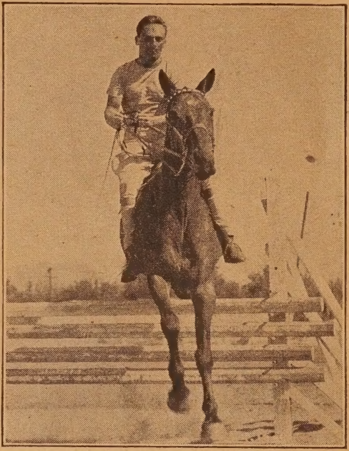
"Then, it's a good idea, if you want to please a man particularly, to find out about what athletics he's interested in. Bring it up in your conversation once in a while—and even try to play his favorite game with him. Of course, you may get all out of breath quick," Joan grinned, "but he'll think it's darn sweet that you tried."

It's "bad medicine" for a man to be agreed with all the time, too, according to Joan Blondell's code.

"Spoils 'em," she said succinctly. "I never 'yes' them any more than I can help it. But on the other hand, it's well to have some intelligent basis for an argument, when you decide to disagree. Be sure you know what you're talking about, then go ahead. Then you won't get the reputation of being just ridiculously, dumb-blonde silly."

Strangely enough, when you consider Joan's popularity, she seldom flatters the men nor pays them compliments. Not obviously, anyhow, for—"I think a man just gets bored with a girl who's continually commenting on his pretty hair or his 'cute' nose," says Joan Blondell. "The smarter way is to go on for a long time without appearing to notice him one way or another. Then suppose you go swimming. You haven't seen him in a bathing suit for a long time. So you say, offhand-like, or, very nonchalantly, 'I never knew you had such nice legs.' He'll live on that for six months!"

"Another subtle method of flattering a man," Joan continued, "is to change your dress once in a while, if he says he doesn't like it. You'll be burning inside, of course—but smile sweetly and insist on putting on another, and boy! will it make him purr! Then you can try bringing out a new hat you've just bought—and send it back if he doesn't like it. Use that trick, and you get far, quick!"



Erik Rhodes, one of Hollywood's best all-around athletes, puts his hunter over the hurdle in approved style. Rhodes is being groomed for stardom by RKO-Radio

THERE'S another little stunt of Joan's her boy friends wouldn't care so much about, though—if they knew it. For, in keeping with her theory that men shouldn't have too much peace and quiet, she deliberately stirs up a "fair-sized battle" now and then!

"If you see that your man's getting too set and happy—then it's time to have a little fight. Make him a little unhappy—just for one night," Joan advises. "But, mind you, all these things I've been telling should only be done once in a while. The other extreme is bad—it never does to let a man think you're too capricious. Then they'll give up trying to figure you out and leave you strictly alone.

"Oh, and they just love to have you tell them the way they dance is simply gay!" continued Joan. "If they dance poorly, you can always say they have 'a different tempo', and that does just as well. I remember one man who danced so badly I simply couldn't keep step with him at all. It was so bad I just felt I had to say something—so I told him he had an off-beat that was very interesting! It slayed him!"

By this time you gather that Joan is something of a diplomat. But her way of handling men who do things she doesn't like is cleverest of all. She simply compliments them on how superlatively well they do it!

For instance, one of Joan's friends is a speed fiend on the highways. The first time she went driving with him, he practically scared her out of her wits by doing seventy in traffic and passing on the curves. So what did Joan do? Scream? Beg him to slow down? Bawl him out? Not much she didn't!

"I just settled back in the seat, relaxed as much as I could under the circumstances, and murmured 'My, I always feel so safe with you!'" Joan related, making those enormous blue eyes roll upward in a baby stare. "I said that ordinarily I was nervous with other people driving, but with him, I never was afraid because he seemed so sure of himself—drove with such confidence—never darted in and out of line without being sure he had plenty of room to pass. And would you believe it," Joan bounced up and down triumphantly, "he started right in to do all those very things I complimented him about, trying to show off how safe he was—and now he hardly even speeds!"

DESPITE Joan's devastating effect on the male sex, a fair share of her fan mail is from women, and she has great admiration for her own sex as a whole. But there have been few close women friends in Joan's life.

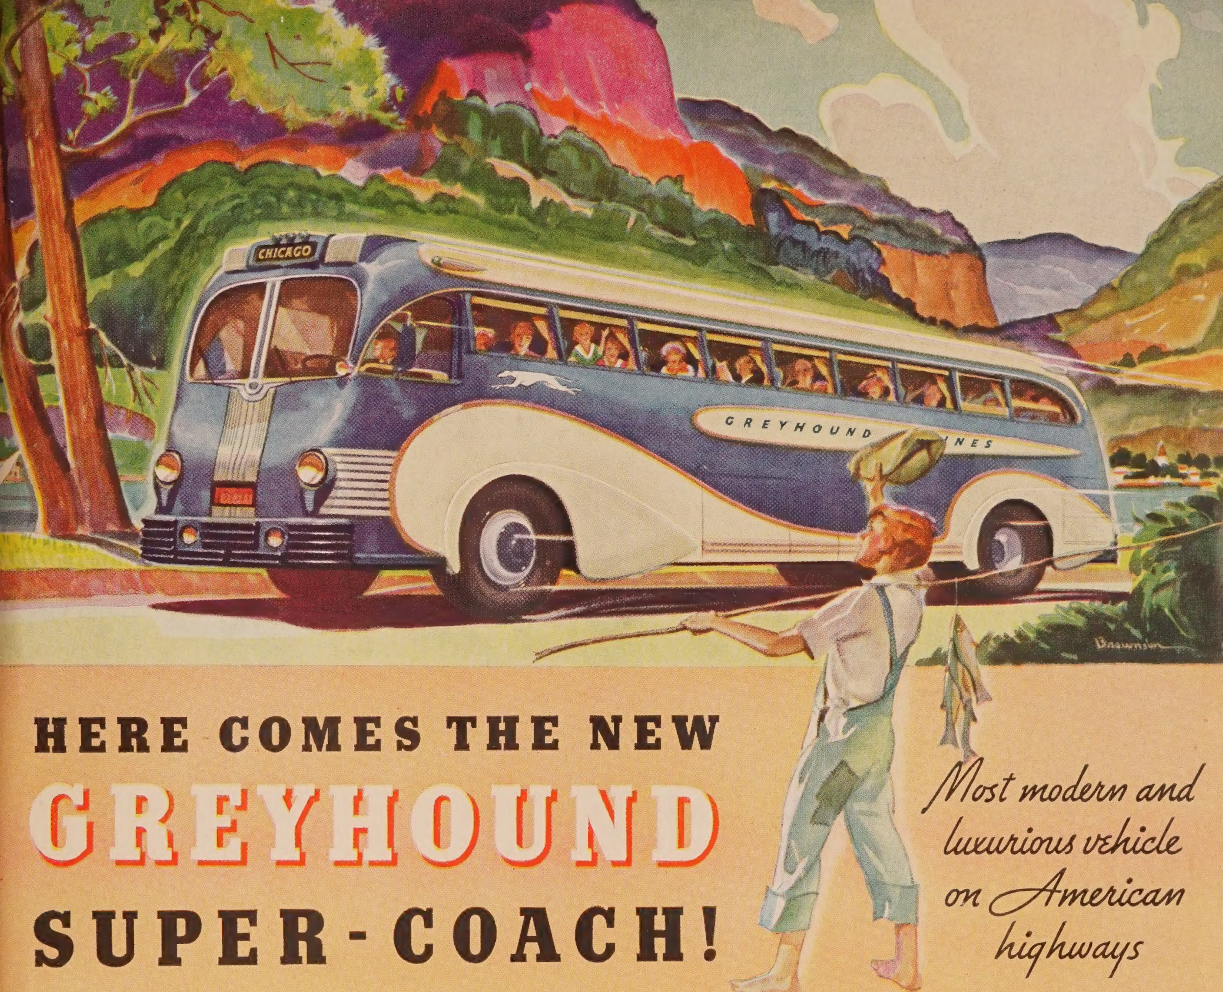
"Whenever I have made a girl my confidant it has been a mistake, I've been let down, and now I prefer to go to a man when I have problems and need advice," she says—and thanks to the devotion of her mother and sister, Gloria, she has never felt much need for other feminine companionship.

In spite of the parts she plays on the screen, Joan Blondell never thinks of herself as a sophisticate.

"Sophistication is a term women like to apply to themselves, and which they understand will be appreciated by other women—and, they hope, by men," she thinks. "But I don't think that sophistication, nor a too-strict adherence to sleek sophisticated fashions, are necessarily appreciated by men."

So while other women may follow the style trends, wearing what is smart rather than what is becoming, Joan Blondell pays no attention whatever to feminine appreciation, and doesn't care whether she appears sophisticated or not. If she realizes that a certain costume will be enhanced by wearing a hair-ribbon, hair-ribbons may not be in style, but Joan proceeds to wear one. Which is one of the reasons Joan may never reach the "ten best-dressed" lists—but she will continue to interest men.

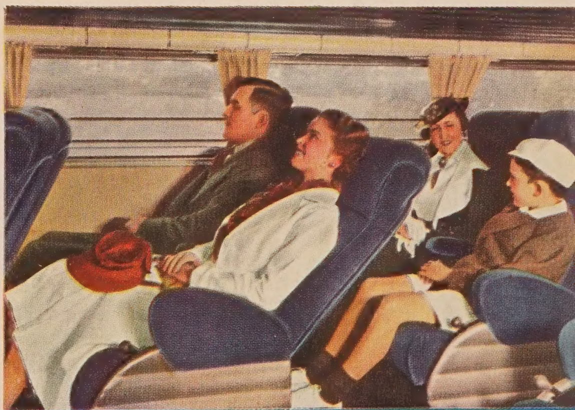
"I'm a dandy one to spout off about men, anyway," she called after me as I got into my car. "What if Dick Powell isn't going to like m'method?"



HERE COMES THE NEW GREYHOUND SUPER-COACH!

Most modern and luxurious vehicle on American highways

Smartly streamlined, smooth riding, roomy —it marks a bright new chapter in travel



It's here . . . the most striking development in modern travel history —a beautiful new super-coach, operated exclusively by Greyhound, over nation-wide highway routes. Utterly different from any other vehicle, it offers a brand new thrill in smart comfortable travel.

There are roomy individual chairs with extra deep cushions, folding arm rests, four reclining positions . . . seats high above wheel level, insulated from noise and vibration, with clearer, better observation above passing cars . . . baggage stored underneath in weather-proof, locked compartments . . . diffused tubular lighting—roll-down sunshades—adjustable rubber foot-rests—motor in rear for greater power, ease of operation.

Just compare this new Greyhound coach with any type of travel—land, sea or air—for smooth-riding comfort and luxury. Yet fares are far below even the lowest second-class rates of other transportation!

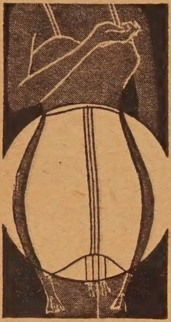
IRRESISTIBLE LIP LURE—THE NEW GLOWING VIBRANT LIPSTICK

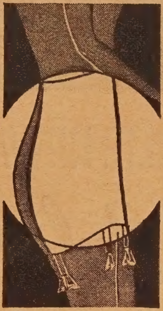
QUICKLY CORRECT THESE 4 FIGURE FAULTS

Perfolastic not only CONFINES . . it REMOVES ugly bulges!



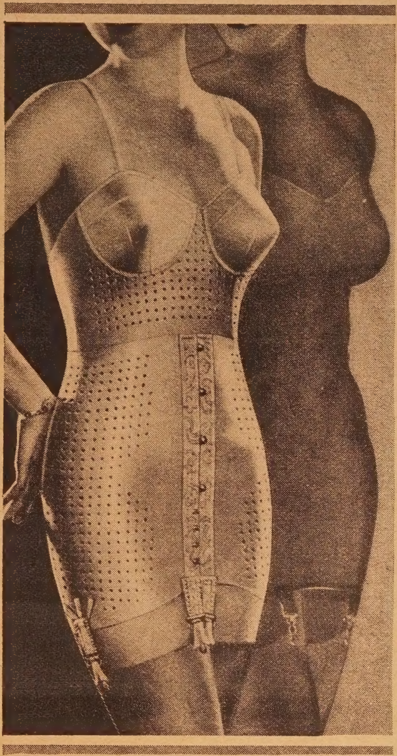
Reduce Too Fleshy Hips and Thighs

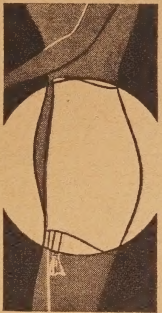
■ Nothing ruins the graceful lines of an expensive gown more than billowing hips . . . they are quickly brought back to beauty with the gentle massage-like action of the Perfolastic Girdle.



The Bulge "Derriere" Reduces Quickly

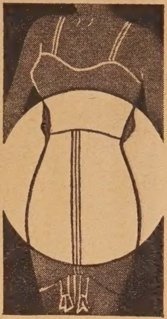
■ It is so easy to overcome the after effects of too healthy appetites . . . simply don a Perfolastic Girdle and watch the curves smooth out at the spots where Fashion says reduce.





Abdominal Fat is Most Common of All

■ Prominent "tummies" are almost universally due to relaxed muscles and resulting fat. Perfolastic will correct the appearance at once and then surely and safely reduce it, without dieting.



Diaphragm Rolls Quickly Disappear

■ Until the development of the new Perfolastic Brassiere the woman whose figure was marred by unsightly "rib-rolls" had to reduce by expensive massage. Now Perfolastic does it.

IF YOU DO NOT REDUCE YOUR WAIST AND HIPS 3 INCHES IN 10 DAYS . .

. . . IT WILL COST YOU NOTHING!

Thousands of women owe their slender, youthful figures to Perfolastic—the sure, safe way to reduce! So many Perfolastic wearers reduce more than 3 inches in 10 days, we know that we are justified in making YOU this amazing offer. You risk nothing . . . simply try it for 10 days at our expense. You will be thrilled with the results . . . as are all Perfolastic wearers.

APPEAR SMALLER AT ONCE!

■ Look at yourself before you put on your Perfolastic Girdle and Diaphragm Reducing Brassiere . . . and afterwards! The difference is amazing. Bulges are smoothed out and you appear inches smaller at once. You are so comfortable you cannot realize that every minute you wear these Perfolastic garments you are actually reducing . . . and at hips, waist, diaphragm and thighs, where fat first accumulates.

NO DIET . . . DRUGS . . . OR EXERCISES!

■ You do not have to risk your health or change your comfortable mode of living. No strenuous exercises to wear you out . . . no dangerous drugs to take . . . and no diet to reduce face and neck to wrinkled flabbiness. You do nothing whatever except watch the inches disappear!

■ No longer will surplus fat sap your energy and steal your pep and ambition! You will not only be gracefully slender, but you will feel more like doing things and going places!

MASSAGE-LIKE ACTION ACTUALLY REMOVES SUPERFLUOUS FAT!

How is it done? Simply by the gentle massage-like action of this wonderful "live" material. Every move you make puts your Perfolastic to work taking off those unwanted inches. The perforations and soft, silky lining make these Perfolastic garments delightful to wear.

"REDUCED MY HIPS 12 INCHES" WRITES MISS RICHARDSON

■ "Lost 60 pounds," says Mrs. Derr. "Reduced from size 42 to size 18," writes Mrs. Faust. Miss Browne "immediately became 3 inches smaller," etc., etc. Test Perfolastic yourself at our expense and prove whether it will do as much for you!

DON'T WAIT! SEND TODAY FOR 10-DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER AND SAMPLE OF PERFORATED MATERIAL!

TELLING on the GUEST EDITOR

Keep your eyes on SCREEN BOOK—not on Dolores' emeralds . . . little things that come in pairs, surrounded by diamonds, which she wears as casually as a forgetful husband wears a string 'round his finger

SCREEN BOOK

IF YOU think Dolores' comments in her own writing, which appear on a number of pages herein, are terse—put yourself in the place of her intimate friends who eagerly wrest fat letters from her out of the postman's grasp (after he has rung twice, you understand) only to find that things haven't changed a bit—and that the five pages hold a total of about twenty-five words. Her writing is so large that she never can make more than a half dozen words fit on a page of letter paper. We had to ask the printer to reduce, photographically, her writing to make room for the things she writes about.

You can't accuse Dolores of being an over-fond and doting wife (blinded by love even to the extent of misjudging her husband's sartorial perfection) when she names him "best dressed man." Many male fashion authorities have said the same thing about M-G-M's art director. When Dolores wants an unusual scarf or tie she doesn't go to one of the swanky sports shops. No need for that. She just raids Cedric's wardrobe.

Garbo is a frequent visitor at the Gibbons menage—but when we asked Dolores if she'd write something for us on Greta, she shook her head. "No. Please do not ask me that. I do not talk about her. I never say anything." And that was that.

Her silent visitor usually comes unannounced, we learned—most frequently to play tennis. If Dolores is entertaining a guest, or transacting business with someone, Garbo is never announced. But her surprised hostess can tell from the expression on the face of the servant who comes into the room that the Great One is skulking in the shrubbery or hiding in her car at the end of the hedge until the coast is clear.

Dolores says earnestly and without hesitation that the Swede is the most beautiful woman in Hollywood. "Even without make-up (and her coloring is not particularly fine) and with her hair unkempt, she is exquisite. What contour her face has—what bone that woman has! Perfect . . . ! !"

Garbo's dentist, incidentally, is another big Swede (that's all right, we're Swedish, too, and love all of our countrymen) who occupies offices directly above those of SCREEN BOOK. Garbo really opens up to him (??) and they talk merrily in their native tongue. We tried to get him to divulge something about Garbo's back molars but he was true to the tradition of silence and just gave us a look which might very well be sent to the laundry.

She names her pal, Marlene Dietrich, as the most glamorous woman in pictures. But Dolores herself merits that title.

A VALIANT PICTURE FOR A VALIANT STAR

BY MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

GLADYS GEORGE, famous American actress, who makes her screen debut in Paramount's "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," with Arline Judge, John Howard, Harry Carey, Dudley Digges, William Collier, Sr., Isabel Jewel, Charlene Wyatt, Jackie Moran, Maude Eburne, from Barry Benefield's best seller, produced and directed by WESLEY RUGGLES.

IT WAS a strange title for a book, "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," so when it came out some months ago I sent out and got it, and I read it through at one sitting.

Women are often brave, perhaps always brave; but to be valiant implies also gallantry and an indomitable spirit. And here were both a valiant woman and a remarkable story, the woman an outcast and a pariah in a small Louisiana town, but humorous and generous, the story one of pure courage and sturdy regeneration. It was evident that there was a great motion picture here. Carrie had no illusions. If the French half of her was cautious the Irish half would dare anything, and had. But the picture began, of course, when one day a small boy with two buckeyes in a treasure box wandered into that secret garden of hers and told her she was not bad; and Carrie promptly fell in love with him.

Here was everything for a picture, humor and pathos and deep human understanding. There was nothing mawkish about Carrie. Sometimes she told herself she was crazy, and sometimes that she was an old fool, but her love for this boy and later on for a small waif of a girl is the very essence of womanhood. For the time came when Carrie had to plan so that she could face them both without shame, and the picture is a story of that struggle.

I intend to see the picture, of course. I want to see Carrie leaving behind her Cemetery Road and the easy money of her past, and escaping into a life where as she says she will go straight if she has to sling dishes in a restaurant. And I want to see her with her waifs that incongruous three against the world, and watch them slowly and successfully conquering that world. Also I want to see Gladys George as Carrie. I know her work, which is that of a fine dramatic artist, and her own story, which is one of ups and downs, and for a long time mostly downs.

SHE HAS a long record of achievement behind her. She narrowly escaped being born in a theater, for her parents were actors. She was on the stage herself at the age of three, and as a youngster in small towns paraded the streets with a sandwich board which said: "Wouldn't you like to see me tonight at ——— Theater?" It is quite typical of her life that she got her first real chance while nursing a badly broken nose, and not surprising that after almost seven hundred riotously successful appearances as the star of "Personal Appearance," some one took a plane and signed her up for Carrie in this picture.

She will play it with skill, understanding and honesty, for Carrie was always honest, even with herself. But above all she will play it as she has lived, valiantly, with courage and an indomitable spirit.

Are you as strict as your doctor in choosing a laxative?

TODAY, the doctor studies "Prevention" as closely as anything in his profession. He tries to guard his patients from even a single error which may affect their health.

Before approving a laxative, for instance, he sets up a strict standard of requirements which must be fully met. This code is printed below, point by point. And every point is important.

WHAT DOCTORS DEMAND OF A LAXATIVE:

It should be dependable.
It should be mild and gentle.
It should be thorough.
Its merit should be proven by the test of time.
It should not form a habit.
It should not over-act.
It should not cause stomach pains.
It should not nauseate, or upset digestion.

EX-LAX CHECKS ON EVERY POINT

You need not memorize the list above. But remember this one fact: Ex-Lax checks on every point the doctor looks for. Physicians everywhere use Ex-Lax in their own homes. For over 30 years, mothers have given it to their children with perfect trust. Since Ex-Lax was first introduced, many laxatives have come and gone. Yet Ex-Lax remains the outstanding leader...the largest-selling laxative in the world.

A REAL PLEASURE TO TAKE

Try Ex-Lax the next time you need a laxative and see how accurately it meets the doctor's requirements. It is gentle. It is thorough. It is not upsetting. Not nauseating. Not habit-forming—no increased dosage necessary.

Ex-Lax tastes just like pure, delicious chocolate. It's pleasant for anyone to take, especially the youngsters. And it is equally effective for children and grown-ups.

At all drug stores in 10c and 25c sizes. Or write for free sample to Ex-Lax, Dep.F.G.106 P. O. Box 170, Times-Plaza Sta., Brooklyn, N.Y.

MARION DAVIES CONTEST WINNERS!

Marion worked with a fractured rib received in doing strenuous dances for Cain and Mabel, her newest picture. It's the best film she's made, say our key-holers. Marion plays a waitress—prize-fighter Clark Gable's sweetheart. The hilarious story is from an H. C. Witwer slang classic

"DELUGE" is the best description of the manner in which the entries to the Marion Davies Contest poured in. Marion's fans write in from all parts of the country—many thousands of them—such an amazing number, in fact, that the judges burned the midnight oil, yet couldn't examine all the submissions in time to publish the winners' names in the September issue.

The judges, whose decision is final, have chosen the following entries as most deserving the cash awards, and the checks are now being mailed:

1st Prize—$50.00. Mrs. Geo. Beecher, 309 No. 7th St., Marshalltown, Iowa.

2nd Prize—$25.00. Mr. Edwin J. Kissel, Y. M. C. A., Akron, Ohio.

THE PICTURE EVERY WOMAN WILL WANT SOME MAN TO SEE

If you know of anything more important than the female of the species in the world's scheme of things, then you can dispute our action in awarding this new Kay Francis picture runaway honors as the outstanding photoplay of the month. See it and you will know why woman critics unite in calling it the greatest picture of its kind since "Stella Dallas"—even greater, perhaps, because of its modern viewpoint and open honesty in considering a love problem women in the day of "Stella Dallas" kept padlocked in their hearts. The role of a mother, caught in the turmoil of a love so desperate that she must break another woman's heart or her own, is valiantly performed by

THE PICTURE OF THE MONTH

Only to a world of advancing social ideas would the screen dare present so fearlessly candid a drama. And only for a public whose tastes have been keyed to a higher entertainment level could Warner Bros. have included it in that remarkable succession of new-season pictures which has already given us "The Green Pastures" and "Anthony Adverse." A happy movie season is indeed in store for us with assurance from trustworthy sources that Warner Bros. have issued confidential orders that the same standard of excellence be adhered to in the production of Marion Davies and Clark Gable's "Cain and Mabel"; "Charge of the Light Brigade," with Errol Flynn and Olivia de Havilland; Lloyd C. Douglas' celebrated best-seller, "Green Light," and other forthcoming pictures.

MYSELF As I See Me . . .

. . . Jane Withers

Janie even laughs at herself in that red wig and I-fell-into-the-flour-barrel makeup. She considered herself fat—until she drove Lotus, the hippopotamus!

WELL, ever since Bright Eyes, people seem a little bit surprised that I play with dolls instead of machine guns . . . I guess I AM a tomboy, but I even know boys who like to play girls' games, so why shouldn't a girl play boys' games? But honest, I take care of my own bedroom and playroom and pets and dolls just like all girls, and Mother says I'm NOT a brat . . . even though sometimes I'm naughty, like the time I pulled some buttons off my dresses, so they'd all end up on lawyer, because Jackie Searl said he wanted to be one when he grew up . . .

Friday's my lucky day, even when it's the thirteenth . . . I got my contract on a Friday, and Bosco, my monkey, and Danky, my dog, and my first real Indian doll from Mr. Cobb . . . and I met Jackie on a Friday, too . . .

Some people think it's work, to make pictures, but I think it's heaps of FUN, on account of there are always a lot of people to play with, and I get to do desperate and daring things, and when I'm good, Mother lets me make gingerbread cookies after we get home, and I twist them in hotcha dancing poses, and they taste lots better that way.

The only thing I don't like about making pictures is the last day—just when you get to know everybody real well and they get to know your games and I get to know theirs, why then it's all over, and it makes me sad. And then, the best thing that ever happened to me, when they let me be a real circus clown just for one night with the Al G. Barnes Circus in Santa Barbara, well, they might not have let me, if I wasn't in pictures.

NO MATTER what your age, size, type or color you have an opportunity to win a cash award and recognition as the double of a movie player—merely by sending in a picture of yourself!

Whether you're a grandmother, like May Robson—or a shaggy-haired boy with a few missing teeth, like Alfalfa of "Our Gang"—or a middle-aged man, like Lewis Stone—or a pretty blonde, like Mary Carlisle—or a young man, like Frank Albertson, you are eligible.

Perhaps you resemble one of our most famous stars, or maybe you look like one of the lesser-known featured players. It makes no difference—you are equally welcome to join this contest to find doubles for movie actors. Remember, too, that Chinese Anna May Wong and Keye Luke—and Negroes Stepin Fetchit, Paul Robeson and Louise Beavers—as well as Eskimo Mala are popular screen players. Have they doubles in their screen audience?

If you wish to emphasize your likeness to the player you resemble, that's your privilege. If you wish, pose for your snapshot or picture in the way that is characteristic of the star. That's not necessary, however.

Since every conceivable type of person is represented on the screen, it seems almost a foregone conclusion that you can find your own double in the ranks of movie players.

Go to your mirror—study your face. Perhaps you have one feature that marks your similarity to an actor or actress. Does it show in photographs? If it does—send in that photograph today—to the Doubles Contest Editor, SCREEN BOOK Magazine, Hollywood, Calif.

CONTEST RULES

1. Any man, woman or child is eligible—and welcome!—to enter a photograph in this contest, except employees of Screen Book or anyone who has accepted pay for doubling for movie players.

2. The winners are to be judged solely by their likeness to current screen personalities, selected by the editorial staff of Screen Book. The judges' decisions are to be final.

3. The contest closes midnight, October 10, 1936, and all eligible entries will bear postmark on or prior to that time.

4. In case of a tie, duplicate prizes will be awarded.

5. No photos can be returned, and no correspondence entered into regarding them.

6. Mail your photo with filled-in coupon attached, or facsimile, to Doubles Contest Editor, Screen Book Magazine, Hollywood, Calif.

YOU can't help feeling sorry for her —the girl who seems to be "in wrong" with everyone.

She's pretty — but men avoid her. She's good company—but girls let her alone. She's simply out of things. Why?

Well, bluntly, because underarm perspiration odor makes her unpleasant to be near.

And the pity of it is, she has nobody to blame but herself. For it's so easy, these days, to keep the underarms fresh, free from odor all day long. With Mum!

It takes just half a minute to use Mum. And you can use it any time—before dressing or afterwards. Mum is harmless to clothing, you know.

It's soothing to the skin, too. You can use it right after shaving the underarms.

The daily Mum habit will prevent every trace of underarm odor without preventing perspiration itself. Get this helpful habit—it pays socially! Bristol-Myers, Inc., 630 Fifth Avenue, New York.

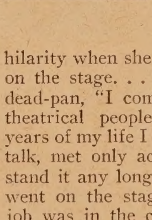
"DEAD PAN" BRODERICK

This isn't a "handy"—nor a new kind of movie clinch. It's just Helen, testing make-up man Lou Hippe's patience—



HELEN BRODERICK . . . . one of Hollywood's most popular wise-cracking funsters . . . beats her own record for hilarity when she explains why she went on the stage. . . . "You see," she says, dead-pan, "I come from a long line of theatrical people. The first fourteen years of my life I heard nothing but stage talk, met only actors. Then I couldn't stand it any longer so I ran away—and went on the stage!" . . . Helen's first job was in the chorus . . . spent eight years dancing and singing . . . in her spare time convulsing the gang back stage until they persuaded her to try comedy for the benefit of the paying customers . . . she did and was soon carried to the top in a long series of Broadway comedies and musicals . . . back in her chorus days she met a young actor named Lester Crawford . . . and married him . . . this was twenty-five years ago and she solemnly announces she thinks their marriage will last . . . they have one son, Broderick Crawford who inherits the parental theatrical ambitions . . . several years ago she starred on the stage in Fifty Million Frenchmen and came to Hollywood to make the screen version of this hit . . . but returned to New York . . . starred with the Astaires and Frank Morgan in The Band Wagon and topped her own record for smash hits in As Thousands Cheer which ran two years! . . . returned to Hollywood to appear with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in Top Hat, accepted a contract from RKO-Radio and has been there ever since . . . is in the current Astaire-Rogers musical, Swing Time . . . Miss Broderick is a brilliant conversationalist . . . her dry comment convulses her fellow workers during the making of a picture . . . as she sits on the sidelines in the inevitable old-fashioned rocking chair, knitting the inevitable bright afghan.

"How about a date tonight, baby?" growls Spanky to June Lang. He's been acting since he wore triangular trousers and has graduated into the car-with-chauffeur class for taking June out. They're in love—and actually going together! . . .

AUTUMN—the leaves are falling, and so are the young stars—for each other. In fact, it's quite a hectic thing keeping up with what really is—and what "reely" is. You see, the studio publicity departments get all worked up over a boy and girl team in one of their pictures and immediately have them romancing—usually much to the surprise of the two involved. In spite of everything, Eleanore Whitney and Johnny Downs are NOT "twoing," nor are James Blakeley and Olivia de Havilland. On the other hand, to balance things a bit Cecelia Parker and Eric Linden, a team on the screen, are definitely a team off-screen as well.

After a few hectic months of indecision, we've finally pinned Robert Kent down and, at present, his romantic inclinations are filed safely away under the A's.

Astrid Allwyn is the gal, and, if you don't think it's the McCoy, sneak up on 'em some time when they're just sighing their way out of a moonlight waltz at a local dancery.

For a long time, after his arrival in pictures, Kent stayed home nights penning pensive epistles to a mysterious young lady who had the eastern option on his affections. In fact, all through his first picture, Bob made definite plans to return East to visit The Girl as soon as the epic was finished. But a pair of bum bicuspids decreed that he stay right here and spend his vacation in the dentist's chair.

Came Shirley Temple's new picture, Bowery Princess, with Bob playing romantic foil to Astrid and Delma Byron. There was something about that Byron lass . . . anyhow, Kent stayed home less and his brand new fountain pen began to show signs of rust, just a little around the edges.

With the picture finished, the cast and crew celebrated with a party on the sound stage. Bob and Astrid reached for the same sandwich at the same time. Well, there was something about that Allwyn girl . . . There still is, and, these days, it's mostly Kent.

Then there's John Howard and petite Margo looking like that at each other over their boiled eggs and potato salad, in the Paramount Cafe; and Fred MacMurray retaining that blissful look as he lunches with his new wife at the same studio restaurant.

But the hottest romance of the new season—well, [Continued on page 95]

If you think the Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers dance sequences are a cinch, the fact that she needs two dresses for each sequence should make you think differently—one alone simply can't stand the gaff, which usually goes on for two days. Of course Ginger can—but filmy chiffon is not the stuff this little girl is made of.

Norman Foster and Claudette Colbert first met in London on The Barker stage. They married. They divorced. He wed Sally Blane, she wed Joel Pressman. Now they broadcast The Barker with Walter Huston. Strange Hollywood!

Everywhere-present Cameraman Rhodes catches Carole Lombard and Clark Gable going to see Romeo and Juliet

—Rhodes

Somewhat of a scoop is this photo of Warner Baxter and wife Winifred Bryson, who once was an actress—and a pretty one! Scene: Opening of Otto Kruger's play, Parnell, which Crawford and Gable will film photograph all their important scenes with her. About her work Miss Crawford grows "seriouser and seriouser!"

A SPECIAL PRINT of the picture San Francisco, minus the earthquake scenes, and showing only the aftermath fire was made for San Francisco theaters. Because to this day, in the Golden Gate city when you ask them about their big earthquake they say: "Oh, you mean the fire?" They are very, very sensitive, and never like to own up to the jitters.

PETER LORRE, foreign horror expert, has long been a wrestling fan, and some time ago when Man Mountain Dean was in Hollywood Peter wrote a note asking for the mat-man's autograph. He was much surprised (as even you and I) when he received a very dignified answer written by a secretary asking Mr. Lorre to phone for an appointment and Mr. Dean would be very happy to personally give his autograph. More for a gag than anything Peter followed the suggestion and found himself face to face with the burly one. As he was about to leave with the autograph in his pocket Dean said: "Wait a minute! Maybe you're someone whose autograph I should have," "Maybe I am," and Peter proceeded to tell who he was. "No, I don't think so," said Mr. Dean, and his beard waved in the breeze as Mr. Lorre hurriedly shut the door.

WHY WAS IT that there were so few full-length shots of Leslie Howard as Romeo? Why, when he was shown from stem to stern, was he pretty well covered with a cape? Forsooth, it must be that his calves aren't all that a Romeo's calves should be. Nor would the dignified Mr. Howard submit to the indignity of cotton batting in the sock. You'd be surprised to know the number of actors who do go in for that when they're in a tight spot!

EVERYONE HAS BEEN extremely interested in the Loretta Young-Eddie Sutherland romance, and though Loretta has stated that there will be no marriage for her now or in the near future, we wonder. Loretta's instinct for a family is strong as the one comment about the break-up of her marriage to Grant Withers indicates: "Isn't it too bad I don't have a baby! I could have it to play with now." On numerous occasions she has tried to adopt a baby but each time has allowed her family to talk her out of it. Her keen maternal urge was further evidenced recently on the Ramona location in the San Jacinto mountains. At great risk to herself she saved the life of a little girl who was playing the scene with her. When a fine netting stretched above them burst into flames and sank burning around them, everyone dashed for safety. Only Loretta stopped to pick up the child and carry her away from the flames. Loretta's further domesticity is also evidenced in love for sewing and cooking. During her illness she made breakfast jackets for her mother and sisters, and six slips for herself. She likes, especially to sew and shop for Georgiana Belzer, her twelve-year-old half-sister.

What? Paul Whiteman dating Venita Varden, who promised to love, honor and obey Jack Oakie? Wrong again—it's really Jack but he's acquiring the chins and girth that make Paul unique. Have a grapefruit for dinner, Mr. Oakie?

THOSE OAKIE FOLKS are here again! Jack Oakie and his Pigeon—Venita Varden to you—have had to move from their small apartment to a big house which they rented from John Halliday. You see, Jack's married sister and her children are now "taking" their Christmas present. Jack's yearly Christmas present to them is a trip out here each summer. Brings them all the way from Brooklyn so they can see Oakie at home! An in-law outing for Venita!

ONE OF HOLLYWOOD'S strangest friendships is that which exists between loquacious Bob Burns and silent Lew Ayres. Oldster and youngster, for some reason, are great admirers of each other and while Lew has been living at the beach, Bob Burns has moved into the Ayres house. The strange thing is that when Bob and Lew are together it is Lew who does all the talking and Bob who just listens.

FROM THE SIDELINES of Champagne Waltz where husband Frank Chapman is overseeing wife Gladys Swarthout: Director Eddie Sutherland calls "cut" and Frank Chapman nods in satisfaction—"That's the best scene we've done so far." Such a sideline husband might get in everybody's hair, except for the fact that he is there because Gladys says: "Without Frank I would never in the world be able to live through Hollywood." He is on hand not only for the daily picture-making routine, but for Swarthout portraits, Swarthout make-up, Swarthout stills, Swarthout publicity, Swarthout costumes—in other words, for Swarthout!

ORCHESTRA-LEADER JOHNNY GREEN'S divorce will be settled soon, and when it is you will be hearing more about a romance which may surprise some of you—Johnny Green and Ginger Rogers. They have been composing a song in collaboration, and you know what happens when two music lovers get together!

FOUR SINGING GERMANS, old beer drinking fellows, who had never been before a camera, were hired by Director Eddie Sutherland to take part in the Vienna scenes of Champagne Waltz, with Gladys Swarthout, Fred MacMurray and Frank Forest. They were stolid old fellows, and the scene showed the introduction of American jazz to Vienna. Eddie Sutherland wanted them to re-act with surprise, fright and frenzy. Hoping that it would do the trick he had a prop man stand behind them and shoot one of the loudest guns that they could find in the prop department. The gun boomed and the four singers didn't turn a hair! "After singing all day until they were practically

Can't chafe

Because the sides of Kotex are cushioned in a special, soft, downy cotton—thus chafing and irritation are prevented. Thus Wondersoft Kotex provides lasting comfort and freedom. But sides only are cushioned—the center surface is left free to absorb.

Can't fail

Because Kotex has a special "Equalizer" center whose channels guide moisture evenly the whole length of the pad. Gives "body" but not bulk—prevents twisting and roping. The filler of Kotex is actually 5 TIMES more absorbent than cotton.

Can't show

Because the ends of Kotex are not only rounded, but flattened and tapered besides. Absolute invisibility. Even the sheerest dress, the closest-fitting gown, reveals no telltale lines or wrinkles.

THREE TYPES OF KOTEX

1. REGULAR — IN THE BLUE BOX — For the ordinary needs of most women.
2. JUNIOR — IN THE GREEN BOX — Somewhat narrower—when less protection is needed.
3. SUPER — IN THE BROWN BOX — Extra layers give extra protection, yet no longer or wider than Regular.

WHAT an affliction Piles are! What a tax, physically and mentally. Piles not only cause you untold torture, but they make you look the suffering you feel.

Piles can take various forms — internal or external, itching or painful, bleeding or non-bleeding—but whatever form they take, they play havoc with your health, strength and efficiency.

A Scientific Formula

Real relief for the distress due to Piles is to be had in Pazo Ointment. Pazo acts quickly and definitely. Pazo stops pain and itching. It assures comfort, day and night.

Pazo is reliable because it is threefold in effect. First, it is soothing, which tends to relieve soreness and inflammation. Second, it is lubricating, which tends to soften hard parts and also to make passage easy. Third, it is astringent, which tends to reduce swollen parts and to stop bleeding.

Real Results

Pazo comes in Collapsible Tube with Detachable Pile Pipe which permits application high up in rectum where it reaches and thoroughly covers affected parts. Pazo also now comes in suppository form. Pazo Suppositories are Pazo Ointment, simply in suppository form. Those who prefer suppositories will find Pazo the most satisfactory.

THE CREAM OF THE CAKE CROP!

COULD you pack suitcases so that each frock may be lifted out a day later fresh and free from wrinkles—find room for one more tiny hat in the already filled hat box—discard the odds and ends that accumulate in closets and drawers so your personal belongings may be moved into another apartment during your absence—remind your husband not to forget his swimming trunks or toothbrush—add the final touches to a picnic hamper—while baking a cake that literally melts in your mouth?

Well, maybe you can do six things simultaneously if you insist, but here's the catch. Jane Wyatt accomplished all this right under my nose and didn't lose her sunny disposition for one instant! She even took time to cut me a piece of cake and give me her recipe before jumping into the car beside her attractive husband to be swept away for a week's motor trip to celebrate the completion of Lost Horizon.

minimum of space is traced to months of one night stands while receiving her stage training. Her ability as a cook may be traced indirectly to Edgar Ward, former tennis champion, who led Jane to the altar last November.

"Before I was married, I couldn't boil water," Jane laughed. "I was too wrapped up in my career to entertain domestic thoughts. But one day I found a cook book left by a former tenant in a kitchen drawer. The pictures looked most attractive and the recipes didn't sound half as formidable as I had expected. I decided to bake a cake just for fun, figuring I would have plenty of time to dispose of the results if they were too awful before Ed came home."

To make a long story short, friend husband disposed of said results—in large bites—and wistfully wished for more a few days later!

'HOUSECLEAN' YOUR SKIN

LOOSEN THOSE STUBBORN BLACKHEADS

A Penetrating Face Cream Is What You Need!

By Lady Esther

When it comes to your skin, be a good housekeeper! Don't be satisfied merely with surface cleansing. Get "into the corners."

You may not realize it, but many complexion woes are due to nothing else than imbedded dirt. This dirt may not be noticeable at first because it is buried quite deep in your skin. But it causes tiny bumps and rough patches which you can feel with your fingers.

Make the finger-tip test described to the right, and if you feel anything like tiny bumps or dry patches, you can be sure your pores are clogged and your skin dirty. This hidden, stubborn dirt, as it keeps on accumulating in the pores, causes, not only gray-looking skin, but enlarged pores, blackheads, dry patches and other unsightly blemishes.

Meets the Need!

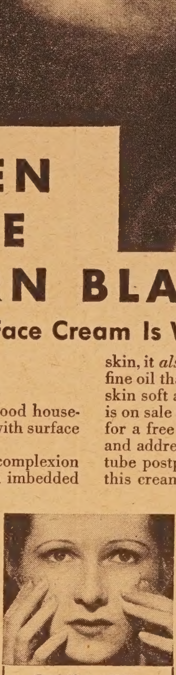
Lady Esther Face Cream adequately meets the situation because it is a penetrating face cream. Gently and soothingly, it penetrates your pores and there it "goes to work" on the waxy matter. It loosens it—breaks it up—and makes it easily removable.

When you have cleansed your skin with Lady Esther Face Cream, it shows it, both in the clearness and radiance of your skin and in the tingling sensation of freshness.

Lubricates Also!

As Lady Esther Face Cream cleanses your skin, it also lubricates it—resupplies it with a fine oil that overcomes dryness and keeps the skin soft and smooth. Lady Esther Face Cream is on sale at all drug and department stores, but for a free demonstration, mail me your name and address. I will at once send you a 7-days' tube postpaid and free. See for yourself how this cream works. See how deeply it gets into the pores, how thoroughly it cleanses your skin. Your cloth will reveal dirt that you never suspected lurked in your skin.

See also how soft and smooth and supple Lady Esther Face Cream leaves your skin. The results will literally amaze you. You will understand then why eight million women say that all their skins need is this one face cream.



Feel Those Little Bumps?

Pass your fingers over your whole face. Do you feel little bumps in your skin? Do you feel dry patches here and there? Little bumps or dry or scaly patches in your skin are a sign your pores are clogged and your skin needs "housecleaning."

Prove to Yourself!

With the free 7-days' tube of Lady Esther Face Cream, I will also send you all five shades of my Lady Esther Face Powder so you can see which is your most flattering shade and how Lady Esther Face Cream and Face Powder work together to give you perfect skin smoothness. Write me today.

(You can paste this on a penny postcard.) (26) FREE

SHOPPING WITH SUE

Here is what I learned about personal hygiene accessories. You can have complete confidence in these intimate items.

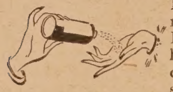
For Utmost Comfort

Perhaps a friend has told you about the pinless Kotex belt. It's truly a new design for living! Dainty secure clasps prevent slipping. The belt is flat and thin, adjusts to fit the figure. This gives self-balance—you can bend every-which-way without harness-like restraint! Yet this extra comfort and safety costs nothing extra. 2 types: Kotex Wonderform at 25c; De Luxe at 35c. "Cheap" belts can't compare, because inferior grades of elastic fray and wear out—make for the discomfort women dread.

For Personal Daintiness



If you've listened to the radio story of Mary Marlin, you've heard how Quest, the positive deodorant powder, assures all-day-long body freshness. And being unscented it can't interfere with your perfume. You'll want Quest for under-arms, feet, and on sanitary napkins—it doesn't clog pores or irritate the skin. Buy Quest, and you'll agree 35c is a small price for the personal daintiness women treasure.

For the Last Days

Here's something new that's gaining favor with many women. Invisible sanitary protection of the tampon type—and the name is Fibs. They are a product of the famous Kotex laboratories—the best recommendation I know for hygienic safety. Perhaps you'll want to try Fibs when less protection is needed. They're absolutely secure—may be carried in your purse for emergencies. Box of 12 is 25c.

A Gift For You! In fact, three gifts. One is a booklet by a physician, "Facts about Menstruation". The others are "Marjorie May's 12th Birthday" (for girls of 12) and "Marjorie May Learns About Life" (for girls in their teens). They give facts in a simple, motherly manner for you to tell your daughter. All are free—write for the ones you want. Room 1402, 919 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago.

Just one of the entertaining scenes from Gaumont-British's clever Seven Sinners, starring Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings. Too Much Glamour, Says She

IT'S about time the stars "came down to earth" and all this glamour business vanished. What folks want these days is naturalness! Good, common, everyday naturalness.

Wouldn't it be great if we could see Joan Crawford, after a swim with hair stringing down, or be able to wear some of those fantastic clothes in public without looking like a walking fashion plate?

And, hasn't Dietrich ever stumbled on a chair or does she always manage to have that perfect "glide?"

On the screen, why not have the beauties awaken with their hair in curlers and slabs of cold cream covering their faces?

Ah! the wonder of it, the very wonder of it, that never has there been a movie heroine, who wore glasses.

Oh, I could go on forever, but what's the use, glamour and naturalness will always be opponents. Or, maybe I'm wrong, perhaps naturalness will defeat glamour and when it does I can let the boy-friend see others besides Shirley Temple and Wallace Beery! —Doris de Fabry, 52 Beacon St., Newark, N. J.

She Approves of It

EACH time I go near a beauty parlor and see the many young women engaged in making Mrs. So-and-So more attractive to her husband, and Miss This or That more appealing to her fiancé, I wonder if these busy young ladies ever stop to think that they owe their jobs to the Joan Crawfords, Jean Harlows and Norma Shearers of the screen. With their well groomed appearance, immaculately kept hands, poise and glamour, these stars have done more toward making the women all over the world beauty conscious than any other single agency. How many women do not come out from a Crawford picture conscious that they need a new permanent or a manicure? How many girls after hearing their Tommy or Johnny admire Norma Shearer's latest coiffure do not hurry next day to their favorite hair dresser to have theirs fixed the same way? Advertisers know that the picture of Jean Harlow with a few words telling why she prefers the particular soap or powder will send Mary or Helen faster to the drugstore to get a cake or box, than anything he can write in three pages of advertisement.

Dozens and dozens of orchids to the beautiful Hollywood ladies who have done so much toward creating employment for millions outside the studios.—Gladys E. Conrad, Box 117, Playa, Mayaguez, Puerto Rico.

A Plea for Fewer Films

AFTER fifteen years in the mercantile and business field, where the quality versus quantity problem is discussed so often, it interests me to see it bobbing up now in the world of motion pictures under the heading of double feature or single feature bills.

Successful mercantile men have only one answer: "Quality." Clothiers say: "Women don't remember what they paid for the dress that wears well and retains its fit. They just remember that it was satisfactory." Automobile salesmen tell you: "If a car doesn't stand up, the owner will forget the low price and only recall that your make didn't last."

There's a tip for the movie world in the above bagatelle of experience. One good picture, shown with a news reel and a short, will linger in the minds as a fine show. A four hour program, with two mediocre pictures (even at a lower price) will dull the movie appetite.—Marie Luther, 400 South F Street, Madera, Calif.

A Collector Tips You Off

IT IS almost five years since I started collecting autographed pictures of the movie stars and my collection of over two hundred—is my greatest pride and joy. Perhaps SCREEN BOOK readers would be interested in knowing a little about them. The photos that were autographed to me personally were those from Jean Harlow, Eleanor Powell, Joan Crawford, Carole Lombard, Dick Powell, Una Merkel, Alice Faye, Bette Davis and a few more from featured players. The loveliest photos that I have are those of Jean Harlow, Joan Crawford, Carole Lombard, Ann Sothern, Ginger Rogers, Frances Dee, and Marlene Dietrich. The shortest of time in which I received a photo occurred—when I sent for Dick Powell's. That took only four days. It was exactly one year to a day before Miriam Hopkins' reached me. (There's a new slant on Dick and Miriam.)—Nell Ljutic, 127-37th Street, Richmond, Calif.

A Complaint About Clothes

Claudette COLBERT's BROTHER SAYS . . . !

You'll enjoy his telling tales out of school on Claudette

A CHUBBY little girl with big brown eyes, a doll tucked under her arm, trudging up to Central Park to "play Indian" with the boys—

The sort of little girl who said, "I'm not scared" when she was put on the end of a crack-the-whip line that glided with breath-taking speed across the ice of a park lagoon—

A thirteen-year-old girl who took over the job of camp cook so that she could stay in the Catskills with her brother and two of his boy friends—

A starry-eyed girl of sixteen, thrilling over her first "prom"—

The world now knows her as Claudette Colbert, glamorous screen star. But to her brother Charlie, she is still the kid sister. And it was this kid sister of whom he talked to me one day recently—talked proudly, as any brother might talk of a sister who has accomplished what Claudette has accomplished. He used no high-powered adjectives to describe her. Instead, he told me amusing anecdotes of her childhood and young womanhood—anecdotes which reveal a side of Claudette that you have never heard about before, and go a long way toward explaining why she is such a wholesome, well-balanced, natural person.

"Claudette always insists that she was brought up the rough way," says Charles Wendling. (He uses the name Wendling because so many people found the

The FOUR UNSEEN WOMEN in Bob Taylor's LIFE!

Find out about these four women who are so important to Bob, yet are unknown to his admirers

Barbara Stanwyck helps Bob greet his mother upon her return from a summer visit to their native Nebraska. Barbara, incidentally, is NOT one of the unseen women in this story

By
Katharine Hartley

This pretty girl lives at Bob's house—who is she?

And this is Ida—whom Bob also adores

Do you want to know who the fourth is? Read on . . .

ROBERT TAYLOR may be one big frivolous romantic heart-beat to the rest of the world, but to Eva, Ruth, Virginia and Ida he is nothing of the kind. To them he is just Papa . . . Man of the House . . . a beardless Santa Claus!

But let me hasten to explain. Eva, Ruth, Virginia and Ida are not children. They are, in the order mentioned: Bob's grandmother, 84; Bob's mother, 49; Bob's secretary, 24; and the last, age unknown, the maid. These four women all live together in one very big and very lovely house in Beverly Hills. Bob lives in another Beverly Hills house, just six blocks away. They don't see him often—and never for more than a few minutes at a time—but nevertheless it is Bob who runs their house, their purchases, their leisure, their work and their lives. And what's more he does so by their own very special request!

This is what might be called a Turnabout in Hollywood. Since time immemorial it is the families who have been running young stars—not vice versa. Yet, here is one boy who has never once been put on the parental carpet, and who has hardly ever had to account for anything, romantic or careerish, to his peers; who has never even been bothered by a family finger prodding into his celluloid pie. His mother is one of those unusual women who says: "If Robert had gone into the banking business as he planned, I would never have meddled. Why should I be meddlesome now?" Strictly feminine, strictly adoring, she goes even one step further, and seeks his guidance rather than depending on her own judgment. Which should give you a pretty good idea of the kind of fellow he is . . . sympathetic, dependable, with broad shoulders that not only fill a suit well but offer, also, something comfortable to lean upon.

But I can best tell you about this unique and pleasant relationship by recounting some of the goings-on—between Bob's house and his Annex—which Bob has just now recounted to me.

"My greatest problem is in trying to impress them with the fact that they don't have to 'scrimp'. I don't know . . . it's a funny thing . . . you know we always had money at home . . . but in spite of that you should see the way they treat a dollar bill now! I do believe they mentally wrap it in cotton! Bob grinned, and there was a lightly accusing look in his eyes. "I guess they have been reading too many stories about how actors always end up as paupers. They're afraid it might happen to me.

"Anyway, and believe it or not, the other night I was talking to Mother on the phone and I suggested that she go to the movies. And do you know what she said? 'But Buddy, do you think I ought to? I went just a couple of days ago . . . Tuesday.' Wait! That isn't the end of it. I finally persuaded her that was nonsense and of course she should go. I told her to go to the Chinese Theatre . . . there was a good picture there. She said, 'Well, I'll go somewhere. But not to the Chinese . . . it's 55 cents there!'" Bob shook his head. "Now you figure it out for yourself."

"Even Grandmother's got it. Not long ago on Mother's birthday, Barbara Stanwyck sent her a beautiful plant, about this high"—Bob measured up to his waist—"with great big red blossoms on it. After the blossoms had fallen off, about a week later, the gardener told Grandmother that the plant could be transplanted to the garden for the next season. The garden, incidentally is Grandmother's pride and joy.

"WELL, the plant was taken out of the pot and put to bed outside, and then a few days after that the gardener came in with the sad news that it would have to have some special attention, pruning and what not, at a nursery. This was about six in the evening, as I found out later, and though I usually stop by at that time, that night I was held late at the studio, so went right home. Got home about nine. I was just taking off my make-up when the butler went to answer the doorbell and there was Grandmother—and in such a dither. She must see me at once. So I went down, and she was all out of breath—she had run, not walked over—and she eventually told me the predicament. 'The thing is, Buddy,' she said—they all call me 'Buddy'—'that it's going to cost quite a bit of money to have it fixed. That's why I wanted to ask you about it first. It's really going to be expensive.'

"'How expensive?' I asked, thinking that maybe it was an orchid plant after all.

"'A dollar and a half. Now if you don't think it's worth it, you just . . .'

"I picked her up—she's only as big as a sneeze, and carried her out to the dining room where I

About that BLONDELL POWELL Marr

This exclusive story tells you what Joan and Dick have to say iage!

SEPTEMBER 4, Joan Blondell's decree of divorce is final. The last traces of "Maggie's First False Step" removed. The last, that is, except for her two-year-old son, Norman Scott Barnes, and a beautiful friendship with her ex-husband, George Barnes.

The question now before the house—and fans the world over—is, "Will she and Dick Powell marry?"

She and Dick, as we used to say in Sapp's Corners, have been keeping steady company for a year now. In Sapp's Corners when a girl and feller go steady that long usually the little church is just around the corner and they prefer listening to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March to those of the Rhumba. But that's in Sapp's Corners. This is Hollywood.

Of course, six months later the wife may be triumphantly—and the husband lugubriously — singing "Mama Goes Where Papa Goes or Papa Don't Go Out Tonight" instead of the more haunting notes of "Moonburn." That, however, is another story.

I've known Joan and Dick intimately ever since they first hit Hollywood. And they didn't hit the Hollywood line together, either. I've enjoyed the intimate friendship and confidence of both and I like to think, although I'm probably laboring under a delusion, that they're as fond of me as I am of them.

At any rate, when I ask them—not for publication—if they're going to be wed, they chorus "We Don't Know"—and I think they're telling the truth. Joan doesn't know, Dick doesn't know, I don't know and even Daisy (Who Tells All) doesn't know.

Of course, Joan is a creature of impulses and there's no telling when she may (although I hasten to add, she never has) throw a dead cat in his face one minute and then say "YES!" the next. But that, too, is another story. In fact, you might even say it's only a possibility.

Since they don't know all anyone can do is speculate. Knowing them as I do, I'll proceed to speculate.

Despite her impulsiveness and capriciousness, Joan has a very level head on her shoulders. So has Dick. Both of them have been married once and it didn't take. They'll be darned sure before they take the step (not the veil, dearies) a second time that it will take. And there are a lot of things to be considered.

On account of her impulsiveness, Joan is pretty likely to plunge into whatever intrigues her fancy without stopping to consider the facts. I think when she married George she fondly believed love and marriage were synonymous, and that the definition of either was "one long sweet dream." She never makes the same mistake twice, though. I can't say the same for Dick. I have seen him get stung over and over and over when buying furniture by not following my advice. Instead of profiting by his mistakes, he goes right on buying what pleases him instead of what I tell him to buy.

They have their careers to consider.

"It's one thing for each of us to have a career when we're single," Joan explained. "Both of us have our own homes. If I've had a particularly trying day at the studio, when I get home I can call Dick and say, 'Hello, dear. How are you? I'm all fagged out. I've told the servants to hold dinner for another hour until I bathe and change clothes. Then I'm going to bed. Do you mind not coming over tonight?' "

"It isn't only her," Dick put in. "Iron man though I am, sometimes even I am worn out at night. The way things are now I can call her and say, 'Honey, I'm dead. Do you mind if I don't see you tonight?' "

"IF WE'RE married," Joan took up the theme again, "We'd have one home. Perhaps if I were tired and told the servants to delay dinner an hour while I bathed and changed, Dick might raise the roof."

"I would not!" Dick stated indignantly, at the same time taking possession of her hand.

"I don't think he would," Joan went on to me, ignoring the interruption, "but he's only human like the rest of us. Perhaps he hadn't been working that day. He might have been swimming or playing badminton and be hungry as the devil. If I came home tired he probably would try to comfort and soothe me but, on the other hand, he might say, 'For heaven's sake, stop being a prima donna. I work just as hard as you do and I don't carry on like that!' "

And that, leave an outsider inform you, is when the fun would start.

"It could be the other way around, too," Joan continued. "Perhaps both of us had worked hard—on different pictures—and each of us had had not only a hard day but a trying one. We'd come home with nerves on edge, dispositions ragged, and be at each other's throats before we realized it."

"Aw, honey—" Dick began.

"It isn't only us," Joan explained. "It's every couple where both are working."

Dick has always said he would love nothing better than to have Joan retire from the screen and be simply Mrs. Powell. He could, in the words of Nellie, The Beautiful Cloak Model, "Support her in the manner to which she is accustomed"—and he would be glad to.

But the theatre is in Joan's bones. She'd never be satisfied doing anything but acting. She'll be doddering around a stage when she's ninety.

THEIR temperaments are so different. Dick is as steady and easy-going as the trade winds. Joan is as volatile—as moody—as a Seidlitz powder in a glass of warm water. [Continued on page 97]

GEORGE RAFT Finds A New Young LOVE

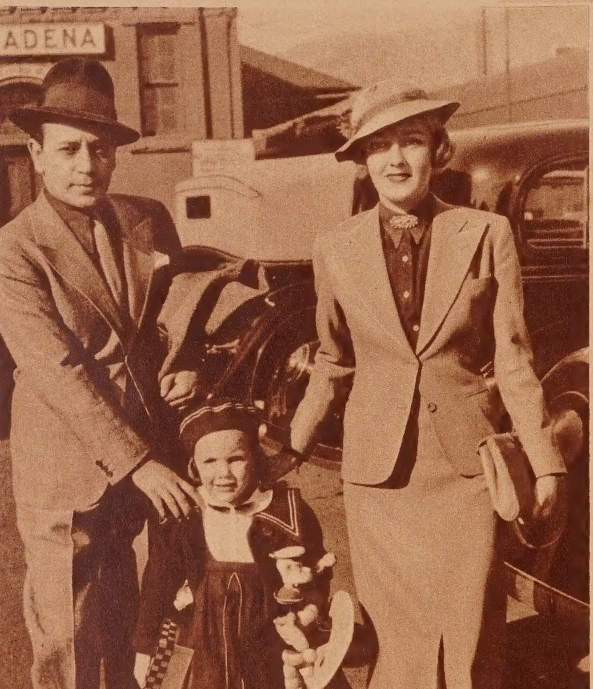
He doesn't take her out dancing or to night clubs—there have been no romance rumors, but they admit they're mad about one another



George welcomes Virginia Pine and her daughter Joan back from a long vacation. He seems to be a lone wolf—so far as the ladies are concerned—when they're away

YOU think you know your Hollywood, don't you? Take George Raft, for instance, dark, dangerous-looking George—dashing, devil-may-care. George, whose suits fit him as though he had been melted and poured into them. After his day's work at the studio, playing convicts or gangsters or making torrid love, you have a picture of George stepping into his electric-blue limousine, gardenia in his buttonhole, hat at jaunty angle, setting forth to keep some romantic rendezvous or engage in some of the sophisticated pleasures of Hollywood's night life.

But you perhaps know as little of his habits as you do of his past . . . his boyhood in the tenement district of New York, his early marriage and the death of his young wife who left him with a three-weeks'-old son. He never had an opportunity to know the child because he was poor, struggling for recognition as a dancer, which necessitated a good deal of traveling. Since he could make no home for his son, George's mother raised the boy. And George never really became acquainted with him until recently. He is in his teens and attends military school.

George knew he was missing something, but life has a way of making up losses.

Let's follow George as he leaves the studio! Without asking directions his chauffeur drives straight to the most glittering candy shop on the Boulevard. Aha! What did you tell us? He is going to call on a lady, carrying a ten-pound box of marrons glacés or French bonbons. . . .

George leans over the showcase, frowning anxiously. It must be real romance that can upset the nonchalance and poise ten million fans admire, but at last he makes his decision. The lady has curious tastes in candy! He buys a huge chocolate kewpie with a red and gold tinsel bow about her tummy and carries it away triumphantly under his arm.

Still without direction the car draws up before a handsome apartment building. The doorman recognizes George as a constant visitor and salutes him. Lights are beginning to blossom in the California dusk. It is the hour when gorgeous screen stars don gold velvet lounging pajamas and satin tea gowns and romantic screen heroes drop into their modernistic apartments for cocktails. . . .

It is also the hour when little girls with feathery yellow hair and sleepy blue eyes sit in their high chairs regarding their supper bowls of cereal rebelliously. The bell rings, a door opens, footsteps and a cry of rapture, "Uncle Georgie Boy!"

This is the romance you were looking for! The rendezvous George Raft hurries away from his

Rosalind Russell tells HOW to GET RID of a RIVAL!

YOU have rivals. I have rivals. All God's chillun have rivals. The trouble is, most of us don't appreciate them. We don't use them; we abuse them. All that we want is to get rid of them. We don't see how they can help us.

Rosalind Russell is a bit smarter.

She has a positive liking for rivals—past, present and (she hopes) future. Clear-eyed, she sees what they can do for her. Clear-eyed, she sees the only lastingly effective way of combating them.

Intensely, she says, "Any girl who worries about a rival is a fool."

In cold type, that may sound like unwary egotism, something said just for effect. It isn't. Rosalind has a habit of meaning what she says. And she has reasons for meaning this.

Probe into those reasons, and you discover a Rosalind Russell you never knew before, a Rosalind Russell you like immensely as a person. You discover a girl who, when faced with rivals, does what most of us would like to do—but lack the foresight and courage to do.

She does not stoop to conquer. She rises.

"Rivalry is a strange thing"—to Rosalind. "If I ever let it get me down, it could do all kinds of damage. If I let it help me, it can be a constant inspiration—a source of ambition, achievement."

Not so long ago, she was an unknown in various small stock companies in the East. She had countless rivals—other stock-company actresses. Some were more popular than she was; some were more attractive; some knew more about stage technique. She stood a very small chance of surpassing them all, making audiences forget them. But [Continued on page 88]

Why MARY Has Mar

WHY has Mary Brian never married?

Wouldn't you suppose that the girl courted by Buddy Rogers, Gene Raymond, Russell Gleason, Rudy Vallée, Richard Dix, Dick Powell, Randolph Scott, Jack Oakie, Cary Grant (in course of time and in these gentlemen's, some of them, pre-matrimonial days) by every eligible bachelor in town would, in the normal course of emotional events, have married one of them?

Why is "The Prettiest Girl in Town," "The Most Popular Girl In Town" still unwed?

"Seems funny," folks say. "There must be some reason back of it."

For rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief, doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief, London men, New York men, Mid-Western men, business men, Babbits, poets, Romeos of all persuasion have laid siege to Mary's heart.

Mary has been "rumored engaged" to every Hollywood eligible mentioned from Buddy-to-begin-with to Cary Grant right now.

Flowers, puppy dogs, Persian kittens, candies, books, keepsakes of all kinds and values—her house overflows with tons and tons of cards inscribed in various handwritings, "To Mary, with love."

Mary has been seen everywhere for some ten years past—at the Grove, at the Troc, at the theatres, at Santa Anita, at the beaches, with Dick Powell, with Russell Gleason, with Jack Oakie, with Cary Grant, first this one and then that one. Columnists have carried hints, rumors, reports—and still carry them. It is notable, however, that no hint of scandal ever has touched her. And Mary, far more of a mystery than Garbo; Mary, her flower-decked heart incalculable; her dancing feet forming brief patterns, then dancing ever away—Mary has remained perennially gay and sweet and bright and popular and dated—and impervious.

Hollywood has thrashed the Mary-matter out both ways going and coming. It has been said that Mary is hard-hearted. It has been said that Mary is broken-hearted. They have said that she has too many beaux. They have said that she was, once, deeply in love and deeply disappointed in love and that she has, ever since, taken light love lightly.

They say that her head has been turned. They say that her head is set firmly on her shoulders. They say that she has no heart. They say that she has frittered her heart away, in little pieces. They have about run the gamut of gossip, speculation, head-shaking, lip-pursing—and still Mary's romances have run on apace, a Gene Raymond giving right of way to a Dick Powell, a Dick Powell to a Cary Grant, rumor-and-romance without end.

The only one who hasn't stood up in meeting to explain her state of single blessedness, though bachelor-besieged for some ten years—the only one who has remained silent on the subject is the only one who really knows the explanation—Mary herself.

WE DETERMINED to ask Mary to unveil the mystery of her own unassailable heart. We decided to make so bold as to say, "Why haven't you married, Mary? Why? Why? WHY?"

For which fell purpose I had tea with Mary the other day. We sat on the stone terrace of her charming Monterey house overlooking Toluca Lake. The house Mary designed and built herself. The house she shares with her mother and brother. The house wherein she is still "a girl at home" as she has been since childhood, as she has been ever since she played her first screen part of Wendy in Peter Pan.

Mary's honesty is one of her greatest charms. There is nothing affected, nothing coyly evasive, nothing self-consciously "glamorous" and set-apart about Mary. I thought, "This is why so many men

"I Love My HUSBAND

PRODUCERS may quail before her very decided ideas on what is best for Bette Davis, the actress (and she's usually right!) Interviewers may gasp over the vivid ideas of this bright young modern with the big blue eyes and the provocative red lips. But there's one man in Hollywood who isn't at all impressed by the fame and importance of Bette Davis, Academy prize-winner.

That's Harmon O. Nelson, her husband!

Bette told me, "Both Ham and I have always believed that it's possible for a couple to live in Hollywood without going in for the artificiality and show so often associated with stardom. With the help of Ham's sanity and good commonsense, I've proved this to myself—actresses can live like people!

"I couldn't be temperamental and movie-starrish at home even if I wanted to. Ham wouldn't stand for it. He'd walk out on me. If I ever feel like throwing dishes—and I guess every woman does, once in a while—I have to throw them at synthetic husbands in my pictures.

"Maybe that in itself," she observed impishly, "is good for my art. I have to save my acting for the screen!

"Someone once asked me," she added, "if stars should try to create glamour and excitement by living up to the exotic ideas some fans have of Hollywood. I wouldn't know the answer. I've never had a chance to find out!"

And the story of how Ham and Bette have kept Bette Davis, the Star, out of their marriage, making it one of Hollywood's gayest and most delightful unions, is a fascinating story that has never been published before.

Once she puts foot inside the rambling, New England-type home that is furnished with lovely antiques, bowls of flowers, and small "throw" rugs, Bette completely forgets the girl whose sharp personality captured a world audience in a series of startling rôles.

She receives friends, these late summer afternoons, out on a shaded front porch with only a green stretch of lawn and a white picket fence protecting her privacy from a busy boulevard in one of Hollywood's not-too-elegant districts.

No movie-star seclusion here! Small boys ride by on bicycles and call out, "Hi, Bette Davis!" as they pass. Conversation is sometimes made difficult by a roar of traffic. Being human, Bette threatens to move. It's significant that she pleads with Ham—"Aren't you getting just a little tired of all this racket?"

"We can't move," he shouts back across the porch. "Not yet." And that settles it, for Mr. Nelson is very much the master of his own house. As Bette wants it.

They still live under the unique arrangement they worked out back in the days when Ham was just a struggling young orchestra leader instead of one of the town's most popular bandmasters, as he is today. He pays half the expenses, she pays half. And even Hollywood, skeptical at first, admits now that the plan is a smashing success.

Their friends are not influential people, but writers, young business-folk—intelligent rather than professionally intellectual.

When Bette goes shopping, she will actually bring home bundles under her

Ham and Bette were married in 1932 (when she was twenty-four)—and they're still happy. This is a peep into their living room. Bette has time to wander about in her toeless sandals now that she's on a one-woman strike against her studio for a contract adjustment

"Because He DOESN'T Treat Me Like a STAR!"

How does he treat spirited and independent Bette Davis? You'll be surprised!

own arms. If you call her on the telephone, she's likely to answer herself, not barricading behind a battalion of butlers and secretaries. She isn't surrounded, as stars sometimes are, by an army of "stooges"—toadies who know how to laugh at her quips and to applaud her enthusiasms.

All this—the simplicity of her home and marriage—is part of Bette's own definite plan. "After all, we're called on to play simple human beings on the screen. How can we hope to do it successfully if we isolate ourselves in a Hollywood atmosphere, meeting only other actors and actresses in a make-believe world where good parts, top billing, and the latest bits of scandal are all that count?

"People made fun of me when I lived in a roadside auto camp one vacation and cooked, swept, cleaned, and kept house for my husband just as women do all over the world. I needed that experience, and because of the demands of my work, I had never been able to have it in Hollywood. I wanted it," she added definitely, "not only for my own good but also to prove to Ham that I could be a real wife in every sense of the word, not just a part-time wife whose job is pretty important to her, too.

"I travel by car, instead of by train or airplane, because it's fun to meet people all over the country—small-town hotel keepers, filling station men, and others. To be a good actress you have to know people. To be a happy person, I'd have to anyway!

"I go to little outlying theaters instead of the big ones, because I want to know what the average audiences like, what they clap for, what stupid artificialities they laugh at!

"I've learned too—I've argued for days with make-up men and technicians over little points in my pictures. There was a scene where I was supposed to be waked up in the middle of the night. They wanted me to wear a lovely make-up and look fresh as the dawn. I insisted upon towsled hair and a—" she demonstrated this, "—a sleepy look, and when they weren't looking, I rubbed off the make-up.

"Actresses should look like people, too!"

JUST then Ham came up the front walk with a school friend of his and Bette's at Cushing Academy, which they both attended back East. Only it turned out that he hadn't gone there with them. He had arrived as a freshman just as Bette graduated. "I can't bear it," she shrieked. "You're making me feel like an old woman!"

Immediately, reminiscences of Cushing Academy began. The teacher who had always been so severe but who was, they realized now, a fine influence, and a gentleman. Bette had just sent a telegram to the winner of the "Bette Davis Cup," presented each year for excellence in sports. She confided in an aside: "Some girls hate their school days. I adored mine. Perhaps I'd have disliked the usual, correct and formal girls' school, but Cushing is co-educational and sometimes I think I was happy just because Ham was there.

"I was 'his girl,' then, and I can still remember one day when he had a terrific battle with a fellow who'd been his enemy all through school. They fought in the gym, which was right under the room where I was attempting to have my dancing lesson. I'd wave my arms and kick my legs and smile prettily, and all the time I kept hearing these awful sloshing noises and tremendous thumps and bangs."

"He just about killed me," Ham admitted.

Bette looked at him fondly. "I bet you could beat him now."

"And don't think I won't try," Ham said, "if I ever see him again!" And we all laughed at his earnestness.

Bette refuses to dramatize the fact of their having been school sweethearts—or that they waited for each other while she struggled toward success in Hollywood and he tried to get a start in New York.

"I'd have married somebody else," she insists, "if I'd met anyone nice enough."

SHE won't dramatize the success of her marriage, either. Ham wouldn't let her even if she tried it. When she had a vacation re- [Continued on page 72]

If I Hadn't Been an Actor-

By Gary Cooper

As told to Gladys Hall

"IF I HADN'T been an actor, I might have been a cartoonist, a doctor, a commercial artist, an explorer, a rancher, any one of a number of things. Only one thing is certain—I would never have sat behind a desk.

"I wasn't one of those fortunate ones who are born knowing what they want to be, what they can be. 'Born musicians,' 'born actors,' 'born writers'—they are the ones who are, literally, born under a lucky star. I've often thought that if the schools and universities would stress Latin and Greek a little less and vocational training a little more there would be fewer young men groping vaguely for the place where they belong.

"It's difficult for me to say what I might have done. The only thing I know is what I would not have done—I would not allow a desk to claim or chain me.

"I could never be a desk-slave. I'd rather be a hobo than a clock puncher. I simply haven't enough patience for routine, too much restlessness, maybe, because I rode too often over the plains of Montana where there are no horizons to hem a man in.

"I've always had an idea that life is more than a matter of breathing, eating and sleeping. We pass this way but once—it should be a great adventure."

I had heard that he is anti-social, save for a few hand-picked friends, non-professionals.

I had been informed that he looks down his nose at the profession of which he is so integral a part, that he longs to "Get Away From It All," that he is tinged with the contempt of personal superiority for publicity, interviews, fan mail, public recognition, all of the concomitants of being a "moom-pitcher" actor.

None of these legends is true.

He is charming. He is courteous. He is affability itself.

I don't know whence these legends spring, nor from what spurious source they are tapped.

Errol Flynn—Wild Irishman!

With the luck of the Irish, too!

By Virginia Wood

Lili Damita said, "No, but I'll be a sister to you," to scores of men—from royalty down—before she said, "I'll be a wife to you," to Errol

HE'S a swashbuckling buccaneer. He's an Irish gentleman. He's a dreamer of dreams. He's a hard-headed business man.

Errol Flynn has lived a lifetime in his twenty-seven years. Right now, he's just a bit overcome by his amazing success in Hollywood because he never really intended to be an actor.

In the short time he's been in the movie colony he's done more than make three first-rate films (Captain Blood, Charge of the Light Brigade and The Green Light)—he has finished a novel describing his own almost incredibly fantastic escapades. It is titled "Beam Ends" and will appear soon. He has collaborated in scenarizing the adventures of that famous Englishman, Sir James Brooke—which Warner Bros. snapped up as a story find. It's a "natural" for a Flynn film because their lives have not been unlike—fabulous and exciting.

Frankly, I don't think Errol ever did have any definite objective as far as a career was concerned. He's worked at a man's job all his life for whatever he's had, but he's not one to grumble about it, nor does the thought of hard work bother him. He's the restless son of Ireland who could never be really satisfied doing nothing. He frets and fumes when he's not busy at the studio and expends his pent-up energies playing a hard game of tennis or taking long walks in the hills with his dog.

And speaking of his dog, he had two until quite recently when he gave one of them away.

" 'Stranger' never really liked me," he told me one day when we were discussing the two dogs, both Schnauzers. "But you take Arno, here," he patted him roughly and affectionately on the head, "the minute he saw me, I knew he was my dog—that he'd never care for anyone else."

So Stranger was presented to Rosy, the cook, who adores him and he's quite happy with her.

YOU NEVER HEARD This ABOUT Marlene

IF YOU want to know a star well, the real person hiding under the greasepaint, then spend some time with that star on a desert location! As the fierce heat of the sun melts the actual make-up revealing the true skin underneath, so does it melt the figurative make-up to show us the star as that star really is. Miss Dietrich on the desert, making The Garden of Allah, was not the Miss Dietrich of Hollywood drawing rooms . . . the fragile, flaneur you have been led to expect. Dietrich on the desert proved herself hardy as the hardiest desert flower, robust and vivacious, as bright as its most brilliant hue. Dietrich on the desert proved herself the most beloved, warm, rich, thoughtful person that those working on the picture had ever known, and before many weeks had passed, they had elected her First Lady of Allah City, Her Honor the Mayor!

But to understand the full purport of this compliment, you must first understand Allah City.

Just over the California border, seventeen miles west of Yuma, Arizona, there is the yellow desert known as America's Sahara. Vast expanses of rolling dunes, without sign of life or vegetation. Heat, in waves, that hits you in the eyes, burning, blinding. No telephone poles, no roads—nothing to connect it with civilization.

This is the Marlene I know gay intense, courageous, human.

Here, in the center of this desert, Selznick International Studio built its Garden of Allah location camp and called it Allah City. Forty-five tent-cabins lined the sandy streets, and in thirty of those were housed Allah's two hundred citizens, stars and crew alike. The others were "public buildings"—restaurant, recreation hall and administration centers. True they brought water in by pipe lines from the Colorado River five miles away, and electricity from Yuma, and every tent was equipped with water, showers, electricity and radios, but still there were many hardships to be faced. Heat: 120 degrees in the shade, 147-148 degrees in the sun. It robbed you of energy, appetite, and disposition and it made your feet and body swell so that clothes were a constant torture. Then there were frequent storms grinding grit into your hair and teeth and eyes. The early calls: the reveille siren—screaming, screeching madness at four-thirty each morning to wake you from a sleepless daze. Shooting began at six o'clock.

THEN there were the scorpions to be watched for; the desert rats and the snakes. And then there was the daily danger in just driving to and from the set . . . only a mile away, but along a temporary board road built just wide enough for one car. This road incidentally was an engineering feat worth noting. Over dune, down dune, and around dune, across the slippery, sinking, ever-shifting sand. From camp to set and back again, in a dozen passenger cars, Rudolph Sieber is established in Germany—and Marlene says she never will cross the Nazi borders again. After making a picture in London she will return to Hollywood, bringing back Raizie, her pet maid, who came here years ago with Dietrich, but returned to her homeland when she became homesick.—F. J.

Romeo and Juliet—symbol of love to all the world for hundreds of years—played by Leslie Howard and Norma Shearer

Clark Gable reviews for you the finest film of the month

NOBODY ever accused me of knowing anything about Shakespeare. Sure, I've read some of his plays. So have a lot of other people. I once carried a spear in Romeo and Juliet on the stage in Los Angeles, Jane Cowl was the star. I didn't do it because I wanted to. They needed tall men. And I needed the money to eat on.

Romeo and Juliet

But Irving Thalberg's Romeo and Juliet is Shakespeare—and I'm sold on Shakespeare.

I make no pretense at being a reviewer.

I have no use for fancy words and little knowledge of how to put them on paper.

But I do know that I have seen the greatest performance I have ever watched on screen or stage. And I am not alone, but with others who make it their business to be critics, in saying that Norma Shearer's Juliet is the finest thing yet done by an actor or actress.

You are going to agree with me.

When I was asked to write a review of Romeo and Juliet for SCREEN BOOK, I accepted because I thought it would be a lot of fun. Something different. Besides, I was curious to see the picture. Everybody in Hollywood has been hearing about it for months. As a reviewer, I was one of the few who got in, outside of the 900 magazine writers, newspapermen and foreign correspondents.

Critics, executives, stars, directors left that theater without a word, as though they'd been smacked hard. They had.

There couldn't have been a tougher audience. I might even say, "hardboiled." Everyone came to see Shakespeare on the screen, and to be shown.

The first big scene, the fight in the square between the Montagues and Capulets, gangsters in fifteenth century costumes, straightened them right up in their seats.

John Barrymore as Mercutio flashed on the screen. He gave zest to a couple of good scenes with Shakespearean "gags." Got a good laugh with his clowning.

Then the balcony scene, played with a delicate quality that showed Director George Cukor's hand. From the quiet of Friar Laurence's cell and the secret marriage of Romeo and Juliet, the action rushed toward its goal, with a swift change of pace and scene. Drama, thrills, pathos, comedy, suspense mixed by a master hand.

Basil Rathbone, a sneering, arrogant Tybalt. Mercutio's death. A Romeo crazed by the death of his friend, pursuing Tybalt in a frenzy, overwhelming him in his fury.

The parting of the lovers. And then the potion scene. I have seen Norma Shearer do that scene as it never could have been done before, reaching the height of artistic achievement. It is the high spot of the picture.

You know, I'd like to have been Romeo.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

the MOVIES

By Florence Johnson

POOR Mary of Scotland. She became a queen before she was a week old—the bride of the sickly Dauphin of France when she was sixteen—the queen of France when she was seventeen—and a widow when she was eighteen. Then she returned to Scotland, fought to rule her homeland—made a second loveless marriage to maintain peace, but wound up getting the cold chop at the command of her own cousin, Queen Elizabeth of England. That is the girl Katharine Hepburn portrays.

Mary of Scotland
★★½

She takes up the life of luckless Mary with her arrival in Scotland from France. It is not among her best performances, but she has many moments of impressive dignity—particularly in the scene where she defies the earls of Scotland, and later where she protests bitterly against the unfairness of her trial. She has overcome to a great extent two vocal faults: an off-pitch singsong way of speaking, and her measured monotone.

Fredric March is vigorous and more attractive than ever as Bothwell, who loves Mary, becomes her third husband. He talks with a rich Scotch burr and swaggers about in kilts. His wife, Florence Eldredge, is good as the embittered Elizabeth, but less forceful than we imagine the Virgin Queen to have been.

Douglas Walton as Darnley, Mary's weakling second husband who is killed, deserves mention for his skilful acting. Ian Keith as Mary's treacherous half-brother, Donald Crisp as faithful Huntley and Moroni Olsen playing religious-fanatic John Knox are perfectly cast.

The story is complex—and the interest of the picture-goer is focussed alternately on the political, then the personal aspect of the period. We're glad we saw it—and you will be, too. Hepburn had no double for the riding scenes, as you will notice—unless they are left in the cutting room before the picture reaches you. No opportunity has been overlooked to get everything possible out of Dudley Nichols' writing, which is worthy of praise.

Photography and the musical score are excellent. The costumes are beautiful—we doubtless will see the influence of this film in some of the new fall creations for women.—Produced by RKO-Radio.

Girls' Domitory

ALTERNATE endings have been made for this picture: lady instructor Chatterton gets her man in one version; the student wins Herr Direktor Marshall in the other. Remember the two conclusions when you see the film. Discussion about which is logical should make interesting table talk.

You'll have a new movie love when you've seen Simone Simon in this, her first American picture. She has an attractive French accent—a delicately mobile face. It's Simone's picture—but beautiful performances are given by Ruth Chatterton and Herbert Marshall.

The story is simple. Nineteen-year-old-student Simone falls in love with Marshall, the Direktor of the Teutonic girls school; he is also loved by fellow-professor Chatterton. When a love letter the girl has written but tossed into the wastebasket is unearthed by a snoopy instructor she is threatened with expulsion, and runs away. The Direktor rescues her at the edge of a cliff—she confesses her love, and he returns it. She learns that the older woman has loved him for many years, so she pretends that she was only fooling about love, anyway. But the story ends with the girl in the professor's arms. Perhaps you will see the other ending to the film.

Most beautiful scene: a fencing class receiving instruction. The film has a fine feeling—it seems less American and foreign-produced. Edward Bromberg was dropped too soon—a story fault; his characterization is outstanding. Dixie Dunbar, June Storey, and Shirley Deane give outstanding performances in the supporting cast. Subtlety is the keynote of the entire production.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

To Mary, With Love

HERE are three-superbly-cast people giving flawless performances in an engrossing portrait of married life. It's not a new story, but this telling of the story is new, and it would be sheer folly on your part to miss seeing it. A brief synopsis can't begin to tell you what charm you'll find in this piece. Myrna Loy and Warner Baxter marry. She wants to enjoy life, but he is submerged in work, blinded by ambitious professional plans. He has the world by the tail until the stock market crash in 1929. He goes down, down—financially, morally, spiritually. He makes things harder for his wife by turning to another woman, Claire Trevor. The wife remains loyal for many years and helps him out of his degradation—then she leaves him. The final scene between Ian Hunter, who has stood by, loving the wife for many years—and the wife and husband, is one of the most touching sequences the theatre has brought in a long time. But don't think that this is a sombre film. It's far from that. It takes you gaily from the day of the Charleston and short shirts and scoop-shaped hats, to today. It tosses sly barbs at the thoughts of past days. Myrna is called upon for more of her own delicious humor—but she shows other gifts of theatrical skill that seem far more important. Claire Trevor distinguishes herself in the part of the cynical, alluring other woman. This portrayal of the pathetic efforts of man and wife to stave off the crashing of marriage under the blows of adversity has a remarkably fine balance of satire, humor, drama and romance. The picture will undoubtedly be a box-office hit.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Follow SCREEN BOOK's Girl to Stardom!

Marjorie Weaver, our contest winner, is cast in another important new picture!

You may not recognize it, but it's Scandal. And Scandal has won a flock of small-boat races on Mr. Balboa's ocean

No acting today. Instead of a make-up kit, Margie carries a bundle of sail

IF YOU met her at a sorority tea, you would say she was a typical American girl. A bit more favored by the particular god who hands out complexions and hair and figures, perhaps; but representative, nevertheless, in her charm and intelligence and penchant for sport clothes, of the type we have come to think of as "American college girl."

In Hollywood, it is those very "typical" attributes that make Marjorie Weaver outstanding. In a city pervaded by the atmosphere of make-believe, Marjorie's fresh candidness shines out like the good deed spoken of by Mr. Shakespeare. She isn't the type of girl who usually comes Hollywood-ward seeking fame. In fact, she wouldn't be in Hollywood at all if her roommate at a sorority house on the Indiana U. campus hadn't had stage ambitions. Beat you to it that time, didn't we, Mr. Ripley?

It happened this way. Rubynelle Parks, Marjorie's sorority sister and roommate, wanted to go to dramatic school in New York. And she didn't want to go without Marjorie. Marjorie had recently scored a hit in a campus show, and while that hadn't given her any ideas, it had given Rubynelle plenty of them. Marjorie could win SCREEN BOOK's contest, and go to New York with Rubynelle! Simple as that.

Marjorie couldn't see it at first. She was studying to teach. She didn't think she was screen material. But what could a girl do when her roommate made a whole sorority house gang up on her? Only one thing. And Marjorie did it. She acceded, and entered the contest. And here she is, with her feet on the first rung of the ladder of fame. She says it's all on account of Rubynelle and SCREEN BOOK. But she isn't quite right. Most of her success is on account of Marjorie Weaver.

SCREEN BOOK gave Marjorie her dancing lessons and her introduction to the studios, but [Continued on page 93]

VIRGINIA WEIDLER

Mother's helper—being one of the youngest of seven children (all of whom have worked in films) she has learned all about housekeeping—even though she is a movie star at nine. She had the top rôle in Girl of the Ozarks. She began her career when she was two but it almost ended soon after because, being actually as modest as her quaint, pig-tailed appearance would lead you to think her, she refused to disrobe although the script for John Barrymore's film, Moby Dick, demanded it. Her mother vowed never to take the child to a studio again—but didn't adhere to her resolution, for which the growing list of Weidler fans are thankful. At the moment Virginia is playing in Three Married Men—and studying co-worker Mary Brian closely so she may be like her when she grows up

NO TRESPASSING

Far less reliable than the S.O.S. at sea is the weary thumb of the stalled motorist on the highway. Passing drivers with eyes on the road are more apt to come to a crunching stop if the distress signal is embellished by a pair of appealing ankles, incased in sheer mesh

Are you prepared with the very last word in hosiery when you are caught in the act of trespassing and trying to make a quick getaway? Life has a way of exposing your shortcomings, milady! The new 2-thread beige would be just the thing for an emergency like this

HOSIERY!

If Eve must climb a ladder to pick apples then remember that the young man who holds the ladder is only human. Young men are all so critical and such close range inspection invites detailed consideration. For such an adventure wear ringless chiffon

"Watch your step", advises Earl Blackwell as he assists Ann Rutherford into the car. Ann is wearing Nonchalant, a clear light brown hose exceedingly smart with Fall clothes. So diverting is this charming hosiery that we suggest you watch your step, Earl!

LIFE being what it is, stockings have a way of exposing themselves at the most crucial moments in a maiden's career. Are you prepared for emergencies?

To make sure that your hosiery is correct for every occasion (even to crawling through barbed fences) consult the handy chart which I have appended here. It contains suggestions on what to wear with what—always a problem calling for deep thought—as well as a list of the new fall shades and designs.

LEATHER TAN: A rich golden tan, the new version of a leather tone in hosiery. Especially created to blend with shades of similar character in textiles, as well as with browns and russet tones. Also smart with green, navy and black.

CINNAMON BROWN: A lively, spicy brown. Another swank leather tone smartly applied to hosiery. Harmonizes with the fashionable spicy browns of similar tones in costumes. Also correctly worn with greens,

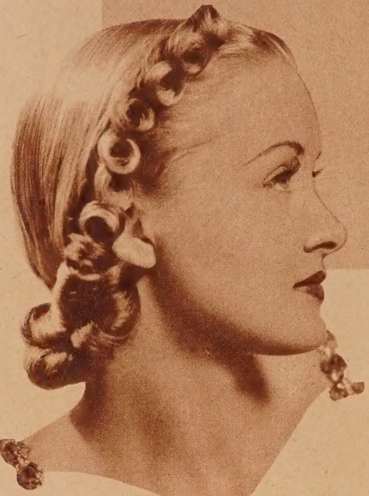
Shine boys, by virtue of experience, are unsung connoisseurs of good hosiery. Their advice to the woman who would look smart would probably be a dissertation on the evils of stockings that snag. This calls for the original 7470 crêpe twist, a pair capable of standing much wear

NEW HEADLINES for Marian Marsh

By Janet Lynn



A side view of Marian's new evening coiffure appropriately named Twilight

Upswept curls encircling the head emphasize Marian's graceful hairline

WHEN you see Marian Marsh in The Man Who Lived Twice you are sure to admire the stunning new coiffure which she introduces—a coiffure as original as the Trilby bob which first brought her to fame. That hairdress, you remember, was one befitting the Marian Marsh of seventeen—thick bangs and a long fluffy bob hanging to her shoulders. This new hairdress is the keynote of the beautiful, exquisitely groomed young woman who is the Marian Marsh of today.

Appropriately, Marian calls her new coiffure Twilight, as the smart upswept lines are particularly chic with the cocktail dress or dance frock. The hair is first brushed back from the face, then parted in the middle and curled in tiny ringlets that encircle the head. Across the back of the neck is a double row of soft finger curls. The crown of the head is sleek, smooth and unwaved.

"It is with the hair that a girl can best change her personality, correct her bad features, bring out her good ones," Marian said. "One should maintain a balance between features, figure and costume with the proper hairdress.

"Present modes make it essential that one's hair be romantic and alluring. No longer can a girl run a comb through a careless bob and consider her hair groomed for the evening. Evening gowns of period design call for evening coiffures. But in order to achieve a good coiffure, the hair must be in perfect condition."

Marian had come into the Columbia Studio hairdressing department to have her hair shampooed and dressed before going onto the set. And for the benefit of all of us who are struggling with summer-devastated locks, I had come to see firsthand the routine which keeps Marian's hair so lovely and lustrous despite the long hours which she spends in the California sun.

She settled herself comfortably in a low-backed armchair as Helen Hunt, head of the Columbia hairdressing department, whisked a rubberized silk apron around her shoulders.

PIMPLES are often a real calamity to girls and boys after the beginning of adolescence—from about 13 to 25 years of age, or even longer.

During this period, important glands develop and final growth takes place. This causes disturbances throughout the entire system. The skin becomes oversensitive. Waste poisons in the blood irritate this sensitive skin. Pimples break out.

Fleischmann's fresh Yeast is an effective remedy for adolescent pimples. It clears these skin irritants out of the blood. Then—with the cause removed—the pimples vanish!

Just Between RAYMOND and

OUR male population would probably agree that the world would be a better, if not a safer, place were Gene Raymond to retire to a southern plantation—in which he has expressed an interest—and take up farming, horse breeding and hara kiri. Preferably hara kiri.

Gene, for pretty obvious reasons, is not to be a favorite with the stag line. Good-looking, talented, likable, he comes under the heading of "Unfair Competition." His popularity with such sought-after bachelor girls of Hollywood as Janet Gaynor and Jeanette MacDonald does nothing to help.

On the other hand, the general feeling among women is that perhaps it wouldn't be a bad idea if more men were like him!

Gene isn't particularly easy to know. He doesn't back-slap, hand-shake and personality-smile you all over the place. He came to Hollywood, he told me once, as an individual—determined to remain one. And he has. Because of his quiet self-confidence there are those, of course, whose word for it is "high hat." No unkinder interpretation of his individuality could be imagined.

Let's see what kind of person he really is—just between Gene Raymond and you!

His tastes are simple, his desires few, his friends, who are carefully chosen, loyal.

One day when I called on Gene a good-looking, personable young man came in and was introduced as Bob Marlowe—his professional name. He was Gene's brother. Gene was telling me how he plays the saxophone and is going to organize his own orchestra. He was more enthusiastic over Bob's career than I had ever seen him over his own.

GENE You!

"Really, Gene," I said, "I'm sure you'd much rather I interviewed your brother than yourself!"

He laughed—and I knew it to be a fact. The Guion family—which is their real name—is a closely knit organization.

Yet he's terribly serious about that career of his own. For years he freelanced because he couldn't get a contract that gave him latitude in roles and an opportunity to be versatile.

"There's always somewhere in a career when you've reached the top. Then," he said tersely, "it's time to move on to the next." He believes it.

His friend, Nelson Eddy, who is no mean singer himself, has encouraged Gene concerning his voice.

"I'm not going to break into opera. I'm not even [Continued on page 68]

Was I MORTIFIED !!

Bing Crosby casts aspersions at Bob Burns' table manners

"WHEN your best girl goes dancing with your rival," the manufacturers of a popular cigarette advise, "be nonchalant and smoke a Darum," which is all very well but a cigarette doesn't stop the rush of blood to your face when someone turns the tables on you and tops your wisecracks.

One night, at a party Regis and Kitty Toomey gave, I bumped into Chester Morris. Chet and I have a little game we play that is called "ribbing" or, in other words, throwing the hooks into each other. "Hi, Chet," I greeted him, "you're sure looking well tonight."

"Thanks, Don," he said, eyeing me suspiciously.

"Yes," I continued, "unless I was right on top of you I could never see how bloated you are."

"Why, you fat, bald-headed, old fool," he exploded, "what the devil are you talking about?"

My fast-thinning locks are a source of constant grief and worry to me, so I ask you, what good would a Darum be when someone calls the attention of a room full of people to your misfortune? I know better than to rib Chet in public now.

THERE was the time I first met Joan Blondell, when I was interviewing her. "What's your avocation, Miss Blondell?" I queried in my best reportorial manner.

"I'm an Episcopalian," Joan answered solemnly.

I didn't know her well and I was just a little taken aback. In fact, I recall thinking, "Just another dizzy blond"—but I didn't say so. I was quite polite about it. "That's your belief," I explained patiently. "Now, I, for example, am a writer both by vocation and avocation."

"That's your belief," she flipped.

Fortunately there was no one present to witness my discomfiture but Joan is What happens when Hollywood's champion insulters make the fur fly not a lady who lets you forget. Every once in a while when we're in a crowd somewhere she'll gravely ask, "What's your avocation?"

I DON'T like to brag, but I lay claim to being one of the few people in Hollywood who ever topped Jack Oakie—and it wasn't in fun, either. I did one of the first stories on Jack when he made a hit and we got to be pretty good friends. I was over at the studio one afternoon gathering material for a yarn when the chap in the publicity office said, "Why not put your friend Oakie in this story? Here he comes now."

I glanced down the hall and, sure enough, there came Mr. Oakie, resplendent in patent leather evening pumps, white trousers and a clean shirt.

"All right," I agreed. After exchanging greetings with m'sieu I said, "Say, how about rushing over to your dressing room, Jack, and doing a little quickie interview?"

"Why not?" Jack answered and promptly sat down in the publicity office to look through the latest fan magazines in hopes of finding a picture of himself (which he did). He fiddled around there for half an hour when suddenly his companion said, "Hey, come on, we're late. We should have been down in Los Angeles at four o'clock and it's half past now."

Jack sprang to his feet. "Oke. Come on."

"Wait a minute," I expostulated. "What about this interview?"

"You heard him say we're late now, didn't you?" Jack shouted. "I haven't got time to fool with you. See you some other time. Make a regular appointment through the publicity office. That's a hell of a way to do, come barging up to a guy and spring something like that on him all of a sudden without giving him a minute's notice."

Recalling the time when Jack had asked me to do a story on him, totally ignoring the publicity office, and recalling numerous little things I'd done for him since then, my blood began boiling. "You're singing a different tune now than you sang a few months ago, aren't you?" I mocked. "Well, I'm damned if I'll ask for an appointment with you. I wouldn't put you in a story if you were the last actor on earth to write about. To hell with you."

"To hell with you," he retorted, "I've been told that by better writers than you!"

"I don't doubt it," I answered, "but you've never been told it with more sincerity or more depth of feeling than I'm telling you."

"I suppose," he sneered, "now that you're sore at me you'll pan the devil out of me?"

BEECH-NUT PEPPERMINT GUM... is so good it's the most popular flavor of any gum sold in the United States.

BEECH-NUT PEPSIN GUM... candy coating protects a pleasing flavor . . . and, as you probably know, pepsin aids digestion after a hearty meal.

BEECHIES...another really fine Peppermint Gum—sealed in candy coating. Like Gum and Candy in one.

BEECH-NUT SPEARMINT... especially for those who like a distinctive flavor. A Beech-Nut Quality product.

ORALGENE... Its firmer texture gives much needed mouth exercise... and its dehydrated milk of magnesia helps neutralize mouth acidity. Each piece individually wrapped.

Here's How To Treat
FOOT ITCH
ATHLETE'S FOOT

According to the Government Health Bulletin, No. E-28, at least 50% of the adult population of the United States are being attacked by the disease known as Athlete's Foot.

Usually the disease starts between the toes. Little watery blisters form and the skin cracks and peels. After a while the itching becomes intense and you feel as though you would like to scratch off all the skin.

Beware of It Spreading

Often the disease travels all over the bottom of the feet. The soles of your feet become red and swollen. The skin also cracks and peels, and the itching becomes worse and worse.

Get rid of this disease as quickly as possible, because it is very contagious and it may go to your hands or even to the under arm or crotch of the legs.

Most people who have Athlete's Foot have tried all kinds of remedies to cure it without success. Ordinary germicides, antiseptics, salve or ointments seldom do any good.

Here's How to Treat It

The germ that causes the disease is known as Tinea Trichophyton. It buries itself deep in the tissues of the skin and is very hard to kill. A test made shows it takes 20 minutes of boiling to kill the germ, so you can see why the ordinary remedies are unsuccessful.

H. F. was developed solely for the purpose of treating Athlete's Foot. It is a liquid that penetrates and dries quickly. You just paint the affected parts. It peels off the tissue of the skin where the germ breeds.

Itching Stops Immediately

As soon as you apply H. F. you will find that the itching is immediately relieved. You should paint the infected parts with H. F. night and morning until your feet are well. Usually this takes from three to ten days, although in severe cases it may take longer or in mild cases less time.

H. F. will leave the skin soft and smooth. You will marvel at the quick way it brings you relief; especially if you are one of those who have tried for years to get rid of Athlete's Foot without success.

MEET "DIMPLES" DAVIS!

When he was at school he broke his nose on purpose, so he could go to New York to see the family doctor . . . and see the new plays!!

OWEN DAVIS, JR. . . . swears he was born reciting "All the world's a stage and when I grow up I'm going on it" . . . to aid this ambition, selected New York City for a birthplace and a famous playwright for a father . . . Owen Davis, Sr., collected a Pulitzer Prize a few years ago . . . from babyhood, Owen, Jr., spent all his spare time—and some his teachers thought he couldn't spare—backstage at the theater . . . wrote, produced and starred in his first dramatic (very dramatic!) masterpiece at the age of seven . . . at eleven entered Choate School in Connecticut . . . the distracted faculty eventually discovered that Owen's plausible excuses for a trip to New York invariably coincided with the opening of a play . . . they finally turned him over to Yale where, at the end of his freshman year, he transferred to the George Pierce Baker School of Dramatic Art . . . later attended the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, earning the juvenile lead in the Chicago company of The Barker . . . but the juvenile in the New York troupe was taken suddenly ill and Owen was rushed—with the aid of a police escort complete with sirens—into the part . . . says he made his debut so abruptly he had no time to be scared . . . other engagements followed . . . tried Hollywood in 1930 but the lure of Broadway was too great . . . played continually in New York or summer stock until RKO Radio decided they needed this particular five-feet-ten of personality and ability. . . . He is now starring in Satisfaction Guaranteed.

An Argument Begins

NOT long ago I read a complaint against Jean Harlow for wearing such fine clothes in Wife vs Secretary. Everyone knows that few secretaries could dress like that but after all a movie is really a short trip to another world and what would be the use if it was like what we are used to. Also a picture show is about the only opportunity a large per cent of the people have to see really nice clothes. If that were changed a lot of the interest would be taken from the pictures. It gives one higher ideals and shows many ways to improve oneself. Give us more of them.—Virginia Slaughter, Glenwood, Iowa.

Servants' Entrance

I ALWAYS read the Letter Page and get real enjoyment out of the comments. The fans usually write about the lovely leading ladies and handsome leading men but I don't remember seeing anything about butlers. Why butlers? Well, the two I have in mind always turn in such splendid performances that regardless of other players I'd go because either Eric Blore or Arthur Treacher are the butlers in the picture. I hope to see them many times again for they take care of the comedy in our best pictures. —Rosalind Yowles, 785 Princess Ave., London, Ont.

Eric Blore became just a bit bored with butlers and plays a dancing school professor in Swing Time, the sparkling new Rogers-Astaire opus. Pip Treacher is still a butler, but in a less disdainful mood in Thank You, Jeeves.—Ed.

George Brent doesn't know his wife, Kay Francis, is hiding an illegitimate child

Give Me Your Heart

YOU must see this! Kay Francis looks lovely, is appealing in drama based on a delicate, intimate theme, which will be appreciated most by those who like an occasional bit of seriousness in their entertainment. Without benefit of clergy a child is born to Kay. The father is married to a semi-invalid. She is persuaded to relinquish her boy to his father's family. She goes to America, falls in love and marries George Brent. Then she suffers heartache and heartbreak: fear that her husband will learn of her sin; longing for her child, a conviction that she's been cheated out of the first love that was hers; hatred for her lover's wife. Roland Young, attempting to purge her mind of its growing illness, brings together the two husbands and wives in an ultra-dramatic climax.—Produced by Warner Bros.

Barbara Stanwyck and Bob Taylor—lovers off-screen and on

LEO the Lion apparently decided to cash in on the wide-spread interest in the Barbara Stanwyck-Bob Taylor amour and cast them as hero and heroine. While it must be admitted that the idea had great possibilities, the net result is unfortunately lacking in entertainment value—and the blame falls squarely on the plot. Both of the co-stars do their best to overcome the handicaps of their rôles, but the task is too much. Jean Hersholt and John Eldridge contribute outstanding performances in the supporting cast.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Joan Bennett and Joel McCrea find $1,000, a race horse, gangsters—and romance

Two in a Crowd

A MILDLY interesting tale of a race horse whose owner is struggling to raise the necessary entry fee for the big race. Two halves of a $1,000 bill bring Joel McCrea, the owner, and Joan Bennett, another down-and-outer, together. With it they get the horse ready for the handicap. Matters are complicated by the meddling of cops and robbers woven into the plot to increase suspense. Of course the horse wins the race and Joel wins Joan. Elisha Cook, Jr., is good as the jockey, while Reginald Denny, Donald Meek and Andy Clyde contribute to the comedy.—Produced by Universal.

Fay Wray asks taxi-driver Chester Morris if she can go home with him

They Met In a Taxi

THIS small, gay comedy will brighten a dull evening. Chester Morris and Fay Wray, who have too frequently been relegated to sad little parts, have a chance to shine just a bit. He's a taxi driver, picks up the wedding-gowned Fay who says she's trying not to marry a duke. But oh! how the lady lies! He hides her in his apartment and by the time he learns she's not a fleeing heiress, but a model suspected of stealing a fabulously expensive necklace, proximity has done its deadly work and he's mad about the girl. Lionel Stander, an ex-convict driving Jehu, and Raymond Walburn, a fussy society editor, find the real crook. Lionel's wisecracks are neatly fitted in.—Produced by Columbia.

Ida Lupino is a crook who tries to fleece an honest gambler, George Raft

Yours For the Asking

★★½

EVERY character in this farce is a gambler or racketeer—and 'sall fun. George Raft is an honest crook who joins forces with Dolores Costello Barrymore, a once-wealthy girl. They make a gambling establishment out of her Miami mansion. His three comical buddies (James Gleason, Edgar Kennedy and Lynne Overman) think they must protect their George from making a colossal mistake in catering to society. They hire Ida Lupino and Reginald Owen, a pair of crooks, to show George the error of his ways, but they try to fleece the big gambler. Then the fun begins.—Produced by Paramount.

Chronic grouch Irvin Cobb first wants to maim, then learns to love Jane Withers

Pepper

IF YOU'RE a Jane Withers addict this is your meat. It's a natural for children—a harum scarum show with scarcely a serious moment. When a situation arises that even hints of seriousness it's taken care of in comedy fashion. Pepper is a trial and tribulation to her uncle, Slim Summerville. She's leader of a street gang who get into endless mischief. To aid a widow threatened with eviction the kids invade the guarded home of grouch-millionaire Irvin Cobb. He'd like to commit homicide, but Pepper convinces him he's more in need of an outing than medicine. They set out for Coney Island and take all the rides, slides and concessions—winding up washing dishes after their pockets have been picked. The irascible old gent takes Pepper to his heart when she exposes a bogus nobleman's plan to wed his daughter.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Adolphe Menjou and Alice Faye are a daffy pair of romantics, thinks Michael Whalen

Sing Baby Sing

THIS picture is superb. Adolphe Menjou gives a hilarious characterization of a Shakespearian-conscious actor who gets out of his keeper's hands, and into trouble—when he sees himself as Romeo. Alice Faye turns in an excellent job as a jobless singer who gets tangled up with the actor—as Juliet. Tributes go to Gregory Ratoff, Ted Healy and Patsy Kelly for their clowning. Highest accolades to the Ritz Brothers. This film has the best performances and snappiest music heard in a blue moon . . . and, what is rare in a musical, it has a plot—and what a plot!—Produced by Twentieth Century-Fox.

Bing berates one love for misleading his other love—on the end of the rope

Rhythm on the Range

★★½

BING CROSBY gets competition for honors from Bob Burns and Martha Raye. His songs are an improvement over those he's b-b-b-booed through before. At times the film is uproariously funny slapstick—attached to a plot full of absurdities. The film begins with thrilling rodeo scenes. Burns does the funniest scene of the film when he harangues a crowd on the street. He is remindful of the late Will Rogers at this moment. Frances Farmer is a box-car stowaway who accompanies Bing and bull West. They are pursued by kidnapers. Everything ends happily with a swell swing-music jamboree. Lucille Gleason has the prize laugh line: "Those fellows in the mountains make passes like other male critters, and when a gal gets through those mountain passes she knows her way around."—Produced by Paramount.

Was I Mortified!!

assured him quietly, "we only pan important people."

The conference broke up before blood was shed but relations were just a little strained for a few weeks. It's all been forgiven and forgotten now, however, and Jack still gives me some of the best copy I get.

BING CROSBY is adept at the wisecrack. In Rhythm on the Range Bob Burns was required, in one scene, to drink out of a saucer. Turning anxiously to the director, he asked, "Do you think I ought to make a noise when I drink?"

"It won't be necessary," Bing cut in. "Just eat naturally and there'll be plenty of noise."

I went out to see Lyle Talbot at the studio. "Hullo, Lyle," I said, "I came out to see you act."

"Then you might as well go home again," Kay Francis grinned.

Ouch!

AND Wynne Gibson is another who can take care of herself in the clinches.

When her parents first arrived in Hollywood she rented a house for them. Returning to the set after luncheon, she told everyone about the place. A couple of hours later a messenger brought her a telegram. It read, "Sorry can't let you have the house. Your references unsatisfactory"—and was signed with the name of the rental agency.

She didn't know what to make of it. For references, she had given two banks with whom she does business. She had a healthy balance in each of them and that's all banks care about. She cupped her chin in her hand and gazed around in a perplexed manner. Her gaze happened to take in Esther Howard and the assistant director. They were watching her intently.

Wynne's a lady what's been framed often enough in pictures to know when there's dirty work at the cross-roads. She said nothing about the telegram but a few minutes later she left the set and 'phoned her florist.

It wasn't long until the florist's boy arrived with a box addressed to Miss Minnie Glutz—which he handed to Miss Howard. It looked as though it might contain American Beauty roses. The card on the outside assured Esther it was "In appreciation of your superb artistry." She could hardly wait to get it opened. But, ah, me—instead of posies it contained an assortment of carrots, cabbage leaves, onions, radishes and a few odd what-nots.

"But," Wynne wailed, "do you know what the louse did? She took me home with her to dinner that night and made a stew out of those vegetables I had intended only for a gag. Esther dished it out but I was the one who ate it."

Yea, bo! Everyone out here gets the hook occasionally but, for the most part, they're good sports about it. They'll tell jokes on themselves, ending the recital with, "Was I mortified!" — and then naively adding, "But, boy, can I take it!!"

Mary Boland will have none of synthetic, glycerin-produced tears, so her company waits until she has worked herself up to the pitch of producing real tears.

Just Between Gene Raymond and You!

going to take voice lessons, because Eddy thinks I should stick to what is called 'conversational singing.'"

If you have an idea that Gene bows from the waist, kisses madam's hand and, on the slightest provocation throws himself into a rhumba you don't know Gene.

"What do you really like doing best?" I asked him.

Without a moment's hesitation he said, "Playing polo."

Of course I shouldn't give an impression that he isn't one of Hollywood's ace escorts. He is. Beautiful stars have private feuds concerning his attentions—but I don't think Gene has ever been serious over the possibilities. He's too busy having a good time!

HE'S recently finished supervising and decorating what he calls "the first home I have ever owned!" He selected the furnishings himself because he couldn't, he says, depend upon an interior decorator doing it the way he wants. He supervised the exterior construction work on tennis courts, swimming pool, barbecue pit and putting green. He spent a full month searching through the residential districts of exclusive Brentwood, Bel-Air and Beverly Hills until he found it. His mother arrived from New York at the time and he asked her to look at it.

"All she said when she had looked over the place," Gene related, "was, 'It feels like home,' so I bought and gave it to her."

"GENE," I said, summoning all the courage which I reserve for just such times, "how do you stand on the marriage question—not for public consumption—but for your real friends?" I made a mental note that with three leaps I could make the door.

He looked very serious for a moment and then he said, "I hope to marry some day just like every man hopes to have a wife and some children when he feels he can afford them—afford to give them every luxury he wants them to have." (I began to thaw and to relax the grip on my hat.) "By that time I hope to be either producing or directing and I'll have time to travel and study—and being married will really mean companionship. To be absolutely frank about it, a man must devote as much time and attention to making marriage a success as a woman, and he can't do it with a script in one hand and a make-up box in the other."

. . . And that's between Gene and you!

There's no answer to that when you're talking to someone whose professional life—ever since he made his debut at the ripe old age of five—has robbed him of any delusions. He knows the things a successful career can give—but he has very definite ideas as to its limitations.

"Success," he told me once, "means reaching a goal—a goal that is apt to recede into a higher one as each new level is reached. Money, alone, doesn't mean success, though one must accept the fact that, as the expression of accomplishment, it does."

AN ACTRESS who enjoyed a brilliant but short-lived success had been caught in a series of misfortunes—illness and the like. Gene had met her only very casually once or, at most, twice. But in her he recognized real ability. Learning of her pitiable financial predicament he made it his own personal business to go about getting her an assignment. Not just anything, if you please, but a rôle thoroughly worthy of her pride and her fine talent. Of course she knows nothing of his activities in her behalf, and she never will.

You think Gene's a mighty good actor, don't you?

He never "acted" any better in front of the cameras than he did the other night at a small party. Gene introduced a currently popular parlor game. Two writers (male) who had given the impression in print that they weren't what might be called "admirers" of Gene, were present. They realized this was too good a chance to miss—and they framed a "ribbing!"

Before an audience of twenty people they called him into direct questioning on subjects which, during their interviews, he had always refused to answer. What a swell spot they "had him in"—so they thought. Gene, unlike you or me, couldn't get up and walk out—or suddenly discover he had a previous appointment. He had to stick and show himself to be as good a sport as they were trying to prove he wasn't.

That's a big order, even for one who's used to getting out of tight spots. Good-naturedly he parried every question that was shot at him, rapid-fire, but just as cleverly conceived to be answered as a boomerang. And it brought him through—proved the kind of regular guy he is, besides earning him the writers' apologies!

Gene, perhaps, is not brother Bill's or your own best beau's particular delight. But, should they take you to the newest Raymond picture it may be worth their while, because learning Gene's stuff is an opportunity no potential heart-breaker can afford to miss. As a script girl on his set once said, "It's really something!"

Mrs. Clark Gable, now separated from Clark, attends the première of Anthony Adverse with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hornblow. Doesn't Myrna look lusciously happy?

Hollywood Tips for Home Makers

Sani-Flush is excellent as an automobile radiator cleaner.

A timely tip that everyone who is planning any sort of redecoration should know about! Whenever you have a "crowd" over for an evening, did you ever notice how they seem to gather in the kitchen to see what is going on? Maybe they want to give you a hand at serving dinner or help you mix a cocktail or so . . . If you have ever had that experience, then you know that the looks of your kitchen is as important as the looks of your living room . . . Why not then, investigate the Armstrong Cork Company's linoleum and see what you can do about making your kitchen more attractive . . . You will be surprised at what the right design and color of a floor covering can do for your kitchen!

Why not, while you are in the kitchen, figure on having the Roylace Paper Company furnish you with shelving paper to match the rest of your kitchen . . . There is nothing more pleasing or attractive than clean, decorative cupboards . . . Makes those dishes look much better!

For that "white line" wash! Everybody knows how hard it is to remove that tell tale grey from white woollens and linens. . . . For that purpose, the Fels-Naptha Company have made their soap chips available to you. . . . They dissolve twice as fast, are economical and have a multitude of uses. . . . Improve your wash by making it a "white line" wash with Fels-Naptha soap chips. . . .

If you have a baby in your home, this is an important tip for you. . . . The Kendall Mills are manufacturing a diaper that is porous, having a surgical weave fabric that makes them faster drying indoors or out. . . . They are also much easier to wash, lighter, and 30% more absorbent. . . . Their secret is that they have no hems to retain stains. . . . They are called Curity Layettecloth Diapers!

A tip that will save you lots of trouble! Onslow Stevens finds the best way to keep a car looking nice, is to go over it once in a while with a polish cloth. . . . But that is only part of it. . . . You must have a good polish base first, advises Onslow, or the polishing won't do any good. . . . Many a fine paint job has been ruined by polishes that do not remove traffic film and old, dull, oxidized finish. . . . The J. A. Tumbler people of Baltimore have answered that question with their Tumbler Twins. . . . That is, one cleaner removes the traffic haze and the other polishes. . . . Try them!

hoarse, what do you think they would do?" asked Eddie. "Go to a beer joint and sit around drinking and singing until four in the morning!"

THIS FROM A sick man really takes the Guava jelly! A visiting fireman's wife recently meeting W. C. Fields at the studio doubted the authenticity of his nose, and asked if she might touch it. "Madam, this ample proboscis is as real as Gibraltar," said that gentleman. "I acquired it only after many years of applying the proper ingredients."

A NEW CALLING in Hollywood—"singing-in" instead of standing in. Grace Moore had such a sing-in while working on The King Steps Out . . . lovely Irene Crane, currently featured on a west coast radio program. It was Irene's duty to rehearse with the orchestra and save wear and tear on the busy Moore throat. Miss Crane's voice is so much like Miss Moore's that sometimes it is difficult to tell them apart.

FOR SEVERAL YEARS Eleanore Whitney, fastest tap dancer in the world, has been hoping to meet Eleanor Powell, greatest female tap dancer in the world. Recently Miss Powell sent her an invitation to join her at lunch at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Eleanore Whitney was sick at the time and in bed at her doctor's orders, but refused to let it keep her down and went eagerly to the appointment. It was Eleanor Powell who did most of the talking because the little Eleanore had such a sore throat she could scarcely speak above a whisper. As soon as lunch was over she was rushed home with a fever of 102. That sore throat might not have developed into an infected tonsil if she had stayed in bed, but she wouldn't have missed meeting the other Eleanor for anything!

BING CROSBY has turned producer with his own money in his new Columbia picture, Pennies From Heaven, and are the tables turned! Tardy Bing now arrives on the dot in the morning and woe to those who are late—no long lunch hours either! Are his co-workers laughing? They hadn't better, for Mr. Crosby is a terror!

ELEANOR POWELL sends critics engraved thank you cards for nice notices! Don't know whether we approve that or not, but will let it pass, unless we find that she orders them by the thousand.

"BECAUSE WE HAVE decided the most important thing in our lives is to be together," John Beal and his wife, Helen Craig, have a re-union in Hollywood even at the expense of her rôle in the New York hit, New Faces of 1936.

I want to share with you my own picture of my lovely friend Fay Wray

The Cream of the Cake Crop!

doesn't know a great deal about prosaic roasts and vegetables but she's a wizard when it comes to delicious frosted cakes and her husband could eat them for breakfast—he's that crazy about Jane and her achievements—so what more could one ask?

I'll give you her recipe for the Buttermilk Cake I enjoyed so thoroughly. Jane's cousin, Floyd Crosby, who filmed the famous picture, Tabu, had just returned from another jaunt to Tahiti, loaded down with presents for the little actress, including a couple of cocoanuts for good measure. She used the fresh cocoanut for her icing, and it's surely worth the extra trouble.

BUTTERMILK CAKE

¾	cup butter
1¾	cups sugar
3	eggs well beaten
1	tsp. soda
1½	cups buttermilk
3	cups flour
3	tsp. baking powder
1	tsp. salt
1	tsp. vanilla
½	tsp. orange flavoring
½	tsp. lemon flavoring

After creaming sugar and butter, add well beaten eggs. Dissolve soda in buttermilk. Sift flour once before measuring and then combine all dry ingredients and sift. Add buttermilk and sifted ingredients alternately to creamed mixture. Then add the flavorings. Bake at 350 degrees in two nine inch deep layer pans which have been greased and lightly floured.

SEVEN MINUTE FROSTING

1½	cups sugar
2	egg whites, unbeaten
5	tbls. cold water
¼	tsp. cream tartar
1	tsp. flavoring

Combine all ingredients in double boiler and place over hot water. Beat continually until beater can be lifted up leaving a deep hole in spot from which it was removed. Turn mixture into bowl and allow to slightly cool. Beat again until light and fluffy. After spreading the frosting between layers, sprinkle with cocoanut. Frost the top and sides and sprinkle with cocoanut.

Jane warned me it is most important to be sure the beater leaves a hole in the icing when removed before taking mixture from range. If you wish to use fresh cocoanut, place in hot oven until the shell cracks (about half an hour.) Remove meat from shell and pare off the outer brown skin. Then shred on grater.

"I Love My Husband Because He Doesn't Treat Me Like A Star!"

Her husband chidingly calls her "Bess" when she shows signs of temperament. Bette wanted desperately to play the rôle of Good Queen Bess in Mary of Scotland, which stars Katharine Hepburn at a rival studio. These photos show Bette as she is in life—and as she appears in makeup as Elizabeth cently, she may have expected considerable breaking-of-his-usual routine on the part of her husband, so he could be with her. Other stars' husbands have done this, and found themselves, before long, playing glorified attendants.

Ham kept right on with his daily golf games, with his orchestra practice, with his orchestra work each night in a popular Hollywood cafe. The golf games bothered Bette most, because she had always hated the game. "That's one sport I'll never be interested in!" she has said with her usual emphasis. "It's a ridiculous game for a woman, anyway."

Now she's taking golf lessons—and loving them!—so she can go around the course with Ham some day.

Even in her public career of Bette Davis, this amazing girl doesn't live up to the standards the feminine stars have set for themselves. Just the other day she sought to play the rôle of Queen Elizabeth in Katharine Hepburn's new picture, Mary of Scotland.

It was so unprecedented that no one knew what to say—an Academy award winner begging for a supporting rôle in another star's picture! Bette even got herself a costume as Elizabeth and had portraits specially taken, but another assignment kept her from playing the part.

She's one star who can say, "I'd rather play a good part no matter how small, than a big meaningless one!" and really prove she means it.

But if she should ever attempt to bring it home with her, if she ever confuses the two rôles, Mrs. Harmon Nelson and Bette Davis, Ham will bring forth a pet, ego-deflecting nickname he reserves for these occasions, when he says, "Now, Bess—!"

Why Mary Brian Has Never Married!

have loved you . . . because you are natural, fragrant, fine."

And she said, "I don't mind at all explaining why I've never married. It's simple enough really—it's because I've never been really desperately in love. I have never been swept completely off my feet. I have never met the man who, in marriage, offered me as much, or more, than I would have to give up if I did marry.

"I HAVE been very close to marriage—twice. I have been very nearly in love, really in love—twice. Very nearly . . ." said Mary, her blue eyes bluer as she spoke, "but always there has been a slight mental reservation. Always my head has said to my heart, 'No—not yet.'" (They say, that those two occasions were Buddy Rogers and Dick Powell.)

"I may be rather quaint and old-fashioned but to me marriage is terrifically important. So important that unless it is important enough to submerge every other interest and consideration in life it isn't important enough, do you see what I mean? I want my marriage to last. I want it to be founded on a rock, not on a passing fancy, a light romance, a crush.

"I don't mean that my head exactly rules my heart, I hope it doesn't. That presupposes a definite hardness, something cold and calculating. I'm not cold, I know. I'm not calculating. Certainly not where money in concerned. I would want the man I marry to be able to make more than I am able to make only for his own self-esteem, not because I would care. But I am very earnest about marriage. I do mean that my head would have to confirm what my heart says—it never has.

"I have just never met the man who completely stormed both my head and heart. One or the other, yes. Never both—never quite. I have never met the man for whom I could truthfully feel that the world, my world, would be well lost for love. I have never been so submerged that I lost sight and sound and consciousness of all else but that one man, that one love. I have never gone down for the third time. For the first and second times, yes," laughed Mary, "but I have always managed to grab the life-line on the third count.

"I have nothing against marriage, certainly. I have no 'theory' about marriage and a career not being possible. There are no family objections of any kind. I have always been as free as the air. My mother has never imposed any restraints on me. Perhaps," smiled Mary, "that's one reason I've never married. If there had ever been opposition I might have done what people usually do—fought it.

"I believe that marriage and a career can be compatible. For if a man and a woman are truly compatible everything is. Or I would be perfectly willing to give up my career for marriage and all that goes with it if the marriage were vital enough.

"I don't think I am what you might call 'marriage-minded' either. Some girls are. I'm not. I've never looked for love or for romance or for marriage. I'm not

EVERY NIGHT SHE CRIED HERSELF TO SLEEP

–then she learned how thousands have gained 10 to 25 lbs. QUICK!

NOW there's no longer any excuse for thousands to remain skinny, laughed at and friendless. For hosts of people who thought they were "born to be skinny," and who never could gain an ounce before, have put on 10 to 25 pounds of solid, naturally attractive flesh with this new, easy treatment—in just a few weeks!

Not only has this new discovery given them normally good-looking pounds, but also naturally clear skin, freedom from indigestion and constipation, new pep.

Why it builds up so quickly

Scientists recently discovered that no end of people are thin and rundown for the single reason that they do not get enough digestion-strengthening Vitamin B and blood-enriching iron in their daily food. Now the richest known source of this marvelous body-building Vitamin B is cultured ale yeast. By a new process the finest imported cultured ale yeast is concentrated 7 times—made 7 times more powerful. Then it is combined with 3 kinds of iron, pasteurized whole yeast and other valuable ingredients in little tablets called Ironized Yeast tablets.

If you, too, need these vital elements to build you up, get these new "7-power" Ironized Yeast tablets from your druggist today. Then, day after day as you take them, watch flat chest develop and skinny limbs round out to natural attractiveness. Constipation and indigestion from the same cause vanish, skin clears to normal beauty—you're a new person.

Money-back guarantee

No matter how skinny and rundown you may be, try these new Ironized Yeast tablets just a short time, and note the marvelous change. See if they don't build you up in just a few weeks, as they have thousands of others. If not delighted with the benefits of the very first package, your money instantly refunded.

Special FREE offer!

To start you building up your health right away, we make this absolutely FREE offer. Purchase a package of Ironized Yeast tablets at once, cut out the seal on the box and mail it to us with a clipping of this paragraph. We will send you a fascinating new book on health, "New Facts About Your Body." Remember, results with the very first package—or money refunded. At all druggists. Why Mary Brian Has Never Married!

looking now. I have never been influenced by cycles. I mean, it often happens that when the girls in a set begin to marry off other girls feel that they must do likewise. I never have. I've seen a good many of my friends marry—Esther Ralston, Joby Ralston, Dixie Lee, others. I've watched them buying trousseaux, filling hope chests, having showers—and I've never once felt a qualm, never felt envious, never thought 'Oh, dear, I'll be the only one left!' It's the same way," laughed Mary, "with babies. There are baby cycles, too. One girl will marry and have a baby and then all the other girls have babies, too. I'm just not subject to cycle influence, I guess.

"I'm not exaggeratedly maternal, either. I like babies and small children but I'm not given to rushing up to babies in the streets and gurgling over them. I like individual children as I like individual adults. If and when I marry I certainly hope to have children. But I wouldn't feel impelled to marry just to have children. I would have them because I would love the man I marry. I wouldn't love the man I marry for the sake of children.

"THEN, too, I think it's largely a matter of what a girl is doing—whether she marries early or not. If a girl is just holding down a job because she has to or because she doesn't know anything better to do then, naturally, marriage is the most important thing that can happen to her, almost the only important thing.

"But it isn't like that with me, you see. I am intensely interested in my work. I love it. It would take a completely engrossing marriage to top what I have and do now. I've got so many exciting things to think about that I'm not and never have been preoccupied with the idea of marriage.

"If I married I would miss the swift tempo of the life I live. I'd miss the freedom—the something-happening-every-hour. I'd miss not being able to pick up and leave for London on a twenty-four hour notice as I recently did. I'd miss the studio calls, the sets, the conferences, the scripts, the fittings, the phone calls, the cables, the feeling of being important in my own way, in my own right.

"I simply must meet the man who seems to me to be more important, more enthralling than anything my life now has to offer. I never have.

"I know how girls in small towns must feel when they read, as they have, that I've dated Gene Raymond or Buddy or Cary or Dick Powell. They must think, 'What is the matter with her? If only I had the chance!'

"But glamour," smiled Mary, "is largely a matter of distance. These boys do not seem to me as they seem to the girls who only see them on the screen. Not that I mean this as any disparagement to the boys—far from it. On the contrary, I think they are nicer than the girls who see them in pictures think they are.

"But after all, I'm used to attractive men. I can't be expected to fall on my face, to be bowled over, to go into a swoon every time I see a new attractive man.

"And not only that—I don't, you see, only go out on dates with these boys. I work with them, too. And when you work with a man in the studio, see him in all of his moods, eat with him in the commissaries, go off on location trips and trials with him, you can't feel that he is some remote god, something set apart. You're not nearly so apt to fall in love easily or casually when you spend your life doing love scenes with one attractive man after another as part of the day's work.

"I'm sure that if the average girl could 'listen in' to some of the talks we've had, the boys I've gone out with and I, they would be more than mildly surprised. We talk our problems over together. The boys like to discuss their problems and worries with a girl who understands them, having the same herself. They like to feel that they are with someone for whom they do not have to 'do their stuff.' So they don't do it, with me.

"I think," said Mary, "that the fact that every boy I have ever gone out with is still my friend should prove that there were no hectic romances, no broken hearts, certainly no broken faiths between us. For they are still my friends, even those who have married or those who are now going with other girls. Whenever I have been away and come home again they always drop in to see me, call me up.

Now and again there is some initial resentment to overcome. Not long ago I started to make a picture and was told that the boy playing opposite me was scared to death of me. He'd been warned that he would be 'another scalp' or something equally silly. He made up his mind to show me that he wanted no part of me. Comically enough the very first scene we had to do together was the big love scene—the last scene of the picture. And never did I get such a freeze-out, such a cold shoulder, such a refrigerated kiss in my whole life. Later we went on location and we were, necessarily, thrown a lot together. Well," laughed Mary, "he finally perceived that I had no dread design on him and we became very good friends and he took me out quite a bit. He says now," Mary laughed again, "that he should have taken heed after all!

If you sang "Tell me, pretty maiden, are there any more at home like you?" to Ann Rutherford, she'd say, "Uhuh—Judith Arlen." There's a story about them on Page 95

"But the point is that very often a girl who has the name of being popular scares men off. The majority of very nice men don't want to become interested in girls who are in the limelight. They don't want that much competition. They don't want to be taggers-on after wives who are more spectacular than they. It affronts the male pride, the need for superiority.

"I don't believe in very early marriage. I never have. I'm glad I've gone about as much as I have, with as many different boys and men. I've dated with men in New York and with men I met while I was in the play in London. Now, when I do marry I can never say, 'I'm missing so much.' I won't have missed anything. I'll know what it's all about. I'll be content—having had my fun and plenty of it. Undoubtedly going about so much does delay marriage.

"Undoubtedly going out with so many different boys and men makes a girl more choosy. But that's all to the good, I think. For when that girl chooses it's usually for keeps. She knows what she's doing. She knows what she wants. I know. I don't care a rap for good looks now. I don't care for money. There is one quality and only one, really, which I would demand in the man I marry and that quality is—tolerance. For real tolerance embraces everything—and is very hard to find.

"I WILL say this," said Mary. "I really should like to marry within the next two years. I'm ready for marriage now. I'm getting a bit tired of 'going out.' I don't need to go to any of the night spots to know what is going on. I can sit right at home, look at the clock and know what they are doing at the Troc or at the Grove any minute of any given hour. I even know just about what they're saying.

"I find that when I am at home now, which hasn't been very often of late, what with being in London and making personal appearance tours and so on—but when I am at home now I stay at home. When Cary or any of the boys come in I don't want to go out. We stay home and play Monopoly or cards or read or just sit and talk.

"But even now I'm not looking for marriage. If it happens—fine. I'm ready for it.

"I hope that I do marry within the next two years. I think, now, that I should. I don't believe in postponing marriage too long. If you do you're likely to get too set in your own ways.

"But I'm not in love now. I have no matrimonial intentions at the moment. When I do have I'll be glad, I'll be proud to tell the whole world."

The Four Unseen Women in Bob Taylor's Life

was going to have a cup of coffee, and told her . . . 'Now you listen to me. . . .'

"Speaking of dining rooms . . . they have a beautiful one in their house. Massive furniture, velvet draperies, one of those cozy carpets a couple of inches thick . . . really it's a beautiful dining room. But do you think they ever use it as such? Do you think they ever eat in it? Not on your life!

"Every time I go over there at meal time I find them huddled in the little breakfast room, bumping each other's elbows. They say the dining room space is too valuable to use for eating . . . it's much more desirable as an office. And that's exactly what they've turned it into. You see Virginia handles all my fan mail there from the house, but Mother and Grandmother refuse to be left idle, so they help with it too. They handle the postcards which mostly ask for pictures. They're easiest—no letters to be written. All they have to do is just put the pictures in the envelopes, and then Virginia addresses them. But the seriousness with which they tackle that job! And the rivalry between Grandmother and Mother. I'll come in and Mother will say, 'See, I stuffed 400 today!' And Grandmother will draw herself up and say, 'That's nothing! I stuffed 460!' They always refer to it as stuffing. Not very complimentary to my mug, but anyway I don't complain.

"OH, ABOUT Ida . . . this will amuse you. You know back in Nebraska a hired maid is a hired maid. She's probably some girl straight from the farm . . . who knows cooking and washing and 'settin' things' on the table. But there her knowledge stops and she never thinks of coming out of the kitchen. Well, that's the kind of maid that Mother and Grandmother were used to at home. But Ida isn't like that.

"Ida is first and second maid and lady's maid combined, and she just can't do enough for those two. She's always handing them things they drop, running errands for things they want, and they just can't get used to it! But the funniest thing is that she insists on serving them breakfast in bed, (never having had breakfast in bed before in their lives, they're always tipping the trays,) and she won't let them have more than the quota of coffee the doctor prescribed. Keeping them out of the kitchen as she does, they can't sneak any extra cup or two either!

"Mother went back to Nebraska last month for a little visit. And here's another example of the way she has kept

Leo Carrillo, masquerading as a bandit chief for Pickford-Lasky's brilliant new opus, The World is Mine, succeeds in bringing Nino Martini and Ida Lupino—the romantic leads—closer together. Glowering balefully in the background is Harold Huber, who was a comedian on the stage before the movies turned him into a villain, who looks here just like all Bad Men should look but, alas, too seldom do her feet on the ground. When she finally made up her mind to go, I said I would get her a compartment, but she insisted that she didn't need one. I'll never forget it! She said: 'You just get me the ticket, Buddy, and I'll sit up. It's not very far. I won't mind it a bit.'

"What did I do? I laughed, of course, and made her see how silly it was, too. As a matter of fact when I called the station there weren't any compartments left so I got her a drawing-room. She wrote me that she rattled around like a bean in a bucket!

"I don't want to give the impression that Mother is overly economical. Far from it. She knows I'm making more money now than I ever dreamed of making, and she wants me to have fun and nice things out of it. She's always encouraging me to spend more money for my clothes, my car, everything. But that's for me. For herself and the others she insists that they're just happy to be here, and that the being here is all they need.

"Once not long ago I had planned to do something which would have involved a big expenditure. I can't tell you what it was, but it was something purely social. Anyway I finally decided against it. And I didn't know until then that Mother had been hoping for that decision. When I told her about it she said: 'Good. Now that you've saved yourself that expense, why don't you buy yourself a Cadillac roadster?' I did, and no one was more pleased than she was.

"Yet, when I gave her a rather expensive birthday present a little later, I know she was a little upset about that. I gave her a party that night. Incidentally, it's the first party I've ever given, here or at home, or for anybody. I took Mother and a friend of hers, and Virginia and her beau, and Barbara to dinner at the Beverly Wilshire, and when Mother unfolded her napkin, there was her present on the plate—a diamond and sapphire bracelet. The tears jumped to her eyes and all she could say was, 'Oh, Buddy!'

"We had a great time that night dancing together . . . and that was her surprise to me. She had never danced before. But you should see her now. She's been taking dancing lesson, and she was so afraid I wouldn't approve. Approve! I thought it was wonderful! You see I was worried that they'd have a dull time of it when they came out here . . . leaving all their old friends at home, and all their old hangouts. That's why I do everything I can to encourage Grandmother with her garden, and Virginia with her work and Mother—yes, with her dancing, along with the many other things that absorb her interest.

"You should see me approving their clothes as they buy them, admiring the meat from that new butcher they deal with, and all the dozen and one other little things that help to make them feel settled and wanted in their new Hollywood home.

"THERE'S only one thing I haven't been able to swing . . . not yet, but maybe soon. And that's a chauffeur for them. Neither Mother nor Grandmother drives. Fortunately, Virginia does—so she pilots them around, but I'd much rather . . . well, maybe soon."

Handsome he may be, and an only child. But neither spoiled nor pampered. As his father was before him, a skilled doctor, a respected citizen, an adored and adoring "family man" so is Bob Taylor now. A man, "head man" among his women-folk!

MEET A NEW WOMAN, BILL- KAY'S BEEN TAKING KELPAMALT!
KAY, DARLING! HAVE YOU TOLD BILL OF OUR ENGAGEMENT

How Skinny, Weak, Rundown, Nervous Folks—by Making One Simple Change . . . Correcting IODINE STARVED GLANDS—Can Often Add 5 to 15 Lbs. in Just a Few Weeks!

—Build Rugged New Strength, Tireless Energy, Cool, Calm Nerves!

Here's new hope and courage for thousands of even "Naturally Skinny," weak, worn-out, haggard-looking men and women, whose energy and strength have been sapped by overwork and worry, who are nervous, irritable, always half-sick and ailing. No longer need you pass up the opportunities for good times, for romance, and for friendships and associations which may mean so much to you, all because you are skinny, sickly and forever tired out. Science now says that one of the principal causes of this skinniness, this weakness, and these tired-out, rundown conditions is GLANDS STARVING FOR IODINE.

When these glands don't work properly, all the food in the world can't help you . . . it just isn't turned into flesh, strength and energy. The result is you stay skinny, pale, tired out, run-down and nervous . . . and nobody loves a person who is always sick and complaining.

The most important gland—the one which actually controls body weight and strength-building—needs a definite ration of NATURAL ASSIMILABLE IODINE all the time to regulate metabolism (the body's process of converting digested food into firm flesh, new strength and energy.) Thousands say, "For NATURAL IODINE in convenient, concentrated and assimilable form, take Seedol KELPAMALT"—now recognized as the world's richest source of this precious substance. It contains 1300 times more iodine than oysters. 6 tablets alone contain more NATURAL IODINE than 486 lbs. of spinach or 1387 lbs. of lettuce.

Try Seedol KELPAMALT for a single week. Notice how much better you feel, how well you sleep, how your appetite improves! The color comes back into your cheeks. And—if you don't add at least 5 lbs. of solid, flattering flesh the first week, the trial is free. Your own doctor will approve this way. 100 Jumbo size Seedol Kelpamalt Tablets—four to five times the size of ordinary tablets—cost but a few cents a day to use. Get Seedol Kelpamalt today. Seedol Kelpamalt is sold at all good drug stores. If your dealer has not yet received his supply, send $1.00 for special introductory size bottle of 65 tablets to the address below.

New Headlines For Marian Marsh

Admiracion Shampoos—Olive Oil or Pine Tar—will make your hair a social asset massage is the first step in preparing my hair for a shampoo," Marian explained. "It stimulates circulation and gives the hair new life and sheen. But a massage should be soothing as well as stimulating." She smiled engagingly at Helen Hunt as if to assure her that her massage did have those two precious qualities.

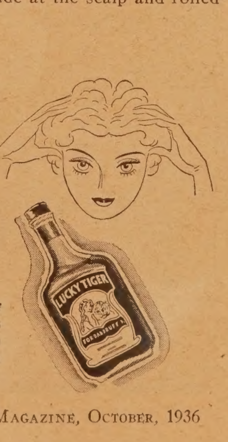
Obligingly, Miss Hunt demonstrated the correct position of the hands by placing her thumbs toward the back center of Marian's head with the fingers extending toward the front. With a slight pressure on the fingers the scalp was then rotated in a circular movement about one inch in diameter, and the fingers gradually worked back toward the ears until the entire scalp had been massaged. It is important to avoid scratching or irritating the scalp with the fingernails. The cushions of the fingers are used both in massaging and shampooing. Remember, too, that it is the scalp itself and not the fingertips which should be rotated.

A thorough brushing to remove cuticle and dead hair loosened by the massage was the next step in Marian's routine. The hair was divided into small units and each treated individually, with the brush placed on its side at the scalp and rolled with a sweeping movement through the full length of the hair.

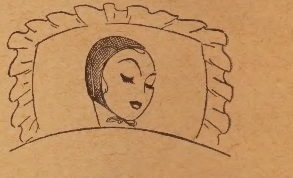


Lucky Tiger Hair Tonic plus a brisk massage daily equal a healthy scalp

"I keep my hair cut at shoulder length," Marian said, "as this gives me a day-into-night arrangement. It is short enough for curls and comfort during the day, yet long enough to style with individuality for evening. A permanent in the ends of my hair helps to hold the curls and makes it easier to dress.

"As my hair is fine textured, I have it washed at least once every four days, even more frequently when I am working. Frequent washing means that I must be particularly cautious in the selection of hair preparations."

Marian stressed the need for hot oil shampoos at regular intervals, particularly if the hair has been subjected to the drying rays of the sun. This was the day, she said, for such a treatment. Parting the hair in half-inch strips, Miss Hunt applied the heated oil to the entire scalp with a pad of cotton. Steaming hot towels were then wrapped around Marian's head to open the pores of the scalp and hasten the penetration of the oil.



A Don-A-Cap will keep your waves and curls tidy while you sleep

When the towels had cooled they were removed and the hair washed with a liquid shampoo. A lemon rinse to cut away any last vestige of foreign particles and to bring out the highlights of the hair concluded the washing process.

Brushing the hair dry after a shampoo is a little luxury which Marian enjoys when time permits. This final brushing burnishes the hair and distributes the natural oils evenly over its entire length, although Marian takes an added precaution against dry and brittle ends by spraying her hair with a final dash of liquid brilliantine.

RECONDITIONING THE HAIR

This is the time of year when girls start to lament the results on their hair of over exposure to wind, wave and sun. Dashing about hatless was fun while it lasted—but now look! Tresses once lustrous are streaked, dried and lifeless, with only a dejected little kink of a permanent down in the very ends.

Party days and prom nights ahead, so get busy now to restore life and beauty to your hair. Marian Marsh has furnished the routine; all you need furnish is a little energy and of course the most beneficial shampoos and tonics you can find.

Since frequent shampooing is the very basis for correct hair care, you will want a shampoo that combines a whole array of virtues. Admiracion Olive Oil Shampoo does just that, as it has a base of pure olive oil and also contains an exclusive tonic ingredient. A shampoo with Admiracion therefore gives you an oil treatment, a cleanser and tonic all in a single application. Best of all, for those of us who are always rushed for time, only one thorough rinsing is necessary. As there is no soap in this shampoo, don't expect it to lather.

If your hair is excessively oily, then I would recommend Admiracion Pine Tar Shampoo which is especially prepared for this condition.

Brushing the hair is like eating spinach—we hear so much about the merits of both that the story grows a little monotonous. Nevertheless, brushing is a rite of good grooming that no girl can afford to overlook. It not only invigorates the scalp but brings a natural luster to the hair. If you have found brushing your hair an arduous task, ten chances to one your brush is at fault, because I can assure you that with a Stranzit hair brush it becomes a delightful performance. You will like the narrow, light-weight back and tufted bristles of this brush which is priced from $1.50 to $3.50. The irregular bristle trim with the spaces between tufts is especially designed for preserving your wave while enhancing the loveliness of your hair.

Curls still hold their own in coiffures, formal and informal, and a new device for manufacturing curls is always a happy discovery. The Hump Hairpin Company is offering a tricky gadget which provides an amazingly simple and quick method. The ends of the hair are slipped through a slot in the metal curler (which looks like a pencil with a rubber eraser) and the hair rolled up tight to the head and secured with a bob pin, after which the curler is withdrawn. The curls, pinned to the head, dry with a maximum of comfort and a minimum of time. The curler and a dozen bob pins, called the Hold-Bob Curling Kit, come complete on a card for ten cents.

The battle against dandruff and an itching scalp is one that is waged by men and women alike. But it is a battle that must be won if perfect grooming and comfort are to be achieved. If you are troubled with those twin maladies, by all means use a good hair tonic religiously. Lucky Tiger Hair Tonic and Dandruff Remover is a splendid invigorator and will put a stop to those miserable scalp irritations. It can be used without fear of discoloration and leaves the hair soft and pliable.

A wave protector for night wear is a necessity for the girl who must preserve her fingerwave several days and cut precious minutes from her morning toilet. Don-A-Caps, which are made of net, are ideal for this purpose as they fit with a glove-like smoothness and can be obtained in a variety of styles—chin bands with snaps, chin ties and turban models. They are priced at twenty-five cents and fifty cents and for the small cost of a wave protector, many dollars can be saved in fingerwaves and marcels. The turban type is convenient for motoring and it's flattering too.

The manufacturers of Winx do think of everything for eye beauty! If you have difficulty in applying mascara so that it looks natural, then the new Winx Eyelash Comb and Mascara Applicator will solve your problem. Winx Creamy Mascara is applied with the tiny curved comb itself and by gently stroking through the lashes, each lash is separated and given that silky natural appearance which is so flattering. Daily combing of the lashes also acts as a stimulant and helps keep them in good condition.

There are ever so many new cosmetic aids on the market every day about which I would like to tell you that I do hope you will write me a letter presenting your personal beauty problems. Address Janet Lynn, SCREEN BOOK, 1501 Broadway. Please enclose stamped addressed envelope for reply.

BUT JACK, YOU MAY NOT LIKE ME SO WELL WHEN I UNMASK...
SUCH ALLURING EYES COULD BELONG ONLY TO A BEAUTIFUL GIRL GLORIA!
WINX Eye Beautifiers

It's amazing how WINX can improve your appearance... and personality, too! For with the long, silky, shadowy lashes which WINX gives you, comes a new sense of allure . . . bound to attract romance. So try this harmless tear-proof, streak-proof mascara. In three "balanced" shades (Blue-Black-Brown) and three convenient forms (Cake, Liquid, Cream). On sale at department, drug and 5 and 10 cent stores.

WINX Balanced Colors

Colors either blend or clash. In make-up, this means "naturalness" or that harsh, "made-up" look. All WINX colors blend 3 ways. 1. With complexion. 2. With eyes. 3. With each other. For example, WINX Brown Mascara blends with WINX Brown Eye Shadow or Eyebrow Pencil. Likewise, its tonal values are so balanced as to make it complementary to all other WINX colors. Thus, WINX gives you the secret of naturalness in eye beauty make-up.

Poor English!

How much is it costing you in wasted opportunity?

Every day your associates are judging you—by what you say and how you say it! Hazy ideas, ill-chosen words, halting sentences, crude, slovenly speech—these mark a man as loose in thinking. Thoughts clear-cut, words that give true shape and color, sentences aflame with power and originality—these are the things that proclaim ability, that win for their users swift advancement. Stop apologizing for poor English—it's inexcusable! In the quiet of your home—with LaSalle's help—you can learn to speak and write with real distinction, learn to make the words you utter and the letters you compose stamp you as educated, cultured, a power to reckon with in the business world. Complete details in an attractive 32-page book, "Effective Business English," sent you free upon request. Ask for it TODAY.

Errol Flynn, Wild Irishman

Flynn: "Simmo should be put in a glass case . . ." Simmo: "Errol and I spent years on an island tobacco plantation . . ."

range from producers to the most insignificant of writers and bit players. One of his best friends is a chap named Captain Simpson, with whom Errol spent two years in the Islands. "Simmo," as the natives called him, has just recently arrived in Hollywood. Errol has turned the town upside down for his benefit. He's an Irish gentleman of the old school—fifty, white-haired and loveable.

"I think Simmo should be put in a glass case and preserved for posterity," Errol fondly said one day. "Isn't he the most priceless person you've ever met?"

And of Errol, Simmo says, huskily:

"He's a fine lad, that Flynn. No one knows him better than I do. Didn't we spend two years living, eating and working together on an island tobacco plantation? That's when you get to know a man!"

THERE'S a small den off Errol's bedroom which is the popular gathering place along about cocktail time. We were sitting there waiting for him to change from his studio costume into his favorite clothes—tweed sports coat, flannels and scarf.

A man's voice, a bit off-key, was humming to the splashing of water. Apparently a shower was being had. Suddenly Errol appeared, smiling his usual welcome. The splashing in the bathroom continued. I was a bit puzzled until an English writer friend of Errol's came through the door.

"Frightfully decent of you, old chap," he said to Errol. Then, turning to the rest of us, "No hot water in my apartment. I called Flynn, here, to ask if I might take a shower!"

And that's the way it is at the Flynn home.

There was another time when another friend expressed the wish for a dog. Several days later, Errol called him on the phone asking him to stop by. After a brief conversation, the man started to leave. Errol escorted him to the door. There, in the man's car, was a cocker spaniel pup.

"Don't tell me you've another dog, Errol," his friend exclaimed, petting the pup and starting to take it out of the car.

"No," Errol smiled, embarrassedly, "but it looks as if you have!"

And with that he ducked back into the house, returning presently with the dog's pedigree papers, his moment of confusion having passed off.

ERROL loves to eat. Not the usual man's meal of steak and potatoes, but strange, new and unusual foods. He recently employed a Hindoo chef to prepare a real East Indian dinner for a party of ten. He likes to try everything from soft-shell crabs, brought in from the East coast, to Chinese food from the local Chinatown kitchens.

He had a birthday not long ago. Simmo and another friend, wishing to surprise him, thought up the original idea of having an Hawaiian luau cooked specially for the occasion. Nothing could have pleased Errol more. He tried everything set before him, including the poi. He admitted later he would be content to go along for sometime without any more poi. It's the only thing I know of that's had him completely stopped.

Errol will never be satisfied until he's had the best out of life. He loves to live nicely and somehow or other has always managed to do just that—no matter how broke he's been. Amusing is the story of his arrival in England from some faraway jaunt, traveling in fine style, but just succumbing to malaria. Discovering his illness, friends traced him to the most expensive hospital in London.

"Would you mind picking up my luggage, old son," he asked them. "I'm a bit short of cash at the moment."

The "luggage" consisted of half a dozen decrepit-looking boxes, nailed together every which way. Errol never did explain, but it was assumed he'd sold his own luggage in order to travel in the best possible way on the boat.

And the funny part of it is, or maybe it's just the luck of the Irish, something invariably pops up to tide him over the rough spots. In this particular instance, he was offered a rôle in a picture before he'd even left the hospital, enabling him to pay his bill—and more!

HE'S extremely loyal to his friends. He'll battle for them through thick and thin.

Speaking of his intimates, Errol has that strange faculty of making friends instantly with anyone from a bug-eyed street gamin to a blue-eyed country girl—or from an ice-hearted banker to a nice-hearted Papuan native. Of all of them, none can flatter himself by thinking they are intimates. Errol values those rare friendships far too much to dissipate them by profligacy.

I doubt that he has more than three real intimate friends—all men—and those three have a great bond between them because they share his confidence.

He complains bitterly because he can't remember to be thoughtful about little things. Yet he's one of the most considerate people I know and delights in surprising people.

Recently, he purchased a beautiful plot of land on which to build a home for himself and his wife, Lili Damita. He was simply bubbling over with excitement and finally broke down and confided in one of his friends, taking him up to look over the property and tell him at great length of his plans.

"Not a word to Lili, mind you," he admonished the friend. "I don't want her to see it or know a thing about it until the trees and lily ponds are in. I want her to be able to visualize just what it's to be like and to appreciate how beautiful it will be when it's finished. It doesn't look like anything as it is now."

So, bright and early one Sunday morning about a week ago he drove Lili up to their new estate. Errol was as pleased as a boy at her delighted exclamations.

ERROL loathes going to parties or any place where he'll have to dress. When the weather permits, he spends most of his time at home, when not working or playing a hard game of tennis, clad in a pair of shorts, writing or reading on his balcony.

He drives a hard bargain when dealing in business affairs. He should have been an agent instead of an actor. But he'd never sacrifice a friend to obtain his own ends. That's strictly out! He came to Hollywood—and pictures—to make money. And he's willing to work hard to get it. He has no patience with people in the industry who grumble.

He has a keen sense of the ridiculous and the most infectious chuckle. It starts way down inside and finally bubbles out and you find yourself laughing along with him whether you want to or not.

He wears himself out physically every day of the year. If he had his way, he'd retire every night at eleven. And usually does, incidentally. When he goes to New York, or some place new and exciting, he can go without any sleep at all—just because he doesn't want to miss anything.

He's extremely interested in people. He'll sit for minutes at a time, just studying facial expressions. He loathes insincerity and can usually detect it in others.

He's afraid of no man. He's impetuous. He's daring. And he looks you straight in the eye, which is the thing I like most about Errol Flynn.

Ken Dolan is Frances Langford's manager. He seems to manage her evenings off, too. Is her heart with him or with a footballish young man back in Florida?

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys — and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking acids and wastes out of the blood. A healthy person should pass about 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, this waste stays in the body and may become poisonous. It may start nagging backaches, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Don't let it lay you up.

Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills — used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

★★★★ Perfect Picture ★★★ Good Entertainment ★★ Not Bad
★ Ho Hum!

New Films

★★½

SUZY—With a World War background, this play is adroitly calculated to give top names, Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, and Cary Grant, their full appeal in generous balance of romantic hokum, melodrama and tender intimacies.—Metro.

THE DEVIL DOLL—Weird and bizarre story of sheer fantasy and realistic melodrama, based on the scientific hocus-pocus of converging human beings into miniature creatures responsive to the will of their creator. Camera miracles make this.—Metro.

MISTER CINDERELLA—Out-and-out slapstick built for audience laughter. Jack Haley clowns through the part of society-worshipping barber, with Arthur Treacher adding to the fun and Betty Furness furnishing love interest.—Roach-M-G-M.

THEY MET IN A TAXI—Gay comedy-drama with a Broadway background. Fay Wray, Chester Morris, and Lionel Stander assist in furnishing fine entertainment.—Columbia.

GRAND JURY—Fast moving, logical story of politics and gangsters with newspaper background. Clever dialogue and lotsa laughs. Louise Lattimer and Owen Davis, Jr., in leads.—Radio.

36 HOURS TO KILL—Fast-stepping G-man-crook melodrama. Brian Donlevy—G-man; Douglas Fowley—public enemy No. 1, and Gloria Stuart, sob-sister de luxe.—20th Century-Fox.

I'D GIVE MY LIFE—Dramatic entertainment of distinction and moving vitality. Original story—"The Noose." Stars Tom Brown, Frances Drake and Sir Guy Standing. All are excellent.—Paramount.

Previously Reviewed

SAN FRANCISCO—Tears, laughter, and thrills abound in this story of San Francisco's earthquake era. Clark Gable, as a rowdy nightclub owner; Jeanette MacDonald, as a superb singer; and Spencer Tracy, as a priest give inspired performances. The earthquake scenes shake your very soul. Here's a film you can't afford to miss.—Metro.

★★★½

MY MAN GODFREY—The gayest, fluffiest film of the year. Bill Powell buttles for Park Avenue's maddest family of which Carole Lombard is the youngest and maddest, with Alice Brady, and Gail Patrick vieing for top honors.—Universal.

THE BRIDE WALKS OUT—Playboy, Robert Young, steps in and husband, Gene Raymond, pouts until this delightful farce arrives at its hilarious ending. The beauteous bride is Barbara Stanwyck.—RKO-Radio.

M'LISS—Anne Shirley, as a wild mountain girl, gives a restrained performance in a story of sympathetic appeal. John Beal, Guy Kibbee, and Douglas Dumbrille portray the typical village characters expertly. You'll enjoy it.—RKO-Radio.

EARTHWORM TRACTORS—Joe E. Brown's best, yet. The story deals with a clumsy tractor salesman, pursued by two charming beauties. It is replete with thrills and will leave you limp from laughter.—Warners.

★★½

THREE WISE GUYS—They complicate things then straighten them out. Betty Furness and Robert Young furnish the love interest in this comedy.—Metro.

WE WENT TO COLLEGE—Comedy on college reunions, with Una Merkel, Walter Abel, Hugh Herbert and Charlie Butterworth. Need we say more?—Metro.

THREE CHEERS FOR LOVE—Eleanore Whitney dances lightly through this collegiate musical with the rah! rah! boys, Louis DaPron and Robert Cummings.—Paramount.

PUBLIC ENEMY'S WIFE—Margaret Lindsay and Cesar Romero in an exciting, G-man thriller with excellent comedy relief.—

WOMEN ARE TROUBLE—Stuart Erwin, Paul Kelly and Florence Rice in a fast-moving reporter-versus-gangster drama. Well-acted, well-written and above average entertainment.—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

HIGH TENSION—The amusing adventures and romance of a deep-sea diver and a gal writer of lurid pulp fiction. Brian Donlevy and Glenda Farrell have the leads and it's swell entertainment.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

HEARTS DIVIDED—Marion Davies and Dick Powell in a musical romance based on the historic marriage of Jerome Bonaparte and Elizabeth Patterson of New York. The song numbers are excellent and both stars make the most of rôles not equal to their abilities.—Warner Brothers.

THE RETURN OF SOPHIE LANG—Gertrude Michael scores in this dramatic tale of a reformed jewel thief who foils a master criminal. Not pretentious but satisfying.—Paramount.

PAROLE—Henry Hunter and Ann Preston make an impressive début in this dramatic screen exposé of the much-assailed prison parole system. Interesting without being entertaining.—Universal.

EARLY TO BED—Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland wed after 20 years' engagement, but the groom sleepwalks into crime.—Paramount.

HOT MONEY—Ross Alexander is smart as a smart-alec promoter in a fast-moving farce melodrama of the get-rich-quick school.—Warners.

JAIL BREAK—Murder mystery within prison walls. Smart young reporter solves the behind-bars killings to please June Travis. Full of tough eggs.—Warners.

THE BORDER PATROLMAN—The best western George O'Brien has made to date. A drama of the new west, hinging on the activities of smugglers along the Mexican border. Polly Ann Young is the gal.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

TICKET TO PARADISE—Roger Pryor and Wendy Barrie in an amusing comedy-drama, based on the adventures of a chap who simultaneously loses his memory and his heart. You'll like it.—Republic.

THE CRIME OF DR. FORBES—Grim, yet always interesting, is this newest screen contribution to the argument anent "mercy killings." Gloria Stuart gives her best performance to date and Robert Kent scores.—Twentieth Century-Fox.

CHAMPAGNE CHARLIE—Heiress Helen Wood falls into clutches of racketeer Paul Cavanagh who falls into her clutches and they fall into clinches.—20th Century-Fox.

Claudette Colbert's Brother Says . . . !

family name "Chauchoin" difficult to pronounce.) "I presume that every girl who grew up with older brothers will know what she means by that."

"As youngsters, we lived on Fifty-third Street in New York City, only a few blocks from Central Park. Since we had no yard, the park was our playground. Like most boys, I wasn't very keen about having my kid sister tagging along with me but mother always made me take her whenever I went to the park.

" 'If you're going to play with us boys,' I told Claudette, 'You'll have to play our way. We can't bother with sissies.'

"SO, RATHER than be dubbed a sissy (which we had given her to understand was in the same category with smallpox), she played our way. Sometimes that meant allowing her favorite doll to be tomahawked by the Indians. The dolls that weren't tomahawked frequently emerged from the battle minus arms and legs. Claudette mourned their fate and vowed that she would never again allow one of her dolls to be sacrificed. But the next time we'd have a different game and we would sell her on the idea that the doll would be rescued by the cowboys to get her to give her consent. But the cowboys seldom succeeded in rescuing the 'child' in time and the doll had to go to the hospital when the game was over.

"Claudette learned to swim the way a boy learns—by being dumped into the water and paddling dog fashion. She learned to skate by being put on the end of a crack-the-whip line and many's the tumble she took. But she would pick herself up and go on and if she got hurt she never went home and tattled to mother.

"I even taught her to box. She wasn't very enthusiastic about taking up boxing but I assured her that even though she was a girl she ought to know how to defend herself. My real reason of course was that I wanted somebody to practise on and I thought she would make a good sparring partner. In the beginning, she took a lot of punishment and had plenty of black and blue marks as souvenirs of our bouts. Then, to my surprise, she really got on to the boxing technique and was really trading punches with me. You might not think it to look at her but Claudette really packs a powerful wallop. I know—because she's given me some socks on the jaw that I still remember.

"THE thing that has always impressed me about Claudette is her sense of responsibility. Even as a youngster she had that in a marked degree. I remember an incident that happened when she was about thirteen. A friend of our family, Madame Burani, was taking her two sons to a camp in the Catskills and she invited Claudette and myself to go along. Madame Burani was an actress and when we had been in camp a few days she had a call to return to New York. That left us without a cook.

" 'Do you think you could do the cooking?' we asked Claudette.

" 'I'll try,' she agreed.

" 'If you can do the cooking you can stay,' we told her. 'But remember—we don't want any bird food. We want regular he-man chow, and plenty of it. If you can furnish it you can stay on in camp with us. If you can't, we'll put you on the next train and ship you back to New York.'

"She had never done any cooking in her life but having accepted the responsibility she really went in for it in a big way. I remember that for our first dinner she undertook to roast a leg of lamb. We only had a three burner coal oil stove with an oven on top of it and how she managed a roast I have no idea but it turned out swell. Of course we kidded her unmercifully about her cooking. We told her that her biscuits would sink a ship and that her pie crust was the nearest thing to leather we had ever seen and at least once a day we threatened to send her home.

"But she never got sore about our kidding. She stuck with the job and struggled over the stove which was one of the temperamental variety, preparing things she thought we would like.

"She is the same today. Whenever Claudette accepts a responsibility you can be sure that she will go through with it. When our father died I naturally felt that I was head of the household and that I should be responsible for my mother and sister. But Claudette wouldn't have it.

" 'No, Charlie, you're married now,' she told me. 'You have your own responsibilities. I am young and strong and I am going to make my way in the world. Looking after mother is my job.'

"CLAUDETTE was always a pretty girl but, brother-like, I never gave her the satisfaction of letting her know that I thought she was attractive. I always kidded her about her looks—particularly her legs. 'Don't ever let anybody see you in a bathing suit,' I told her repeatedly, 'if you want to make an impression. No man will ever fall for you if he gets a look at your legs.' I really had her believing that she had comedy legs.

"But the joke was on me. For later, in one of her first Broadway shows—I think it was The Barker—she had to wear a very tight, knee-length skirt. And the morning following the opening one of the critics, in commenting on her performance, added: 'Miss Colbert has the best looking

A new two-some: Nino Martini and Elissa Landi dine at the Victor Hugo. They have the jump on the gossips for they talk only Italian to one another pair of legs that have walked across a Broadway stage in many a moon.'

" 'So you thought my legs were funny, did you, Charlie,' she said gleefully. 'Well that just shows how much you know about legs. Suppose you read what the critics have to say about my legs!'

" 'They must have been wearing blinders,' I assured her.

"Both Claudette and myself were brought up in a very strict manner. We were never pampered and if we broke rules we were punished. Part of the punishment was going without dessert for a week or longer, depending upon the seriousness of the offense. Of course I was the one who was most often punished. But it also turned out to be a punishment for Claudette for mother was afraid that if Claudette was permitted to have dessert when I couldn't have any that it might make me feel resentful toward my little sister. So poor Claudette had to pay the price for my sins.

"UP UNTIL she was sixteen she was never allowed to go to a party, or even a movie, with a boy unless I went along to chaperon her. According to Claudette, however, I was an ideal chaperon because I always got interested in some girl and forgot all about looking out for my sister.

"I never will forget Claudette's first big date. It was with the captain of the New York University football team. He was a friend of mine and had often been at our home. He was a big, good-looking chap and when he invited her to the school prom she was thrilled to death.

"She didn't dare give him her answer until she had consulted mother. 'Do you think mother will let me go with him?'

" 'I'll use my influence,' I promised.

"Mother thought that Claudette was a little too young to have a date with a boy. But I assured her that Walter was okay.

"The day following the party I asked Claudette whether she had had a good time.

" 'It was wonderful,' she said. 'There was only one thing wrong.'

" 'What was that?' I asked.

" 'Well,' she said with a little wistful sigh, 'I had sort of hoped that Walter would kiss me—and he didn't!'

" 'He probably knew that I'd sock him in the jaw if he did,' I told her.

" 'You don't think it was because he didn't think me attractive, do you?' she asked.

" 'Of course not.'

"My assurance on that point seemed to make her feel much better.

"WHILE Claudette kids me about bringing her up the rough way," says Charlie, "I am inclined to think that the fact that she played with boys and learned, at a very early age, to stand on her own two feet has much to do with her being the sort of girl she is today. For while she is essentially a very feminine person, she has never resorted to feminine tricks or wiles to advance her career. She has a man's directness of manner and speech. And when she gives her word about anything it is as good as a contract. She isn't the least bit vain or conceited—and never has been. Of course if she had ever shown any signs of that when she was a kid the boys she played with would soon have taken it out of her.

"She appreciates the success she has achieved. And she has earned it. But success has never gone to her head and, knowing Claudette as I do, I am sure that it never will."

If I Hadn't Been An Actor

Certainly Gary has been very frankly and unassumingly "of the movies" ever since the day when he first loped onto a set, an extra, a few months after he had left his native Montana. He dated, in the days before his marriage with Sandra Shaw, many of the prettiest girls in town. The movie girls. As any young man, free, white and normal has a right to do. He goes to Hollywood parties. He entertains. He doesn't wear dark glasses when he is out in public. He never tries to conceal the fact that he began as an extra and began because he was broke.

The men on the set, electricians, props and so on call him by his first name, hail him as a fellow well met. He is always on time on the set. He never makes starrish demands. He works carefully, as any business-man would.

He doesn't discuss his wife, his home life because—well, men don't, you know. Do you, Mister Jones, expansively inform the man on the street what you said to your wife and what your wife said to you in the privacy of the boudoir? Do you make your wife's tastes, habits, intimate thoughts common property? I don't think so. And Gary doesn't, either.

A FEW days before, I was on the lot to see Jack Oakie. I beheld a long, lean figure riding a bike up and down the studio streets, dismounting to talk awhile with the studio boot-black. The bike came nearer and I perceived that it was Gary, an absorbed smile on his face, taking himself a ride. It might perfectly well have been Mr. Deeds going to town.

And I said to him, "Does the character of Mr. Deeds really fit you? I mean, are you Mr.-Deedish?"

Gary smiled—his eyes smile often when his mouth is grave—and he said, "Well, we both came from a small town, you know. Both of us believe that actions are more potent than words. And both of us had, so to speak, unexpected fortune dumped in our laps. Deeds got his by bequest. The movies give me mine, by degrees. There's a kinship between us, yes—although one of the few drawbacks of screen work is this business of being identified with the character you play. That can be bad."

I said, "Is Mr. Deeds your favorite picture?"

"Yes, I liked it. We had fun making it. I think the spirit shows on the screen. Frank Capra—what a director!—was allowed a free hand. It was a happy combination of director, cast and story. I liked Lives Of A Bengal Lancer, too, and A Farewell To Arms, and the one we are doing now interests me."

"BUT you don't really like being an actor at all, do you?" I asked—rather uneasily, feeling it a stupid question because the first premonition that I was about to undergo a complete reversal of all previous concepts about this quiet but warmly enthusiastic man sounded in my brain.

"Of course I do," said Gary, then, his blue eyes, friendly blue eyes, genuinely surprised. "I like being an actor very much or I wouldn't be one. And I should think my reason for liking to be one would be fairly obvious—" and this time there was laughter in the deep-set Cooper eyes.

He said, "I went into pictures originally because I was broke, wanted to make some money and, naturally, wanted to make it as rapidly as possible."

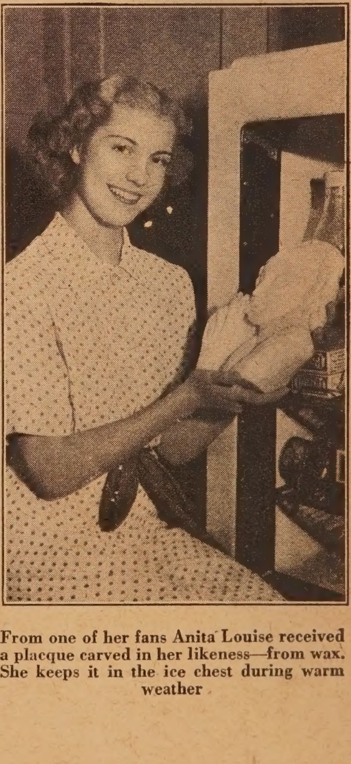
I couldn't resist the impulse, however dangerous, to ask Gary what about all this disliking association with movie people.

"That's nonsense," he quickly replied. "Because people who know me know that if I wanted to get away from anything, I would just get away, that's all. Not even for money, especially in these uncertain days, would I give more than, say a year, to doing anything I didn't feel was all right. Patience is not among my virtues. Sticking to something is only worth while when you are contented.

"I suppose you know when I first came to Los Angeles, I arrived with the idea of going in for art, commercial art, in any form. I had to have a job. In 1919 I set out to be a cartoonist on my home-town paper. I decided I needed a wider field for my activities, therefore, the trip to Los Angeles where I joined up with a theatrical agency as advertising solicitor, with a view to doing posters later on. The agency went bankrupt and so did my future and commercial art with it.

"I ate stray hamburgers. I was broke. Flat broke. I became an extra.

"But—I figured on giving no more than one year to it. Just one year. If, at the end of that time I hadn't made noticeable progress, I swore to myself I would give it up, go to some place like New York, and try something else. I had



From one of her fans Anita Louise received a placque carved in her likeness—from wax. She keeps it in the ice chest during warm weather even gotten so far as to give one year to trying New York, if that had happened.

"There was also a secret idea of trying to hook up with the Martin Johnsons, and that was gratified in 1931 when I did go to Africa in a hunting party with the Jerome Prestons.

"The point is that no matter what I would wind up doing, I would give it a year to find out if it was clicking or not. And so when I entered pictures I made that a mental reservation. My first year was almost up when, luckily, I was handed a bit in The Winning Of Barbara Worth following which, I was signed to a contract by Paramount. It just came in time. My duds were half packed and the maps were out. If it had happened a few weeks later—"

(And I thought, that slim, fatally, potent word "if"—for if Gary had not got his break when he did Mr. Deeds would never have gone to town.)

"If at first you don't succeed, etc., etc., etc., whatever that is," Gary was saying, "is something I don't believe much in. The average person has only a few vitally productive years. There isn't much use in wasting those years in futile endeavors, batting our brains out against blind alleys. It shouldn't take any man more than twelve months to find out whether he is adapted to the thing he is doing, or not. If one thing doesn't pan out, something else will. Try hard. If definite progress isn't made, and if you haven't worked up a genuine love for the job, chuck it—drop the ax and pick up the shovel.

"I LIKE pictures. I found that out in the first year.

"I like being an actor because I can gratify my nostalgia for far places, foreign peoples, variety, diversity, experience of every kind under the sun.

"Sure, I can have my experiences. I can go to far places without ever leaving the studio lot. And it isn't all make-believe, grease-paint, acting. Right now, for instance, on the set The General Died at Dawn (no, I am not 'the General') there are several hundred Chinese. Talking with them is highly interesting, hearing about old China and new China. When I leave you we are sitting down to a banquet on a Chinese 'delicacy'—eggs more than 300 years old. That should be an experience for the digestive tract" smiled Gary.

"When I was in Algiers a few years ago, I walked down the crowded streets of the town and thought, I have been here before. I felt at home, no sense of strangeness . . . I had been there before—when we made Morocco.

"When I was a boy in Montana, I used to wish that I had been born in the days when Custer rode his last ride, when Wild Bill Hickok made the Wild West 'wilder.' I imagined I could see those adventurous plainsmen, could hear the thunder of their horses' hooves. And now, the next picture slated for me will be The Plainsman.

Ginger Rogers cheek-to-cheeks it with Jack ("Nero") Benny at the Trocadero. Mary Livingstone knows all about it—and wonders vaguely if it'll improve his dancing

"THERE'S no monotony in motion pictures—at least not for me. Pictures take me to almost every port in the world, every people in the world give me every emotion, every experience; contact and collaboration with the greatest brains, the most colorful personalities of the world today and yesterday. What more can a rebel of routine ask for? And be paid for it?

"But don't you," I managed to say, "don't you dislike the publicity attached to being a star? I've heard. . . ."

And then Gary did genuinely amaze me. Then did the last shred of the popular Cooper legend do a lallapaloosa and a leave-taking. For he flashed that rare and breath-taking smile and said with emphasis, "Dislike it? Certainly not. I like it. It satisfies my ego. But believe me I can understand how easily a person can be affected by all the attention, flattery, applause and recognition that is showered upon the 'famous.' It's only human. Especially with men. It's part of the masculine nature to like attention. In the spotlight, and that's where we all like to be if the truth were to be told.

"Some of the public attention movie actors fall heir to is rather unpleasant. But for the level-headed, even spectacular singling-out is better than no attention at all. Actors must love it, else they wouldn't be actors. I am an exhibitionist. We are all exhibitionists or become so. The only time an actor really worries, as I see it, is when no one recognizes him at all. One of the soundest pieces of advice I ever got was from an old timer who said 'don't be annoyed with people requesting your autograph. The time to be annoyed is when they don't ask for it!'"

AND this from Gary! Gary of whom it is said, my dears, that he scorns publicity with a stupendous sultry scorn.

And thus were the Cooper legends dispelled forever from my mind.

I read, recently, an apt and wise description of the truly sophisticated man... "—a man who is kind, balanced, austere and fastidious is the very salt of the earth."

This description fits the real Gary Cooper.

To Be TRULY LOVELY
From Head to Toe

For Real Beauty, You Must Have a Soft, Alluring Skin—Free From Pimples and Blemishes

SMOOTH, satiny shoulders—lovely skin "all over"—a radiantly clear, youthful complexion—men admire them and modern style demands them.

To be truly lovely, you must rid all your skin of ugly blemishes—end pimples and eruptions on face and body—have a lovely complexion from head to toe. And thousands are doing it, with complete success.

Doctors know that the real cause of ugly blemishes is often a lack of Vitamin B Complex. With this vital element lacking, intestinal nerves and muscles become weak and sluggish. Poisons accumulate in the body. And constant skin eruptions result to rob you of beauty.

In such cases, pleasant-tasting Yeast Foam Tablets work wonders. This pure, dry yeast supplies Vitamin B Complex in ample quantities—strengthens intestinal nerves and muscles, and restores natural functions. Poisons are thrown off. And the skin quickly clears—becomes smooth and lovely.

Start now to win real, alluring beauty. Try Yeast Foam Tablets to restore your skin to youthful loveliness, as they have brought beauty to so many others.

The Best GRAY HAIR REMEDY IS MADE AT HOME

YOU can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy, by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, makes it soft and glossy and takes years off your looks. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off. Do not be handicapped by gray hair now when it is so economical and easy to get rid of it in your own home.

Rosalind Russell Tells How to Get Rid of a Rival!

she stood a very great chance of surpassing herself, making herself more memorable. At least, she could try.

Before long, Broadway was paging her; then Hollywood was courting her. She left her stock-company rivals behind. But she acquired a new, more dangerous set of rivals. Now, every time she plays a rôle, or another actress plays a similar rôle, the public holds them up as rivals, whether they think of themselves as such or not. And Rosalind is not irritated, worried, jealous. She considers it a good thing if there are other actresses capable of playing such varied rôles as she has had in Rendezvous, Under Two Flags, Craig's Wife (her latest—in which she co-stars with John Boles). She has all the more incentive to improve.

In her career, rivals have made her discover resources that she did not know she had. They have made her study herself, develop herself. They have helped her to find success, by making her find herself.

And in private life—if she had no rivals, how would she ever know when she had found love?

If there is any acid test of love—your love and his—a rival is it. If the man between you is the only man on earth who can make you happy, you will soon decide that he is worth fighting for. And if you are the girl who can make him happy, you will be able to stand comparison with any possible rival, just as he will. If either one of you cannot take the test, it is better that you both find it out before you go shopping for furniture. Furniture wouldn't be much company on lonely evenings.

BUT don't get a mental picture of Rosalind scouting around for rivals. She just has her eyes open when they appear.

"The person who goes looking for trouble can usually find it," she points out. "And rivalry can mean plenty of trouble if you go looking for it with jealous suspicion. People who are jealous invariably do the wrong things."

Rule No. 1 in the Russell credo is: Don't be jealous.

"'I have the quaint notion that if you want to be loved, you have to be big enough, emotionally, to be worthy of love. And jealousy is a petty emotion, which drives people to do petty things. It clouds anyone's vision. It never yet has made anyone a greater person, more charming, more lovable.'

It's a painful moment, that first moment of discovery that you have a rival. You have been walking on air, singing, when suddenly the ground comes up and hits you. You aren't as lovable as you thought you were. You haven't convinced him, as you have convinced yourself, that you are the girl for him. And you were so happy, the last time you were with him, and thought that he was equally as happy!

That is the moment that tests you.

If your reaction is a blind hatred for The Other Girl, a blind jealousy of her ability to attract him, and a blind resolution to win him back by all the feminine wiles in the book—then you are your own worst enemy. You aren't finding the cure for your heart-break. You are even risking more.

"It takes headwork to heal heartache. Hatred and jealousy and trickery won't do it. That's why I say that a girl is foolish to worry about a rival. She should be worrying about herself.

"If I had known a boy a fairly long time, long enough to learn to care for him, and he suddenly became interested in another girl, I most certainly would want to know why. But I would not look for the answer in The Other Girl. I would ask myself, 'Has he failed—or have I?'

"After all, there would be no Other Girl if he had not lost interest in me. I would face that fact. I would forget silly, pointless pride. I would take time out for a little honest soul-searching. Either he had shortcomings, or I did. And it would pay to find out which one.

"PERHAPS I would suddenly discover defects in him that I had carefully ignored before—defects that eventually would have brought a break between us, anyway. That would be a strange discovery; because, to care for him, I would have seen him often enough and over a long enough period of time to know him pretty thoroughly. But if I did make that discovery, if I suddenly saw that happiness with him would be short-lived, I would be thankful to the rival—who had made me see.

"I would ask myself why he had been interested in me in the first place. Then I would ask what I had done to hold that interest. Perhaps I would discover that I had done little; that I had failed to be as charming as I could have been; and that I had never let him become acquainted with the real me. And if I were sincerely convinced that we were temperamentally suited to each other, and could be breathlessly happy together, I would set about re-awakening his interest.

"I would not try to tear him away from my rival. I would not pursue him; I would not try to coerce him back. If he would be happier with the other girl, who am I, to wreck that happiness willfully? . . . I would make his return to me a matter of his own free choice. Then, if he did come back, his return would be all the sweeter. I would know that he had convinced himself that I was the girl for him. I would know then that I was rid of my rival permanently. I would have fewer fears of future rivals.

"I would not resort to feminine trickery to try to get him back. If I did get him back by trickery, I would have no assurance that I could hold him. Sometime, somewhere, some other girl might out-trick me . . . No, that would not be the way. The only way would be to have more charm, for him, than any other girl could have."

"THAT brings up the all-important question: What is charm?

"Charm is probably the most-abused word in the dictionary today. It is applied to anything, and everything, attractive about a person. Picture hats are called charming; sheer hosiery is called charming; I even read the other day that to be charming in the summertime, a girl should wear organdy. As if charm is something that you put on or take off—or change with the seasons!

"Charm is constantly confused with physical perfection. But everyone knows people, homelier than gas masks, who are utterly charming. No, charm is not mere beauty. Some think of charm as exquisite manners. But everyone knows people, rough and unpolished, who are completely charming. Money cannot buy charm; you can find it in hovels, in slums.

It is not something peculiar to youth or to maturity.

"It is not something shallow, on the surface. It is an inner quality—sensed, not seen. Something innate. You can see demonstrations of charm, but not charm itself. Charm is character. Charm is self.

"Every girl wants to be loved for herself and herself alone. She will be sure then that the love she wins will be hers forever, for there is no one exactly like her anywhere on earth. But so many girls are never themselves! They are forever trying to be other people. Every few weeks, they change their appearance; they experiment with various affectations; they pretend emotions and interests that they do not feel. They are hollow, shallow, superficial, un-charming. For charm is something honest and enduring and changeless.

"The only safe, sane, sure way to get rid of a rival is to be more charming than she is. I hope I would never lose sight of that fact. I would not try to change my appearance or my personality or resort to other subterfuges. It would be too hard living with myself afterward, if I had to live lies . . . No—what I would do would be to study myself, try to be myself more than ever. More interesting than before.

"After all, I have one terrific 'in'. I had once charmed him a little. He had once liked me for what I was. Why should I change now? My one hope lies in not changing, but in being more charming in the same way, being more myself. If he is the man I think he is, he has respect for honesty. He has always been honest with me. The least that he can expect in return is for me to be honest with him.

"And what if this doesn't win him back? If he becomes convinced that The Other Girl is more his type—well, it would be better that I found it out now, rather than some time later. And it certainly would be much easier for me to be philosophical—to say, 'Well, I guess we aren't intended for each other, after all'—if I had been myself, than if I had tried to trick him into returning. At least, my conscience would be healthy. That would be something. It would help to mend the heart-break.

"But if he does come back to me, I have the inner assurance that it is because I am I. He loves me as I love him—faults and all. I can be fairly sure that I am rid of all rivals for all time. For I shall take special pains not to lose him a second time."

RULE No. 2 in the Russell credo is: Know yourself—and be yourself.

"You can't be charming unless you do know yourself, and are yourself. But you can't be charming if you are self-centered. List the people that you, yourself, think of as charming, and you'll discover that they aren't just people who are attractively natural and unaffected and honest, who expect to be liked as they are or not at all. They are also people who are charming to you, who seem to be interested in you just as you are, and who seem to understand you. You can't help thinking of them as unselfish, warm-hearted.

"Then think of yourself. Are you interested in people, all kinds and varieties of people? And are you capable of registering that interest, making them feel that you understand them or would like to understand them? Then you do have charm.

"For to win 'him' back, you will have to do more than revive his interest in you. You will have to convince him more than ever before of your interest in him, your ability to understand him."

Rosalind suspects that James Branch Cabell made a shrewd observation when he wrote (in Jurgen), "Few women ever bother to understand the men they love."

"Love, lasting love, is a game of give-and-take—and one rule of the game is that you must give as much as you take. You can't expect attention without giving it. You can't expect understanding without giving it. You can't take a suitor for granted without being taken for granted in return. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why you have suddenly acquired a rival. She hasn't taken him for granted; and she has shown an unwavering interest in him; she seems to understand him.

"Maybe he will become convinced that she does understand him; and, again, maybe he won't. You still have a fighting chance. After all, you have known him much longer than she has. You should know, by this time, his likes and dislikes, interests, ambitions. You should be capable of understanding him. And when you meet again, you should be able to find something to talk about besides the weather. You should be able to talk about something that you know will interest him. You should be able to do that much to show a sharing of interests.

"And, if you are smart, the ending should be a romantic reunion."

RULE No. 3 in the Russell credo is: Give as you would receive.

Of course, there are other methods.

You can talk about your rival, ridicule her, run her down.

You can go tragic and tell your friends how "hurt" you are.

You can try tears or temperament or threats—but they will never win you any permanent victory.

You can pretend indifference to the boy's change of heart, just to make him wonder if you can get along without him—and run the danger of convincing him that you can.

You can try to make him jealous by pretending interest in someone else—but that may only make him show more interest in the rival.

IF YOUR rival is a completely different type from you, and you set out to outdo her at her technique—you may wake up to discover that the reason why he liked you was because of what you were in the first place.

You can try to flatter him by pursuing him—but you can also make him wonder if you aren't husband-hunting.

You can take a course of beauty treatments, buy new clothes, try to be sensationally attractive—but your rival can too.

Rosalind Russell—who has very, very clear eyes—has seen the other methods tried, and she has seen them fail. They have failed because they have not counteracted the reasons for the appearance of the rivals.

That is why Rosalind believes that the way to get rid of a rival is to Worry about yourself—not the rival.

Know yourself—and be yourself.
Give as you would receive.

You Never Heard This About Marlene

three busses and numerous trucks, drivers had the lives of the company in their hands!

One eventful morning the dreaded and inevitable happened. A slight shifting of the sand the night before had badly undermined the road in one place. But since the first group of cars had passed over it successfully, the damage was still undiscovered when Marlene Dietrich's car came along. The wireless operator at the beginning of the road communicated with his co-worker at the other end. "Keep the road open. Miss Dietrich's car is coming over. I'll wait for your report."

Minutes passed. Too many of them. The operator again signalled his confrère, "Did Miss Dietrich get through all right?" The answer clicked back, "Haven't seen her. Report at once!" They gave her a few more minutes. Still no word, and then the wireman sent a boy off on foot. A few minutes later he came back over the dunes, running, waving, gesticulating wildly. "They're off the road . . . they turned over in the sand!"

A rescue party set out at once. Heaven knows what they expected to find, but what they did find was furthest from their imaginings. There was the car, as the boy had said—off the road and on its side in the sand. But there was Miss Dietrich standing without assistance on the road, with her camera to her eye and gleefully gloating: "This will be the best picture I have taken so far! Without it, back in Hollywood, they would never believe there is such danger down here." Far from being nervous, shaken and mentally upset as many a star would have been, Miss Dietrich was accepting it as part of the game—and the fun.

AGAIN Miss Dietrich proved her mettle when she fainted one day on the set—and failed to make a fuss about it afterward. Those who stood by and watched her come to, and heard her say, "Well, where do we all go from here?"—smiling sheepishly like a little girl who is apologizing for her little-girlishness—looked at each other and gasped! What! no hysterics, no reverberations, no aftermath drama? Not an ounce, it seemed, in the whole Dietrich make-up!

But if Marlene Dietrich needed no smelling salts herself, she was, in a way, a kind of smelling salts to the rest of the company. Her good humor was boundless from one end of the long white-heat day to the other.

One day she and Richard Boleslawski, the director, went to no end of trouble to plant a laugh on Jamiel Hasson, the company's technical adviser, with whom she had worked on her first desert picture, Morocco, five years ago. They had finished rehearsing one small scene and were ready for the take. Miss Dietrich, as Domini, while walking through the town stops and asks one of the Arab children his name. (The boy had been chosen from 150 Mexican children and was proud as punch to be allowed to say two words.) Though he had told her in rehearsal that his name was Tommie Munnoz, he was entirely willing to change it to Jamiel Hasson as long as Miss Dietrich asked him to. And he also promised not to laugh—and to say it good and loud so that Mr. Hasson would be sure to hear him. The cameras turned over and it was a take! And much to Jamiel's bewilderment the boy said that his name was Jamiel Hasson. Mr. Boleslawski called "cut" and the whole cast whooped at the chagrin and the very feeble smile on Mr. Hasson's face. And he wasn't terribly surprised to find that his old friend Marlene had been the instigator of the "gag."

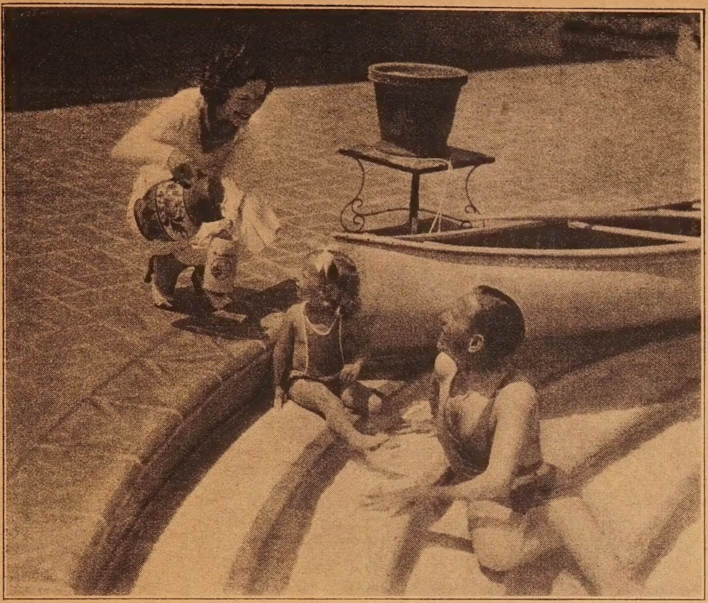
HER picture-taking and picture-posing were other examples of her antics. She would stand there with her legs set firmly apart, clad in her Arabian riding costume, her color movie camera to her eyes, shooting everything and everybody in sight, in the most outlandish poses. And always she whistled quietly to herself. Gay, lilting tunes, her mouth pursed, her eyes a-glitter. She took pictures of the Arab children, the morose donkeys, the mangy camels, the chewing goats. She took pictures of Charles Boyer and of Basil Rathbone, and of Henry Kleinbach and Joseph Schildkraut in their colorful guide costumes. And no matter whose picture she took, man or menagerie, always afterward she would say, "Thank you so much."

She posed willingly too, for the others who had cameras. Once when Rathbone wanted to film one of the large snakes they kept on the set in a box, Dietrich agreed to pose sitting behind the box, and looking over it. But when Rathbone "panned up" to add Miss Dietrich's lovely head to the scene, he found her, not as Dietrich, but as a snake. As the snake a moment before had been darting its head, and hissing and squirming so Dietrich was now doing, much to the delight of everyone. Probably no more "informal" picture of Dietrich has ever been taken.

Editor's note: That photograph of Marlene would have been printed here for your amusement but it did not, alas, lend itself to reproduction—having been captured on the tiniest size of motion picture color film.

HER devilment further evidenced itself in the merry-go-round chase she gave still-cameraman Kenny Alexander. Perched astride a high stool near the camera, where she was wont to sit when not working, she furtively watched Kenny setting up his tripod hoping to get a crack at those famous Dietrich legs bare to the knees and draped around the stool as they were. But then just as he was about to flash the bulb the mischievous Dietrich would move, and down would come the legs and the skirt—and Kenny's hopes. He didn't know that she was purposely teasing him. He followed her around like one of her trailing scarfs, and from the rear he couldn't see that she was grinning.

It is only natural that photographs and photography should interest Dietrich as much as they do. One day I asked her when she had become interested in this camera hobby and where she had learned the art. She answered simply, "For six years I worked with the greatest photographer of them all—the greatest camera man in the world. It is only natural that I should have learned much from him.



Gracie Allen carries coals to New Castle. Pardon us, she carries water to the swimming pool where adopted daughter, Sandra, and husband, George Burns, spend many hours. That canoe in the background was bought by Gracie when she heard she must learn to paddle for scenes in her new picture. She practiced in the pool—singing madly as she went 'round and 'round

He was the only man who knew how to really photograph me. No one will ever know how much I miss him. Now when I go into the portrait gallery for portrait stills I have to pose and photograph myself. Because of my close work with him, I am the only one who can take pictures as he would have them done!"

It requires little conjecture to know she was speaking of Von Sternberg.

Though Miss Dietrich may still feel the need of Von Sternberg's artistry, everyone felt, watching her through the Garden of Allah trial, that without him she was more herself, more personable, human and real than she had ever been before. Would he have let her whistle around the set, like any street urchin, had he been there? Would he have listened, amused, to her abundance of American slang, which, like most foreigners, she adores and uses on every opportune and in-opportune occasion.

Would he, if he could have had his say, have permitted her to have her eleven-year-old daughter visit her at the camp. . . . the daughter taller by an inch than her mother? Incidentally, even Miss Dietrich's cooking, about which you have heard so much, was an A. S. (After Sternberg) innovation . . . at least so far as publicizing of it was concerned. And Von Sternberg's point is to be respected—there is certainly nothing glamorous about a stove.

Be that as it may, Dietrich did whistle and slang and pose like a snake, and Maria did come to visit her, and if the tantalizing nose-quivering odors coming from her tent meant anything, Dietrich was also doing no little cooking herself! And regardless of what Von Sternberg might have thought everyone else was admiring her for it.

UNLIKE most stars on location neither did she seek the seclusion of her own tent on every slightest provocation. When on location do as the others do . . . a succinct rule, and here is one star who observed it. Bridge, backgammon, monopoly and dice were the order of the evenings, and Miss Dietrich could always be found "in" on at least one of these games—now serious, now hilarious, keeping constant pace with the mood of the others.

Her abandon of the privileges of stardom was glimpsed further when Richard Boleslawski asked her for her permission to show each day's rushes to the company at large . . . extras, prop men, waiters included. Now it's a known fact that stars do not like to have others see their rushes . . . their mistakes, their "blow-ups," their sometimes—bad shots. But: "Why not, Boley?" said Dietrich. "Perhaps they will have some suggestions." Whereupon Boleslawski explained that that was his idea too, only he had hardly dared to hope she would share it.

This story is not about Marlene Dietrich's marriage, or her possible divorce, or about bringing up her daughter—or about any of the other hard-to-get angles which might be termed sensational by a writer and his editor. It is merely the story of a glamorous woman stripped of her glamor by a blazing sun and the constant threat of the desert . . . the story, in small detail, of a woman who stood up under the test.

It's little wonder that they looked up to her, as few picture crews had ever looked up to her before . . . admiring her spunk, her sportsmanship, her democracy and her gaiety . . . and it's little wonder that they affectionately elected her Mayor.

George Raft Finds a New Young Love

work to keep. The lady of his heart is small Joan Pine, daughter of Virginia, beautiful and blonde and aged—briefly—four.

"I gotta be there to watch her eat her supper every night," George says proudly. "With every mouthful she says, 'Uncle Georgie Boy, look at me—you're not looking! Feed Joanie!'"

You think you know your Hollywood, but can you picture George Raft, in his high waisted trousers and coats that have the very latest thing in lapels, spooning oatmeal into a small girl's mouth, and coaxing, "Eat it all up, Joanie! Come, come, you don't catch Carole Lombard leaving her cereal!"

You have read in stories of George, about his boyhood in the Hell's Kitchen section of New York City, his career at night clubs, and his gangster acquaintances.

You have watched him dancing the rhumba or handling a gat on the screen. But you never pictured him taking off a little girl's shoes and buttoning her up in a pair of Mickey Mouse pajamas.

"She won't let anybody else undress her," Uncle Georgie explains. "That's why I try to get away from the set early. Sometimes if I'm late I come in my make-up and then she points her finger at me and shouts, 'Ham!' And I guess she's about right at that. And afterwards she's tucked into bed, then I gotta read Mother Goose to her, and that," says George feelingly, "is fierce! Listen, I know all those nursery rhymes by heart, 'Tom, the Piper's Son,' and the one about the blackbirds in the pie, and Mother Hubbard—and did you ever notice they're hard reading, too! The other night I said to her, Joanie, I don't know as Uncle Georgie can take much more of this!' I got her some more books for her birthday, older ones to keep me from going nutty."

IT WAS a case of love at sight between George and Joan. To be sure, he met her first when he was calling on her mother, pretty Virginia Pine, but now he comes to call whether Virginia is there or not. There is some strange bond of understanding between this hard-boiled New York ex-prize fighter, and this exquisite child, some basic simplicity and sweetness in George Raft's make-up which probably his best friends, his studio associates, and even the women who admire him never have suspected.

No one of his most ardent fans who watch him on the screen would recognize him as the man who hops obediently about the room with four-year-old Joanie, while she "dances" to the radio. And certainly no movie audience has ever watched a better performance of eccentric dancing than the one George Raft gave to an audience of one on that dark day in Joan Pine's short life when she had her tonsils out.

"I made Virginia have the doctor come early so I could be there to help before I had to get to the studio," George will tell you. "Gee, it was—well, it was tough to watch them give a baby like that ether . . . see her lying there so limp and little. After it was over and I was at the studio, I bet I called up twenty times to see how she was getting along—there wasn't much work done on the picture that day. I was all shot to pieces. And soon as I could get away a friend of mine from Chicago, and I went shopping for toys a kid could play with in bed, then we went up and put on a vaudeville show for her."

He looks as though he knew the address of all the night clubs and speakeasies. But he can tell you glibly where the best toys can be found, and the cutest little girl berets and sweaters. He is shy of being recognized on Hollywood streets —except when he has Joan with him.

"You should have seen us the other day coming out of the Broadway store," grins George. "Listen, that kid had made me buy the place out. We had a doll baby carriage, and a kiddie car and a set of China dishes and a top, and would she let any of it be sent home? No. We had to carry it. You should have seen Uncle Georgie, hanging on to the kid's hand and trying to keep all those toys under control, and everybody staring and grinning!"

"I suppose," he goes on, shaking his head, "I spoil Joan. Now whenever I ask her, 'Where shall Uncle Georgie take Joanie for a walk?' she says, 'To see the toys!' She insisted on taking the tricycle I gave her to New York on the pullman with her. But how can you help it? And I don't know—maybe a little spoiling is good for kids. That's something I missed myself, so now I'm always stopping youngsters on the street and slipping 'em quarters to sort of make up for the sodas I didn't have and the movies I didn't go to. I love children—always have."

"There's a little girl who hangs around the studio gate. The other day she sneaked in somehow and demanded to see George Raft. She was only four years old, but she knew which star she wanted to see! He had given her a dollar to buy an autograph book, and she wanted his name first!

Two years ago on his personal appearance tour, women in the audiences mobbed George Raft, tore his buttons off as souvenirs, tossed their engagement rings onto the stage at his feet, and here he sits grinning sheepishly with pride because a four-year-old had chosen him as her favorite star. And you think you know Hollywood!

"Her mother and I took Joan shopping the other day," George goes on, "Virginia bought her shoes and picked out a swell little coat for her, dark blue and plain, and a beret with a gold star on it, and some blue and white sweaters. Then we took her to the studio to lunch. All the directors stared at her and wanted her in a picture, but I wouldn't have that. I think when a kid goes onto the screen you kind of lose her. She doesn't belong to you any longer—see what I mean? She's everybody's baby."

You've read interviews with George Raft on almost every subject which the minds of writers could conceive, but you've never read an interview with George Raft on Bringing Up Children.

Now that George's second wife, Grace Mulrooney, a pretty, dark-haired stenographer whom he married in New York City on June 15, 1923—and from whom he was separated five years later—is said to be taking the first divorce steps, Hollywood wonders if George will not one day be more than just a buddy to Joan Pine.

Follow Screen Book's Girl To Stardom!

Marjorie managed to get a few things out of her New York stay that came to her only on the strength of her appearance and her candid, southern charm. Marjorie is a Kentuckian . . . and a Kentucky Colonel, too. However, she goes in for Coca-Colas instead of mint juleps.

The first week she was in New York, Marjorie went out and lined herself up enough engagements as a photographer's model to average a weekly income of seventy-five dollars for the duration of her stay. Not so bad for a girl just out of college. In between times, she managed to meet a few of the literati, and see all the plays; to meet a few college boys, and see all the football games . . . with Rubynelle, of course; and to work so hard at her career that the studio scouts who had come to scoff were remaining to pray . . . pray that Marjorie take a screen test.

Rubynelle was delighted, of course. Even her vivid hopes for Marjorie hadn't gone quite that far. Marjorie herself had only one thing to say . . .

"I'll take a test . . . if you think I'm good enough."

Marjorie wasn't good enough. She realized it, and so did the Warner Brothers' New York office. And they proceeded to make her over. They didn't pardon her southern accent. Marjorie had to learn to use a bit less of the drawl and a bit more of the good old Yankee "r." Marjorie had to learn how to enter a room, too. She'd entered a number of them in the past, sometimes emerging with fraternity pins and dates for June Week at Annapolis, but that didn't mean anything to Warners'. Perhaps it was because Marjorie was a bit bewildered by all that was happening to her and showed it, that they said,

"You walk in like a little girl. Try to have presence!"

The next time Marjorie entered a room in which she might expect to find a talent scout, she had her shoulders back, her head high, and an expression of supreme confidence on her face . . . a confidence much more supreme than she felt.

"Nix," was the decree. "Now you look snooty."

"Well, what do you want me to do?" Marjorie demanded.

"Be yourself," they told her. Which was the best advice anyone could have given her. Marjorie's self is a frank, gracious self, and it scored her a hundred per cent rating and a contract. Could any girl ask more?

Marjorie's first friend in Hollywood was Pat O'Brien. She was cast as his secretary in China Clipper. It was her first assignment, and, being a little nervous, she couldn't keep her voice from going way up to the higher registers. A girl's voice in the higher registers records like nothing so much as a flute gone mad. Mr. O'Brien, knowing this, managed to muff his lines in every scene in which Marjorie didn't sound just right. And then he'd say, "There I go . . . blowing up again. All my fault."

Greater friendship hath no man, says Marjorie, than he who bloweth up in a scene for a friend. However, Marjorie won't be putting anyone's friendship to a test like that again.

Following that, she play-acted in Polo Joe and Loud Speaker Lowdown. She's working now in God's Country and the Woman . . . and doing a swell job.

When Marjorie was in New York, she met a boy who had a boat. Marjorie learned to love sailing, and the boy . . . a young ensign . . . told her that if she ever lived on the coast, he'd see that she had something to sail in. When Marjorie's contract brought her to Hollywood, the boy remembered his promise, and presented Marjorie with a tiny sailboat. And now, Marjorie is spending most of her time bouncing around on the Pacific waves, and being glad that Rubynelle Parks made her join the SCREEN BOOK contest.

—By MARCELLA MARCH.

It's love in bloom—or is it? William Frawley, Roscoe Karns and Lynne Overman, the benedicts in Three Married Men, scream for a place on the quartette that will "sing" in The Big Broadcast of 1937. Can't something be done about things like this?

NO MORE INK SPOTS

on Hands, Clothes, Woodwork, or Rugs

WHEN THEY START HOMEWORK—

due to Parker's new ink that washes out without trace!

Parker WASHABLE Qu*ink* is the only ink that can be spilled SAFELY. And ink is sure to be spilled sometime. So throw out your present ink and take the precaution of getting WASHABLE Qu*ink* before another day of school.

One housewife writes us that 15c spent for Parker WASHABLE Qu*ink* saved her $500 rug from ruin.

The Parker Pen Company spent $68,000 to develop Qu*ink* to guard the celebrated Parker Pens from sediment left by pen-clogging inks. A harmless ingredient in Qu*ink* dissolves sediment—cleanses your pen as it writes—a Parker or any other pen. This ends clogging. Qu*ink* starts instantly—works like a charm. And Qu*ink* dries so fast on paper that people say, "I've thrown away my blotters and old ink."

Don't get our PERMANENT Qu*ink* unless it's for everlasting records. It's as permanent as the paper. And don't risk other so-called washable inks that may leave a stain. Be sure to ask for WASHABLE QU*INK* by its full name. Not a watery ink, but rich, full-bodied, and brilliant in color. 15c or 25c.

Exposing New Fall Hosiery

rusts, tweeds for town and country wear and is a dashing contrast to black.

CAFE CLAIR: A vivacious light brown, a smart development of a rich mocha tone with a soft glow. Keys with costumes in warm browns, wine, rust and all renditions of darker green and is a high style contrast to black. It is extremely smart in sheer versions with bronze shoes for informal dinner wear.

TAILLEUR BROWN: A subtle brown of metallic cast significant with costumes in darker brown, greens, vintage tones of brownish cast, such as "dregs of wine" type and black. Because of the tendency towards lighter hosiery this is the only dark shade for Fall and therefore only smart in sheer versions.

DEBONAIR: A smart, animated beige to wear with vintage reds, eggplant purple, the entire range of blues, greys, black and the soft mellowed pottery tones.

JAUNTY: A versatile neutral beige. Has strong acceptance for general wear with navy and other blues, greys, black and the subdued pottery tones.

SAUNTER: A subdued beige of brownish cast. A very popular town shade for wear with brown, green including yellowish and bluish green, vintage tones of brownish cast, greys and tweed in smart Autumnal colorings.

SMOKETONE: A medium grey of taupe cast. Stressed with all tones of grey, amethyst, mulberry, navy, cold blues of the stone type and black. Especially suitable in sheer hose.

BURNT OCHRE: A radiant sun tone carried over from the summer with increased prestige for Fall. Particularly smart for formal afternoon and evening wear. A glowing complement to costumes in the new "Pain brule" or burnt bread tones, gold, copper and rust shades, warm browns, greens and blues. Wear this with any of the bronze or leather tone shoes and with gold or silver evening slippers.

BURNT COPPER: A glowing copper. The success attained by this burnished copper hue during the past season again endorses it for Fall wear with the new renditions of copper, rust and leather types of tan, warm bronze, green, navy, black and the lively paddock colors.

BOKARI: Dark neutral beige, especially smart for early Fall wear. Stressed as a complement to neutral browns and beiges, bluish greens, navy and medium blues, deep cloudy pastels and black.

GLOAMING: Dark grey of bluish undertone. A smart Fall shade to wear with wine and oxblood shades, purples, dark greys, taupes, navy and black.

NONCHALANT: Clear light brown. Keys well with warm browns, greens, rusts, rich Autumn tones and certain bright Fall and winter colors.

AUTUMN LEAF: Light Autumn brown, stressed as a smart transition shade from late summer to Fall. Complements a wide range of browns and beige tones, English mixtures, rust and green.

SAMOA: Subdued medium brown. A preferred neutral tone for general wear with medium and dark neutral browns and dark greens.

SWAGGER BROWN: Sophisticated wine brown to be worn with brown.

"CLEVER WOMEN DON'T GROW OLD!"

Women no longer are judged by their years—but by their charms and enthusiasms. Jeanette tells how any woman, no matter what her status in life, can preserve those two priceless qualities. Read the inspiring story in anyway, the cutest—is between June Lang, twenty-year old Fox contractee, and Spanky McFarland, seven-year old protege of Hal Roach's OUR GANG. No kidding, Spanky has such a crush on June since meeting her the other day on his lot (where she was visiting her real love, Joe Rivkin, Casting Director), that he 'phoned her and invited her to the beach the very next day. And don't think he's any small fry when it comes to taking out the gals! At two p. m. sharp, Spanky pulled up in front of the Lang household with car and chauffeur. They drove in grand style to the amusement park where the fun really began. Spanky out-did himself in throwing baseballs and ringing canes to win Kewpie dolls for his lady love.

WITH Alice Faye out of town, Rochelle Hudson is certainly catching up on her lost sleep, the point being that Alice moved into the house next to the Hudson menage, set up a badminton court—electric lights and everything—and proceeded to keep the good old welkin ringing, of a night, until way past Rochelle's bed-time.

Least that's her story!

THOSE Warren Hulls have gone screwy on the subject of beach parties. And, with summer drawing to a close, you'll find the Hull gang littering the Santa Monica beach five nights out of the week.

On a grill, over a roaring bonfire, they burn wienies, slap them into sandy buns and everybody sits around on the sand munching happily and declaring it's more darn fun.

The other night, one solitary, cocky wave stepped out of line and came clear up to join the party, with the result that there was plenty of squealing, and everybody stood up for a while after that. With their backs to the fire, too. And Jean Rogers delighted no end because she had been sitting high up on a sandy knoll, looking out across the water and thinking of Jimmy Wallington at the time the dam busted.

Frank Albertson supplied the wise cracks . . . and I still claim he's Hollywood's funniest comedian, off stage at least!

THE Café de Paris, at Fox, is a swanky jernt where the stars assemble at lunch time to nibble daintily on a lettuce leaf and cold turkey wing, while down in the cafeteria, the extras, props, grips, juicers, et al, set themselves down to a hearty repast of roast, potatoes, vegetables, coffee and the good old American pie a la mode.

Ushered into the café with her famous contemporaries, Simone Simon listened in bewilderment to the scanty orders going out all around her. Then, she excused herself, and twenty minutes later, a hungry publicity man found her in the cafeteria, smiling over a heaped up plate of substantial fodder that would have stymied a truck driver!

"In my country," she said, "we eat because it is good to eat. In these little bites, where is the enjoyment? Green leaves you eat. Only for cows in my France. Non! I eat food!" And the way that steak and those potatoes disappeared . . . vive la France!

DRIVING out on location, Eric Lindon and Cecelia Parker found themselves stalled in a traffic jam for no apparent reason. True, there was a traffic warning at the small intersection ahead that said: STOP when pedestrians are in cross-walk! But, so far as the kids could see, there wasn't a pedestrian within miles.

Climbing out on the running board, Eric peered over the cars ahead of him to see what might be holding up the parade. And there, stalking sedately across the intersection, tail in air, was a gray and white kitten, obviously going places and taking her own sweet time about it!

"It must have been Be Kind To Animal Week," Eric said, "because every motorist in the line was enjoying the situation thoroughly without one scowl of impatience for the delay."

COME up to Jean Parker's for a fish dinner and Jean will bring the fish (if you like shark meat). On a sort of honeymoon vacation to Catalina Island Jean snagged herself a shark that weighed more than two hundred pounds. Her good looking new husband will lick the guy who says she didn't! Always a pacifist, Jean had her picture taken with the big fish to prove it! And a couple of deep sea fishers we know are going to be mad enough to go back to Ping Pong!

WHEN Ann Rutherford was only nine months old, some strange malady came upon her and, after several weeks, the family doctor announced that the child was dying of malnutrition!

Frantically, Ann's harrassed mother declared that she had followed instructions to the "t," concocting the food formula to the letter. But Ann continued to lose weight, cried constantly and was, altogether, a trial without tribulation.

Giving baby Ann her usual bottle one morning, Mrs. Rutherford left the room, returning a moment later quite unexpectedly, And, right there, she discovered the cause of Ann's mysterious malady.

Utterly oblivious to her impending doom, there stood Ann's three-year-old sister (Judith Arlen, to you), nonchalantly doing away with the baby's breakfast. And it took a couple of sound spankings to convince Judith that a thing like infanticide is more than an extra lunch in this country!

Finds Way To Have Young Looking Skin at 35!

SMART, modern women no longer submit to the tragedy of "old skin" just because they are 30, 35, 40! A wonderful new creme, applied at night like cold cream, acts a scientific way to free the skin of that veil of semi-visible darkening particles which ordinary creams cannot remove after a certain age. So gentle and quick—often only 5 days is time enough to bring out a glorious rose petal softness and fineness and white, clear look of youth. And, the way it eliminates common surface blemishes—ugly pimples, blackheads, freckles—is a revelation! Ask for this creme—Golden Peacock Bleach Creme at all drug and department stores.

talks about traveling and how it broadens one, well I guess I'm big enough already, but anyway, after my next picture, Mummy and Daddy and I are going to get a trailer and go back to Atlanta where I was born, and will that be fun! . . . I like camping out on account of it's something like playing house.

I'll tell you a secret . . . I'm writing a story . . . a real scenario, where Jackie Searl and I play all through the picture and then he saves me in the end . . . I hope Mr. Wurtzel likes it, but Mummy thinks the end isn't so good, though I don't see why Jackie can't save me from something. . . .

There's three things I want to be when I grow up, I haven't decided which one, yet, but they're a comic cartoonist, a clown, and an actress, on account of they all make people laugh . . . sometimes I think it would be fun to be a carpenter, too, only girls don't do that, I guess . . . but I love to build my own doll houses, and aeroplanes, and things . . . Jackie taught me how . . . and I would love to be a fisherman, too . . . or a polo player . . . Jackie is teaching me to ride and to play bicycle polo, and maybe we can have our own team when we grow up, but Mummy says it's too dangerous for a girl . . . it's kind of a nuisance being a girl, that's why when I grow up I think I'll have a special home for girls, and girl cats and dogs, so they can do the things they want.

About That Blondell-Powell Marriage

And she knows it. Their views are so divergent. To her, money is simply something to spend. To Dick it is something that means peace and security and comfort in one's old age. He sees the necessity for saving.

They have all those things to consider—and solve.

At present, because they're single and still in love, they love going out together—to night clubs—the theatre—picture shows—bowling—anywhere. If they married, one of them might tire of that and the other continue to like it. Could they compromise successfully?

I have never seen a more devoted couple. They're together every possible minute of the day. When they can't be together they're on the 'phone.

Much has been made of the fact that Joan supervised the furnishing and remodeling of Dick's house. He has implicit faith in her taste and she loves doing that sort of thing. But with all that, the house is not designed for a married couple. There is only one large bedroom and, although it has enormous closets, as Joan expressed it, "Dick got there first and has them chocked so full of his own clothes there wouldn't even be room in them for me to hang a slip."

Perhaps it is significant that Dick has placed the house on the market. To date, with the furnishings, it must have cost him between $85,000 and $90,000. He's willing to take $55,000 for it furnished—$40,000 unfurnished. Does he want to build another suitable for two?

When a man takes a beating like that just to get rid of one house—particularly one as attractive as this one—only to build another—baby, it's love! Perhaps that's one straw that shows which way the wind blows.

Perhaps another is the fact Joan has just bought out practically every woman's wear shop in Hollywood. Her new clothes have a trousseau-ish look!

ALL this is merely speculation and any kind of reasoning—real or attempted—drives me nuts. So I go out to face the guilty pair. "For cripe's sake, tell me something about your plans that I can tell an editor," I shout.

"We don't know!" they chorus.

"But you must have talked about it," I scream. "What did you talk about when you talked about it?"

They survey me apprehensively and then glance at the cop on the set. "There, there," they say soothingly. "Don't get yourself all excited. It's the heat."

"Are you going to get married?" I demand of Dick.

Dick looks at Joan. "Any statement," he announces gallantly, "must come from the lady."

I turn in Joan's direction. "Are you going to get married?" I mutter through clenched teeth, gripping the arms of my chair until the knuckles show white through the skin.

Joan widens her blue eyes innocently and focusses them on me. "I don't know," she says blandly. As my hair begins to rise on end, she adds mischievously, "but I think it would be kind of cute if we did!"

With the Editor IN HOLLYWOOD

Dolores Del Rio, your Guest Editor, gives you some notes from her own pen

Ye Ed and Ye Guest Ed confer over the dummy. The dummy, we would have you know, is the manuscript-filled book lying on the desk. Here Dolores is penning "Most beautiful . . ." on Garbo's photo

DID I ever envy editors? Well, that envy has been cast into the wastebasket since I accepted the invitation of SCREEN BOOK to be its guest editor for this month. I have a new appreciation of the problems which confront an editor in presenting to his readers the reflection of each month's activities and personalities. I hope that my brief editorial effort will in some way approach the very satisfactory precedent of a magazine that for years has received Filmdom's applause for its honesty and sincere revelations of Hollywood and its people.

● Since the preview reaction to that great artistic production Romeo and Juliet, the entire motion picture industry is as happy as the proverbial lad with his first long pants. And I think the fans may take a bow! Their enthusiastic reception of artistic films such as Mutiny on the Bounty, The Informer, and now Romeo and Juliet has made filmdom's artistic endeavors artistic achievement. Without the box-office support these pictures would have been only costly experiments. With the eager reception of the public, fine progress in production is permanently assured. The industry's confidence is warranted now. We are grateful to the fans for this support. The outlook for Hollywood has a definite majesty. To the sincere artist, the road of the future is brighter than ever before.

● While I was in Paris I naturally saw the fashion shows. Not just because I am a woman and thus possessed of a woman's curiosity about the latest in chic and feminine adornment. But because I believe it is part of an actress' equipment for her career. I cannot believe that the criticism made against actresses because of expenditures for wardrobe which might be excessive is a serious one. Surely it is but in line with one's career to sustain the enthusiasm of one's fans by dressing in a manner representative of the latest word in fashion. I deem it necessary (since it is a fact that the wardrobes of the stars are extensively copied throughout the world) for every actress to dress with taste and distinction no matter what the occasion.

It is satisfying to oneself and an example to those who copy the garb of the stars. We've a responsibility to our fans we cannot minimize and must not shirk. That is why the careful purchase of a wardrobe is an investment—not an extravagance. It would be an extravagance for a non-professional girl to copy an actress' wardrobe in all its extensiveness—but it is a professional necessity for the actress. Don't you agree?

● It wasn't until I was actually back in Hollywood from my recent picture work in England that I realized I had broken some sort of a record in the time it took me to get home. I rushed from the Queen Mary to the fastest plane to California. It took me five and a half days! Which they told me was somewhat of a record, but nonetheless a record which was broken by Director Eddie Sutherland who made the plane trip to New York, caught the Von Hindenburg and arrived in Berlin something like three days afterwards! It is a delightful dream that some day we may be skipping to England for four o'clock tea.

● With the increased progress of motion pictures in other lands, the continual development of talent in all nations and the inevitable exchange of artists, plus the constant improvements for speed and safety in air travel, we wonder—will the settled, stay-at-home motion picture actor again become a gypsy?

● The panorama of the screen is infinite. It really is, when you think of the parade of life which marches across the silvered surface. History! Ancient and in the making. The news reels supply the latter while such films as Henry the Eighth, Mary of Scotland, The Last of the Mohicans, The Plainsman, The Charge of the Light Brigade certainly present history in a most inspiring manner.

Romance—every picture has that.

Travel—straight travel pictures from all the far corners of the globe are being released constantly—and then there is the vicarious thrill of seeing foreign lands as the background of many pictures. There is The Good Earth with its Chinese background; The Garden of Allah, a story which unfolds on the Sahara desert; The Barrier, now being filmed in the Canadian backwoods. As a matter of fact almost any picture acquaints someone with new visions of a distant part of the world.

Add to this the screen's example, which can be followed for manners, speech and wardrobe, and it is easy to appreciate its limitless scope and the responsibility this scope imposes upon the personnel of the industry. Those making up that personnel are big enough to appreciate and shoulder that responsibility. Again I say that the support of the fans is the real inspiration for greater effort.

● I enjoyed making Accused with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in London. It was wonderful to study the difference in production technique in the London and Hollywood studios. And there was further enjoyment in the comparison of England's and America's regard of the motion picture theater. The very smart thing in London is the "films." One's hostess invites one to a formal dinner and after dinner the party attends the theater.

● Another exciting revelation lies in the strides foreign countries are making in motion picture production. France is making better pictures, Spain is contributing some fine productions, Italy, Germany, Australia and Russia have joined the picture league, and of course, England is making the greatest progress of all. Hollywood's industry is now an international industry but America will, I am confident, always lead the field!

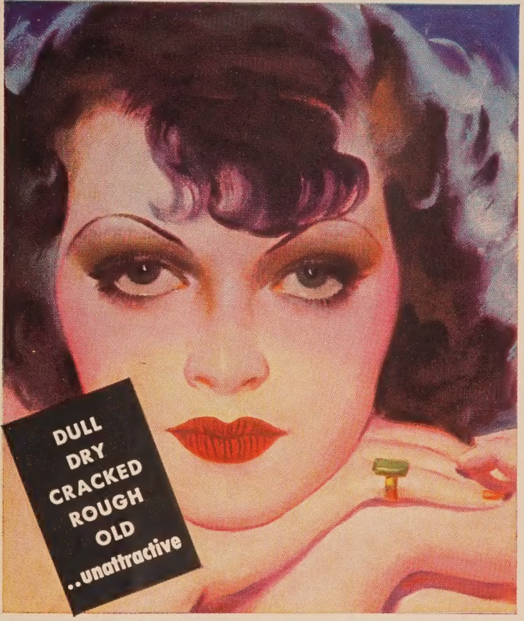
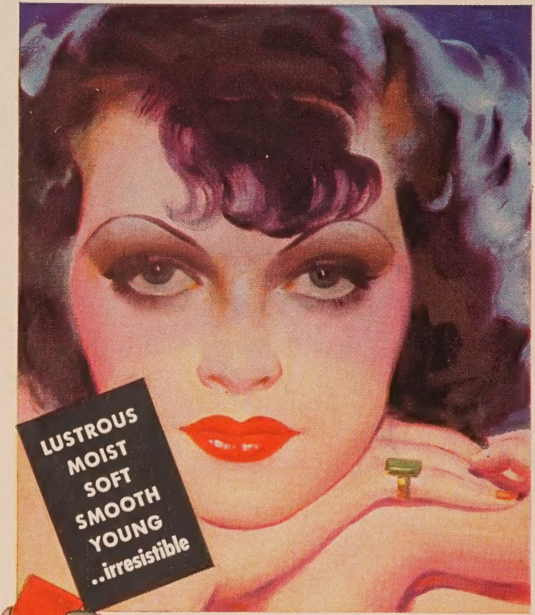
an ENTIRELY NEW KIND OF LIPSTICK

To the world's most permanent transparent lipstick two magical new ingredients have been added . . . to keep your lips luscious, soft, smooth and youthful.

Ordinary Indelible Lipstick



The New TATTOO



Why Some Lipsticks Make Lips Unattractive

Of course, you want your lipstick to be permanent . . . your lips soft and smooth . . . their caress a never-to-be-forgotten thrill!

But you have probably learned that lipstick does not always make lips soft and smooth! Ordinary indelible lipstick often makes them feel dry and parched, causing an unconscious and frequent licking of the lips in an effort to restore moistness and softness.

This constant licking removes the lips' natural oils as well as the protective oils supplied by the lipstick, resulting in lips readily becoming dull, dry, cracked, rough, old looking . . . unattractive!

How The New TATTOO Corrects All This

With the New Tattoo you have all the permanence you could wish for. And one of its magical new ingredients gives this lipstick a creamy texture that keeps lips fresh and moist . . . stains them with soothing, lasting, transparent color . . . without letting them get dry . . . without permitting them to become rough . . . and there is no desire to lick the lips!

Your lips thus become softer and smoother than they have ever been before . . . thrillingly, irresistibly youthful . . . without a wrinkle . . . without a line! But more! The other magical ingredient in the New Tattoo gives your lips the kind of lustrous, inviting, shimmering gloss and sparkle that is never denied . . . anything!

Send Coupon For Proof

So that you can instantly see and feel the astonishing difference, a generous introductory size of the New Tattoo in a clever silver and black case will be sent for the coupon below and 10c to cover postage and packing. There are five exciting shades . . . the most famous colors ever put into lipstick! Most women want more than one. So why not send for several shades of this miracle lipstick today! You'll get an entirely new beauty thrill the instant you Tattoo your lips . . . with the New Tattoo!

"Ridiculous"

SAYS MODERN MATRON

A MODERN MATRON AND A DENTIST BATTLE OVER A CARROT

"Intelligent"

SAYS YOUR DENTIST

(But the civilized way to build firm gums is IPANA and MASSAGE)

"RIDICULOUS," said a prominent matron. "No girl with a spark of intelligence or breeding would behave so badly. She'd be outlawed—every door closed to her!" That's the social side of the debate. But just for a moment listen to a modern dentist...

"Ridiculous?—not a bit of it. That's a very sensible picture. I'd be delighted to post it in my office as an object lesson for my patients. If more people chewed as vigorously, if modern teeth and gums were on better terms with coarse, rough, natural foods we'd hear a lot less about tender, rundown gums—we'd hear a whole lot less about 'pink tooth brush,' too."

"Pink Tooth Brush" is serious

When you see "pink tooth brush"—see your dentist. It can mean serious trouble. But usually it simply means that modern soft foods haven't given your gums enough work—that they need the healthful stimulation of Ipana Tooth Paste and massage.

Ipana plus massage is a part of modern dental practice because Ipana is especially designed to benefit the gums as well as clean the teeth. Get a tube of Ipana today and begin this modern health routine. Massage your gums every time you brush your teeth. Circulation quickens. Your gums feel healthier. And your teeth grow whiter, show more sparkle.

Help your dentist to keep you from being a "dental cripple." Don't let your tooth brush show "pink." Don't let yourself in for the really serious gum troubles. Firm gums and shining white teeth are vitally important to you. Switch to Ipana Tooth Paste and massage—and switch today!

COMING TO YOUR FAVORITE THEATRE

A GB Production

MYSELF—As I See Me!

—ANNE SHIRLEY

IT'S a bit difficult to describe one's self . . . perhaps the best way would be to cite some of the things I like . . . for instance, swing music and red nail polish . . . toast cut in strips . . . good books . . . seafood salads . . . parties, large and small . . . dates, some more than others . . . seeing my name in print . . . and, most of all, people . . .

My two mothers are one of my claims to distinction . . . yes, two, because my real mother's best friend, Mrs. Lena Sage, is a sort of co-mother of mine . . . I was engaged at the age of four to Byron Sage . . . he was eight . . . he gave me a gold ring to seal our troth . . . but the way things turned out, it was a love of youth rather than judgment, and now we're just good friends . . .

I freely admit that one of the biggest thrills in my life was making the front pages with my picture and a two column spread the time I decided to fly east to meet Owen Davis, Jr. . . . it isn't quite modest to say that, is it? . . . but then, it wouldn't be quite honest not to, either, would it? . . . People say I'll get over that when I'm older . . . but I doubt that I'll ever get over liking to know that other people are interested in what I do . . .

When people ask me when I'm going to be married, I always say maybe within a year, maybe within five . . . because I think it's rather foolish to say you are or are not going to be married by the time you're a certain age . . . so frequently, girls change their minds, and then they have to take their words back . . .

To me, the best thing about Hollywood is the contact with people who are doing things . . . I get a big bang just thinking about some of the marvelous people I've met . . . for instance, Benny Goodman, who has my favorite orchestra . . . I'm always selling my friends and the people I meet on the idea of going to hear him . . . and speaking of selling people on ideas, I'm always being persuaded to do something I don't want to do . . . it happens every time! . . . I like eating at the RKO commissary, and having people come past my table and "hello" me and dashing up between bites to run across the room and talk to my friends . . . a habit of mine is carrying on two separate conversations with two people simultaneously . . .

While I'm very fond of dates, I like going out with just girls occasionally . . . Phyllis Fraser, Ginger Rogers' cousin, lives with us, and we have great fun together . . . Ida Lupino is one of my favorite friends, too, because she's so generous and tolerant . . . I like people who are understanding of other people . . . and I like carrying on conversations with strangers . . . their viewpoints are always different and interesting . . .

I don't walk around the studio, I always run . . . when I'm not working, I wear slacks . . . I like getting up in the morning, which most people think is strange . . . and I can definitely say that I'm a girl who's going places in Hollywood—to get a cold drink! . . . because if I'm not going somewhere to get a cold drink, I'm usually on my way back from just having had one . . .

Perhaps I'll go down in history as the girl who could drink her own weight in iced tea!

When Doctors swab SORE THROAT..

surface germs are destroyed, soreness relieved, healing quickened

When you Gargle with PEPSODENT ANTISEPTIC...

you continue your doctor's treatment by destroying surface germs, relieving the cold.

USE PEPSODENT ANTISEPTIC FOR COLDS—TO RELIEVE THROAT SORENESS

The reason doctors have you gargle is to relieve soreness, kill germs. So remember, Pepsodent Antiseptic is three times as powerful in killing germs as other mouth antiseptics. You can mix Pepsodent with two parts of water and it still kills germs in less than 10 seconds! Thus Pepsodent goes 3 times as far—saves you ⅔ of your money.

So active is Pepsodent that, in recent tests on 500 people in Illinois, Pepsodent users got rid of colds twice as fast as others! Get either the 25c, 50c, or $1.00 Pepsodent Antiseptic at any drug counter, and see for yourself how pleasantly effective it is.

SAVES ⅔ OF YOUR DOLLAR ..Goes 3 times as far!

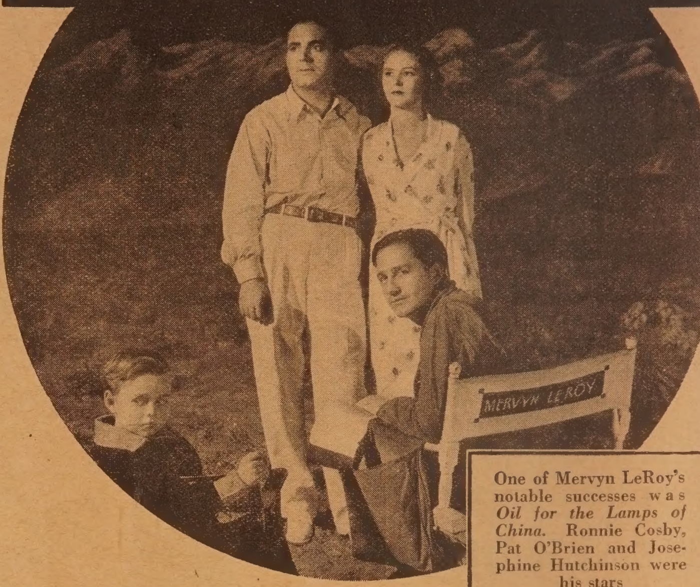
A NEW $500.00 TRADEMARK CONTEST



One of Mervyn LeRoy's notable successes was Oil for the Lamps of China. Ronnie Cosby, Pat O'Brien and Josephine Hutchinson were his stars SCREEN BOOK unites with Mervyn LeRoy, famous director now turned producer, in this simple cash contest offer!

HERE'S a contest so amazingly simple, so easy to participate in that you can't afford to pass it by! Especially when we tell you that you have as good a chance to win two cash prizes—one for $50 and another for $250. All you have to do is to submit a trademark idea symbolical of A Mervyn LeRoy Production.

Mervyn LeRoy is always included in the list of truly great directors. He has to his credit such notable successes as Anthony Adverse, Tugboat Annie, Golddiggers of 1933, Five Star Final, Oil for the Lamps of China, I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang, Little Caesar and is now busily engaged in directing that sensational stage success Three Men on a Horse for Warner Bros., who plan to release it as one of their big special features this fall.

But now Mr. LeRoy is forming his own company to be known as A Mervyn LeRoy Productions, with pictures to be released through Warner Bros. Right now he wants a trademark—one that will be in keeping with the sterling type of motion pictures he plans on producing. To get the kind he wants, he is offering cash prizes totaling $500.

Remember this. You don't have to be an artist or an advertising expert. All you need to do is to write down clearly and briefly your idea for a trademark. You may send in as many as you like.

Here is one of the ace directors of Hollywood—with an amazing record of outstanding motion picture successes to his credit. Recall the list of pictures he has made, bear in mind the fact that he intends to produce only the finest type of screen entertainment—and then put on your thinking cap. Try hard to visualize what type of trademark would convey the lofty ideals to which Mr. LeRoy aspires. A trademark that would make people instantly sense that here is an outstanding picture the moment they saw his trademark.

For his first picture as a producer Mr. LeRoy has purchased at great cost The Grand Passion, by Norman Krasna and Groucho Marx. This exceptional story will be used as the vehicle to present Fernand Gravet, sensational French actor whom Mr. LeRoy discovered abroad and signed to a personal contract. LeRoy is positive that Gravet, handsome, virile and a great natural actor, will be the rage of all Hollywood with his first picture.

Remember this. As Mr. LeRoy says, you don't have

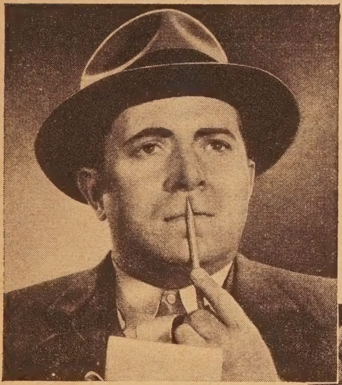
"Folks, Meet 'OIWIN'"

('Oiwin' is Brooklynese for the good old Anglo-Saxon name of Erwin)

To the bride and neighbors he was a polite and milk-toasty Erwin, but to the mob he was 'Oiwin'— the horse-picking demon who gave bookmakers financial D. T.s! A gentle Jekyll in Jersey . . . but a Hyde-de-ho in the betting ring.

Now it can be told! Nearly every star comedian in Hollywood wanted to play 'Oiwin'. "I'll buy the play," said one . . . "I don't want any salary. Just give me the chance and a percentage," said another world-famous funnyman . . . But Warner Bros. decided to give this coveted acting plum to Frank McHugh—not because he was the best-known actor to do 'Oiwin'—but because in their opinion he was by far the best suited. How glad you'll be they made this choice when you meet 'Oiwin' on the screen!



A candid camera study of 'Oiwin' . . . as the marvel of the ages picks a long shot and almost wrecks the betting industry.

"I just love a bettin' man, Oiwin . . . especially if he keeps winning all the time."

Racing Form

Every time 'Oiwin' looked at a racing sheet the bookmakers took more aspirin.

"Oiwin, you made us millionaires . . . we want to do some little thing for you."

's WING TIME for RUTH!

—Victor Haveman

Chatterton is usually up in the air and the by-word of this lady angel is "Won't you step into my cockpit?"

RUTH CHATTERTON is a gallant lady—as an actress, as a person, and as an aviatrix.

In Dodsworth she is portraying a woman who if she met her in life, she would despise. Fran Dodsworth is the spoiled, selfish, social-climbing, sensation seeking wife of an automobile manufacturer. It took all of Samuel Goldwyn's famed persuasive powers nearly a year to break down Ruth's decision to have nothing to do with the part.

Yet, when she finished the picture, the crew of studio workers gave her a party on the set, and presented her with a massive bouquet of flowers. A genuine tribute from a gang of hard-boiled guys to an artist who is also a swell person.

Ruth gallantly braved the spotlight of notoriety to lend her moral support to a girl who sorely needed a friend in her time of trouble—Mary Astor. Despite the fact that Ruth was called back to the studio often for retakes and additional scenes during the progress of the trial, and she was tired and busy she never left Mary in the lurch.

Ruth Chatterton had never known Mary Astor until they worked together in the picturization of Dodsworth.

There were several other screen stars who might better have lent their friendly aid to Mary Astor, but when none were forthcoming, it was Ruth Chatterton who defied Hollywood custom to come out in the open to aid and defend a fellow

Too Much Glitter

SOMETIMES I get tired of seeing so many movies with what is supposed to be an ultra modern setting. I mean this high society life overflowing with formal cocktail parties with smiling men in tails and gushing ladies beaming and bubbling all over the place. Some of the parties are interesting and very "pretty," but we who never get a chance to live that life know that this is too artificial to be an accurate portrayal. I'd rather see pictures in a simpler setting of life in the average American home—stories which adequately describe the joys and sorrows of my neighbors and myself.

Artificial, imaginative, dream world plots are very appealing, I'll admit, but too much is too much!—Jimbur Dornay, 2002 W. Juneau Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

Drop the Dishes

DINNER ware days, glassware days and Bank Nights are just about wrecking the theatres and managers haven't the common sense to know it.

For awhile movie theatre patrons took to them as one would a new toy. Poor pictures are the rule for those days, and patrons began to crack under them as the dishware does under hot water.

Still the theatres are jeopardizing their futures with these schemes. And if managers only knew it they could jam their theatres by the simple means of showing good films. When will they wake up?—John Thayer, 18 Creighton St., Cambridge, Mass.

SEAN O'CASEY, author of Plough and the Stars (which takes its name from designs on the rebel flag), fought in the thrilling Irish uprising, was captured and sentenced. As the squad was about to shoot him, a shell burst overhead and the soldiers raced for cover. O'Casey escaped. The picture's romance is fictional, but the film records these actual occurrences: English officer walking into the Dublin post office to purchase stamps only a few minutes after it was taken by the Irish Army—finding himself prisoner in a rebellion so sudden that no one expected it; shooting of the woman looter as she dropped stolen goods out of a second story window—an incident etched on Dublin memories; snipers treading roofs over citizens' heads, bullets crashing through their windows; burning of the huge post office. In this scene, Barbara, Preston and the rest of the cast took their chances in falling plaster, timbers and crashing glass. Director John Ford barred makeup of any kind for players. The renowned Irish Abbey Players contributed five cast members—players who have lived their rôles.

Josephine Hutchinson is as colorful as—well, her red hair, for instance

YOU'VE gone shopping, and come home with everything but the one thing you vowed you wouldn't forget, haven't you? Well, Josephine Hutchinson made me forget what I went for the other afternoon when I went to interview her.

My mind was made up when her maid answered my ring. Waiting there in her attractive living room, beginning to feel the personality reflected by the handsome, tasteful, simple furnishings, I knew exactly what I wanted Josephine Hutchinson to tell me about herself. Everything was okay so far.

Czerny on the piano. Hmmm—she's interested in music. Must have been practicing—the music is open. Sure a lot of books about—bookcases in the wall almost everywhere you look—filled with the kind of books the intellectual goes for—Chekov, Ibsen, Philosophy, Romaine Rolland's Jean Christophe. Stage Magazine and a New York Times drama section on the table. She's still interested in the stage and what's happening on Broadway. Can't get away from the theatre. Another one of these actresses who would rather do one play behind the footlights than twenty pictures in front of Klieg lights.

No wonder they don't put Hutchinson in some frivolous story, light comedy or farce. She's intrinsically serious and intellectual.

"I hope I haven't kept you waiting too long," the object of my speculations spoke as she walked in with extended hand and the warmest kind of a smile.

"I think we will be more comfortable out in the patio, if you can bear the obtrusive attention of a couple of flies who seem to like it out here.

"You will find little Puck a darling," she said, as a Cairn Terrier rushed up to greet us. "But the little Howitzer—you see isn't polite enough to come over and speak to you like a gentleman. I haven't named him

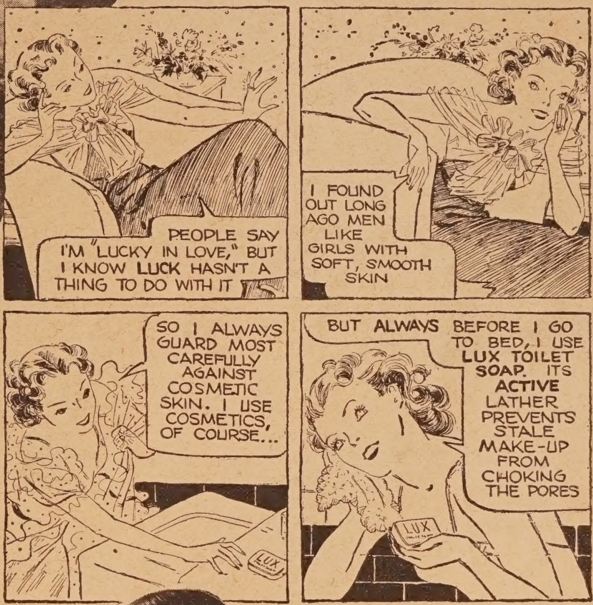
20TH CENTURY-FOX STAR

STAR OF "LADIES IN LOVE"

Here's "Lucky Sue" who knows the Screen Stars' secret



PEOPLE SAY I'M "LUCKY IN LOVE," BUT I KNOW LUCK HASN'T A THING TO DO WITH IT
I FOUND OUT LONG AGO MEN LIKE GIRLS WITH SOFT, SMOOTH SKIN
SO I ALWAYS GUARD MOST CAREFULLY AGAINST COSMETIC SKIN. I USE COSMETICS, OF COURSE...
BUT ALWAYS BEFORE I GO TO BED, I USE LUX TOILET SOAP. ITS ACTIVE LATHER PREVENTS STALE MAKE-UP FROM CHOKING THE PORES
LUX

LUX
TOILET SOAP

"IT'S wonderful," says Loretta Young, "how you can use all the cosmetics you wish, yet keep your complexion exquisite with Lux Toilet Soap."

It's when stale rouge and powder choke the pores that Cosmetic Skin develops—dullness, tiny blemishes, enlarged pores. Lux Toilet Soap guards against this risk. Its ACTIVE lather goes deep into the pores, carries away every trace of dust, dirt and stale cosmetics.

When 9 out of 10 screen stars use Lux Toilet Soap to keep skin lovely, you can be sure it's the right complexion care for you. Why don't you try it?

YOU want to have the charm of smooth, clear skin. So follow this simple rule: Before you put on fresh make-up, ALWAYS before you go to bed, use Lux Toilet Soap.

Joan Blondell tells her four rules of care and personal make-up tricks for attractive eyes

Exercise and constant care give that sparkle to Joan's lovely blue eyes. You'll see Joan next in Golddiggers of 1937

"WHEN a girl feels the urge to become effective," says Joan Blondell, "it's a temptation to gob make-up on the eyes, but it's the daily care of the optics that makes them lovely. Shaping brows and mascara-ing lashes around reddened or tired eyes is like trying to call attention away from a bad painting with a fancy frame. I have four rules for eye beauty which I follow religiously before I even think of dipping into a cosmetic.

(And Joan's eyes had an added sparkle because she had just come from the set of Golddiggers of 1937 where she plays opposite Dick Powell, her real life heart throb.)

"1. Avoid strong sunlight or glaring electric lights. Since we must have sun baths, never forget your dark glasses. They'll help to keep away crow's-feet and lessen eyestrain.

"2. Bathe your eyes daily with a good eye lotion, particularly on dusty days, as particles of dirt will make them dull and inflamed.

3. Rest your eyes during the day as often as possible. Use a regulation black beauty mask or a band over your eyes if the light disturbs them. If you are working concentratedly at something at close range, raise your eyes frequently and look into the distance as far as you can.

"4. Exercise your eyes. Just as exercise strengthens every other muscle in the body, it will do wonders for the eye muscles.

"These exercises can be done at any time of the day when you have a spare five minutes. Open your eyes wide—WIDE—until you feel a decided pull on the muscles. Then close the eyes tight—until you see black. Another set of muscles will speak up. Hold your head erect and look as far right as possible without moving your head, then as far left. Do this five times. Now describe a circle with your eyes, again without moving the head. Count ten and describe a reverse circle with the eyes.

"Apply cosmetics judiciously. Eye shadow should be used only on the upper lid to add depth and luminosity to the eyes. It is my opinion that brown shadow is the most generally flattering to blue eyes and I, myself, use this shade, being careful to apply it sparingly so that it will appear merely as a darker tint of the natural skin.

"The purpose of mascara is to accentuate the lashes which will in turn emphasize the size and beauty of the eye. Apply mascara to the upper lashes from below, stroking upward. Because my eyes are large and round I do not apply mascara to my lower lashes, although many girls can do so with an attractive effect.

"However, it is a good rule never to use shadow or pencil below the eyes as only one girl in a thousand can do so with anything but disastrous results. A line below the eyes gives a haggard, tired look to the face and dispels the charm of otherwise lovely eyes.

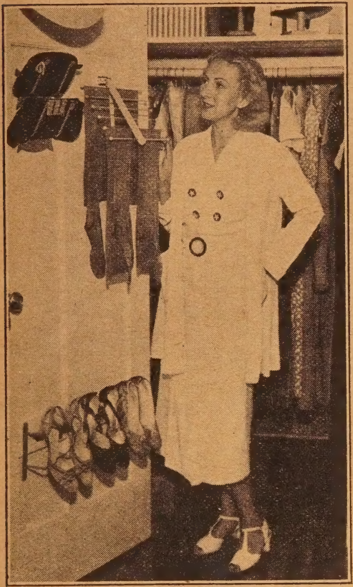
HOLLYWOOD TIPS for HOME MAKERS



Karen Morley is more than pleased with the new closet "gadgets" furnished to her by the Elco people . . . And indeed it is a closet to be proud of! No more untidy closets in Karen's house . . . there is a place for everything . . . A rack to keep her hose from snagging or being pulled out of shape . . . a handy place to put her bags . . . another rack for her shoes and a hanger to keep her hats in shape . . . The remarkable part of it is, it utilizes space now going to waste . . . They make tie racks for your husband, too!

If your husband is anything of a golfer, he will take a tip from Bing Crosby . . . Bing says that one little speck of rust on a club will spoil its designed balance, especially when the rust is removed by an abrasive . . . Now the difficult task of cleaning golf clubs has been amazingly simplified . . . Only a few moments need be spent on the set to keep it in top shape . . . The answer is good old Brillo . . . It is a soft wooly metal-fibre pad that is even used on fine aluminum ware . . . You probably have a package of it in your home now!

And while we are on floor coverings . . . Take a look at some of those new designs offered by the Armstrong Cork Company in the way of linoleums before you plan any changes in your kitchen . . . Your local decorator ought to be able to show you a full line of their products! And the kitchen isn't the only room in your house they can do wonders with . . . They have a unique design for every room in your house, from the play room to the bath room and they are so easy to keep up.

"LAMBING IT" with the Lockharts

Gene and Kathleen Lockhart know how to cook a full meal in an electric roaster!

Here's Kathleen's finished Lamb roast surrounded by brown potatoes and onions. No wonder Gene Lockhart is smiling!

by Joan Davis

"OUR kitchen wall paper will make your mouth water," Kathleen Lockhart prophesied as we made our way to the kitchen of her new home after exploring every nook and cranny and I had exhausted my supply of adjectives of praise. "You'll see carrots, beets, cabbages—all kinds of tempting vegetables lending color to the white tile."

Mrs. Lockhart was "chief cook and bottle washer" that evening as the cook was enjoying a well-earned vacation, after moving the Lockharts into their new residence, and it was now time to think of dinner for Gene who was coaxing melodious chords from the piano for his latest song. Kathleen had described her new stove and electrical kitchen equipment to me and I was anxious to see the new labor saving devices I knew she would have.

"You must be a wizard in the kitchen," I exclaimed, looking in vain for the stove. "Just how do you expect to cook dinner?"

"Oh, the stove hasn't been delivered yet," she informed me nonchalantly, removing a leg of lamb from the refrigerator and handing me a sack of peas to shell.

Kathleen sets the temperature dial at 500 degrees and pours Heinz Olive Oil into center compartment of roaster

Lightly rub roast with seasonings and dredge with flour while roaster is preheating

Gene watches as Kathleen pours peas into compartment to be placed beside the roasting meat

"I see—it's a case of mind over matter," I observed flippantly. "Gene eats canned sardines on crackers while looking at the table decorated with an uncooked lamb roast and vegetables, and murmurs 'Ah, that faint suggestion of garlic in the roast is perfect!' I knew he was versatile to say the least—a song writer, a playwright, a stage director, an author and an actor—but those attributes fade into nothing compared with his powers of imagination."

"Now—now, just be calm and shell the peas," admonished Kathleen, plugging an electric cord into a convenient outlet. "I have all the equipment necessary for Gene's favorite dinner and a great many other meals—now that the electricity is turned on."

Then I saw her Nesco De Luxe Roaster! These electric roasters are surely the last word in efficiency. Kathleen set the temperature dial for preheating and before long, she was cooking roast lamb, browned potatoes and onions, minted peas and a dessert simultaneously in the three compartments of the roaster. Add a salad and the result is a perfect meal!

While she bustled about, Gene wandered from room to room—playing snatches of popular songs—typing a few lines of a new radio skit—teasing their pure white canary—and becoming a general nuisance in the kitchen (except that his genial personality and eternal good humor always assures him of a welcome).

It's truly a joy to be around this unaffected couple. Their mode of living is so unostentatious, it proves seasoned troupers of the stage and screen can be "just folks"—and if you don't believe Kathleen is as [Continued on page 54]

"U-m-m, Apple Betty!" says Gene when he sees the cracker crumbs and sliced apples

Mickey Rooney is presented a cup for winning a swimming race in Woody Van Dyke's pool. Freddie Bartholomew and Jackie Cooper protest the decision

GIVE A "FACE POWDER PARTY"!

See If You and Your Girl Friends Use the Right Shade of Face Powder

By Lady Esther

You're sure about the shade of face powder you use, aren't you? You're convinced it's the right shade for you, or you wouldn't use it.

Your girl friends feel the same way about the shades they use. Each is certain she uses the right shade.

All right—I'll tell you what I'll do: I'll let you hold a "face powder party" at my expense. What's that? Well, it's a party at which you can have a lot of fun and, at the same time, learn something of great value.

You can hold this party at home or you can hold it at the office during lunch hour.

The Test That Tells!

Here's what you do: First, send for all five shades of my Lady Esther Face Powder, which I offer you free. Then call in several of your girl friends. Try to get girls of different coloring—blondes, brunettes and redheads.

Let each girl select what she thinks is her best shade of face powder. Have her try that shade on. Then, have her "try on" all the other four shades. Let the rest of you act as judges while each girl tries on the five shades.

Then, see how right or wrong each girl has been! Note that in most cases, if not in all, the shade of face powder that proves the most becoming is not the one the girl selected. On the contrary, you'll probably find that the shade that proves most flattering to a girl is one she would never think of using at all.

You can instantly tell which shade is most becoming to a girl. It immediately makes her stand out—makes her look her youngest and freshest. The other shades, you will observe, have just the opposite effect. They make her look drab and years older than she really is.

Why Look Older Than You Really Are?

It's amazing the women that use the wrong shade of face powder. I see evidences of it on every side. Artists and make-up experts also bemoan the fact.

There is one and only one sound way of telling your most becoming shade of face powder and that is by trying on all five shades as I have described above. Trying to select a shade of face powder according to "type" is all wrong because you are not a "type," but an individual. Anyone knows that a blonde may have any one of a number of different colorings of skin while a brunette may have the same. So, trying to match a "type" is fundamentally unsound if not impossible, and may lead to some weird effects.

Prove My Principle!

Be sound, be practical, in the selection of your shade of face powder. Use the test method as I have described here. Clip the coupon now for all five shades of my Lady Esther Face Powder. I will also send you a 7-days' supply of my Face Cream.

(You can paste this on a penny postcard.) (27) FREE

Lady Esther, 2030 Ridge Ave., Evanston, Ill.

Please send me by return mail a liberal supply of all five shades of Lady Esther Face Powder; also a 7-days' supply of your Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream.

Our Hollywood FRIVOLITIES!

Your news sleuth tells you how Hollywood really is going to the dogs!

NEVER a dull moment with that Robert Taylor fellow! Instead of doing the usual thing and adopting a dog, Bob set out with the idea of letting a dog adopt him! Barbara Stanwyck was with him, and together they raided a Hollywood pet shop and asked the startled manager to turn loose every dachshund in the place.

"We'll sit on the floor," said Bob, "and see which of them likes us best."

For three hours they sat on the floor while some two dozen delighted dachshunds licked their hands, mussed their clothes and, generally, romped all over them.

It was a tough job, but Bob finally settled on a sleek black puppy that got in his hair (as well as his heart) with more persistence than the others.

Folks, meet Pretzel!

WHICH brings us up to ten-year-old Benny Bartlett's sad and retrospective slant on life.

Noticing the growing affection between Benny and "Queenie," a dog they were using in the picture Three Married Men, Director Eddie Buzzell asked the youngster if he had a dog of his own.

"Not now I haven't," Benny sighed. "But I had a swell one when I was a kid."

Cheer up, Benny. Old age has its compensations, too, and remember that fun begins at forty.

Add romantic news: Ida Lupino beams because Louis Hayward doesn't have to go to London

IT SADDENS us to report that discord has already found its savage way into the honeymoon cottage of the newly-wed Fred MacMurrays. Tch, tch. Likewise, lack-a-day.

The cause of it all is a best friend of Fred's bachelor days and a devoted pal of Lillian's single blessedness!

The "best friend" and "devoted pal" are, respectively, a mongrel dog and a Maltese cat, and the way those two crossed up an otherwise happy homecoming was a caution!

They just didn't seem to get into the spirit of the thing. And Fred and the missus, who are naturally very much in love, wisely decided to let them figure it out in their own way, the winner to abide in peace in the MacMurray menage, forever after.

For a while, it looked like a tie. But, the day the kids tip-toed in and watched the pup gallantly offering to "shake hands" with his arch enemy, and getting a belligerent [Continued on page 82]

TODAY'S GOSSIP

Here's where you get the real low-down on the cinema high-ups!

Music hath charms . . . 'tis said. Apparently musicians have charms for one another, too, for here are engaged Lily Pons and Andre Kostelanetz. Two tiny but mighty people WITHIN FORTY-EIGHT HOURS after the Mary Astor court trial was over, Miss Astor was present at a night club, squired by Michael Bartlett.

And the following night Mike stepped out with Anita Louise—which is a study in contrasts, if you ask us!

TAKE OUR WORD FOR IT that the Jean Harlow-William Powell romance is coming to a sad, sad end. As Bill has always said, his next wife will not be mixed up with a movie career. He wants a woman who wants to be a wife and a wife alone. The sad expression on Jean's face these days tells the story better than words.

There is a scene in the new Harlow-Powell-Loy-Tracy picture, Libeled Lady, in which Jean had to say of Powell: "Why, I wouldn't marry him if he were the last man in the world!" They had to take it five times—there was a peculiar sob in Jean's throat.

AT THE MOMENT Clark Gable and Dr. Franklyn Thorpe, ex-husband of Mary Astor, are on a hunting trip. They are after deers. Be sure and keep those two E's in there, Mr. Linotyper, and don't change one of them into an A.

CLARK GABLE has paraphrased the old saying—"If you see it in ——— it's so." Clark made an appearance on the radio, and a certain columnist said, or rather wrote, that Clark's stipend was $5,000 for the broadcast.

As a matter of fact, he actually was paid $3,500.

On his next broadcast Clark was offered $3,500. He pulled out the clipping and remarked that he could not afford to make a liar out of the columnist.

His price was $5,000. He got it.

WITH GRETA GARBO back in Hollywood and working on her picture Camille, the usual rumors are about that Garbo was seen at this premiére and that premiére and in the Hollywood Boulevard shops, etc.

What causes all the rumors is a gal named Chris Marie Meeker, an amazing double of Garbo, who has a yen to step out and do her stuff every time Garbo is in Hollywood.

Garbo is as much of a recluse as ever.

WHEN JAMES STEWART answers the phone he always says, in a most dignified fashion, "Stewart speaking." Recently he said that and a female voice came back at him, "And this is Joan Crawford speaking."

"Yes, and I suppose you want me

Merle Oberon and Walter Huston take their food where they find it . . . in Merle's dressing-room suite where she partied for the Acting British Consul, who visited the Dodsworth set to launch the R. M. S. Queen Mary—a full-size replica of the boat deck on the real ocean-going ship

Three beautiful blondes: Glenda Farrell, Mary Carlisle and Jean Harlow. Jean, shopping for a new car, had excited salesmen quite agog when she appeared personally in the showrooms to come to a party? Stop kidding now, who is this?"

"This is Joan Crawford, and I do want you to come to a party. You must be psychic. Will you? On the 20th. Franchot and I are both very anxious to meet you."

"Well, now, isn't that nice," continued Jimmie, still not believing. "I've always wanted to meet him too. Come on now, who is this?"

Finally she persuaded him. It was Joan Crawford. It was before they worked together in The Gorgeous Hussy. Just goes to prove his modesty; plainly he was figuring, "Why should Joan Crawford want to call me?"

JACK OAKIE now wears a gold identification bracelet. As though you could ever miss that mugg! But since it was a present from his wife, we assume she wants you to know where to send him if you find him out some night.

Oakie's most recent quip, incidentally, came about like this: "Why, Jack," said Gladys Swarthout, "you've got the loveliest big dimples—just like Shirley Temple." Whereupon the rotund Oakie looked sour and grunted, "What, Shirley Temple! That old hag!"

QUITE PROBABLY by the time this is printed you already will have heard of the Errol Flynn-Lili Damita separation. If not, you may look for it soon. Knowing the restless Flynn as we do we can't wonder. No city, no country, no job, no man will ever hold him for long. Right now he is definitely planning to end his picture career, and once again take up traveling and writing.

AN INSIDE STORY of Filmland concerns the smart manner in which a studio publicity department outwitted four feminine stars cast to appear in one picture.

The four were Janet Gaynor, Loretta Young, Constance Bennett and Simone Simon.

A couple of the gals are noted for their display of temperament when things do not go to suit them, and casting four lady stars in one picture was rated as a daring thing.

However the picture, and mighty good too, went on its way rather peacefully.

The reason—before the picture started the publicity department is said to have suggested to each in turn, without the others knowing it, that it would be a good stunt to frame feuds and the like.

The idea worked like a charm. Not one of them would go for the stunt. Result—harmony prevailed.

What we call smart work.

Ginger has been pulling the wool over our eyes long enough, so we've decided to tell on her. Read this amusing story if you want to be in the know about

The GREAT GINGER ROGERS HOAX!

BILL SEITER, the eminent director, had a noted sense of humor, but it deserted him, for once, in an hour of grievous need.

He stared with dazed, unbelieving eyes at the young lady from Paris.

He read, for the third time, the note of introduction which she had brought from J. R. McDonough, former chairman of the board.

The young lady was obviously determined. The note was more than an introduction; in grim reality it was an unmistakable, curt order to give the bearer an important rôle in the forthcoming Ginger Rogers picture, In Person.

"McDonough's gone nuts," he told himself. "He's gone stark, raving mad. He's crazy as a loon—or is this just a nightmare . . . ?"

He pinched himself, glanced again at his visitor—and shuddered. That coarse, dank black hair . . . those shell-rimmed glasses . . . those incongruous green eyes . . . THOSE . . . OH, LORD . . . THOSE. . . .

With perfect timing, the young lady smiled and once more those two rows of protruding, distorted teeth mangled the Seiter sensibilities. Bill thought, not irrelevantly, of a certain camel whose acquaintance he had made in the Selig Zoo . . . he thought of a sheepshead he once caught on a Florida fishing trip. And the shudder became a seismic disturbance.

"I—I—but really," he struggled, ". . . . the picture's practically . . . I mean there really isn't a part left . . . weeks ago . . . the cast, you see . . . it's practically completed . . . completed . . . and. . . ."

"Oui, oui," assented mademoiselle eagerly. "I am on'erstan'. I am simpatique. Eet ees mos' on . . . how you say onfotunate . . . but M'sieu McDonough, ee 'ave assure me . . . ee was mos' positeeve. . . ."

Bill Seiter thought desperately—and the name of McDonough, which in those days should have been sacred to anyone working for RKO, acquired explosive prefixes and suffixes as he thought.

"Maybe," he said, "maybe we could write in a maid's part.

You may have seen this face on the screen —but you don't know the whole hilarious story of how it came to be filmed

Is this Ginger in Swing Time—or isn't it? Knowing her as we do, we wonder Maybe . . . listen, you wait here. . . ." And he fled from his office precipitously, as that awful jack-o-lantern smile again lighted the incredible face of mademoiselle from gay Paree.

In the anteroom, he telephoned Pandro S. Berman, the producer.

And with the phone call, his last hope died, for Berman, equally distressed, could only answer. . . .

"I've seen her—and I know how you feel. But it's McDonough's orders and you'll have to write in a part. . . ."

Poor Bill! He staggered back into his office, suffering from an emotional condition which a psycho-analyst would have pronounced a combination of homicidal-mania, acidosis, psychotic melancholia and suicidal urge.

"You win," he announced with excusable venom. "We'll write in a maid's role. . . ."

"Tres magnifique!" said mademoiselle. "I am veree 'appee!"

Bill could stand no more. He turned away and stared moodily through the window, watching the bustle of activity along the studio streets, and his thoughts dwelt somberly on the remarks that would be made by "the boys."

Suddenly his gloomy reverie was disturbed by a well-known voice.

"Bill Seiter, I've always wanted to play a dual rôle!"

Bill whirled . . . stared . . . choked. . . .

For there sat Ginger Rogers, demurely holding in her lap a black wig, a pair of tortoise-shell specs and a set of God-awful dental monstrosities.

And the Rogers laughter, which begins as a spasmodic chortling well below the diaphragm and gradually builds until it reaches a cyclonic shriek, filled the air.

Ginger later wore that same makeup as a disguise in In Person.

If you saw the picture, you know how poor Bill Seiter must have felt. Ginger had worked out the details with Mel Burns, Radio's makeup man. Knowing that Seiter hadn't seen it, she resolved upon a practical joke.

SHE'S been known to miss a meal occasionally, but never, never, never has she missed an opportunity to play a practical joke. That's generally supposed to be the way she keeps thin. Instead of dieting as other stars do, she lies awake of nights trying to think up new gags to play upon her co-workers and pals. The loss of sleep in itself tends to ward off excess weight and the laughing that follows does the rest.

For instance, there was the one that she and a New York editor conceived and executed when first she came to Hollywood. Ginger was introduced to a certain producer as Miss Elizabeth Dupont—of the Duponts, you know. And the society-mad producer spent three days trying to persuade her to go into pictures. P. S. Ginger

How Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond Fell In Love!

By Harry Lang

THE most amazing story that's come out of Hollywood in years:

Two of the very biggest stars of the screen marrying—and neither of them has ever been married before . . . ! ! !

And there, in a nutshell, is the whole story of this Jeanette MacDonald-Gene Raymond romance that has the hearts of the whole movie-going world beating in tune with these young lovers. There, epitomized in a single clause, is the real story behind the Gene-Jeanette love-tale—a romance utterly sweet, utterly un-"Hollywood," as soft and as warm as the naive dreams of a schoolgirl about the golden knight who must some day come into her life. . . .

For here—in Gene and Jeanette—are no two wordly, smart-cracking, sex-conscious, shoulder-shrugging so-called "sophisticates" just taking a winking fling at matrimony. Regardless of their fame and position, they are two kids who have found for the first time that they are really in love, and they are as starry-eyed and trembling-hearted about it as any two young kids on your block! Believe me, when Jeanette and Gene go to the altar, it'll be no two movie-stars getting married for a front-page blurb; it'll be lovers finding Paradise and forgetting there's a world around them.

And I'll be triple-hanged if I ever dreamed that I'd ever have the chance to write that kind of story out of Hollywood!

I don't believe you fans know the real story of the romance. You see, there's been so much written about it—so much twaddle and conjecture and pure hooey. So many columnists have wise-cracked about it. So many self-appointed know-it-alls have postured around and given you "the inside" of it.

Now here, authorized by Jeanette and Gene themselves, and told by one of their most intimate [Continued on page 52]

Eleanor Powell's MUSICAL DIARY!

By Marcella March

And well may 23-year-old Eleanor Torrey Powell laugh, for Born to Dance is a smash-hit picture. Her nickname is Ding. She eats dinner with her feet in a basin of hot water after a day of dancing. She loves teaching her friends to tap, and has installed a tiny hardwood square before her door so callers may do a few tap steps instead of ringing the bell

BORN TO DANCE! It's the name of her latest picture . . . but she could have the three words engraved on her calling cards and embroidered on her undies without deviating from the truth even a little bit. There's no background of childish carefreeness in Eleanor Powell's life; no school girl romances to punctuate her adolescence; no serious love affair to lend meaning to the present. You can say it with music, as far as Eleanor Powell is concerned. Her diary is recorded on wax discs, and she can play it on the victrola . . . records of a life that have been lived to melody.

Beethoven's "Minuet in G" is the first entry in Eleanor Powell's musical life story. It was the first tune she danced to in the little school where her mother had taken her to see if her shyness could not be overcome.

It was rather fun, and she danced with an ear for the music and an eye fearfully cast on the other six-year-olds who were in the figure with her. Eleanor was afraid of other children. And the moment that the Minuet had ended and the dance was over, she bowed ceremoniously to the little boy who was her partner . . . and made a hasty dash for the sanctuary of her mother's side, so she wouldn't have to talk to any of the other little boys and girls. Everybody laughed. Eleanor couldn't laugh about it then. That fear of strangers is something implanted deep in her consciousness, something that will probably never be entirely eradicated.

But later—many years later—in a crowded night club, a parody of a little girl doing the minuet when she was frightened, a parody done in taps, with the climatical dash to safety, was to bring a hard boiled New York audience shouting to its feet . . . and to Eleanor Powell's. She interprets her life with her dancing feet.

If it were to be heard in a courtroom, Eleanor's diary would have no meaning to anyone but herself. But it's a thrilling history of a dancer's exciting career

ELEANOR doesn't have to refer to written pages to bring the next period of her life to vivid memory. She just puts on another record from her musical diary. This time it's the "Copellia Ballet," or "Dance of the Hours"—or even the humble "Glow Worm." And she's seven years old and again in ballet school; laying the foundation for her career. She didn't know that, of course. She knew only that in ballet she was finding a glorious meaning to movement; and she was finding her first friends.

There were two distinct cliques in this school of dancing. One was made up of the girls who gathered on one side of the studio after lessons to talk about games and the vagaries of mysterious grown-ups. The other, much smaller, convened on the other side to practice walking on their toes and to talk about their lessons. Eleanor belonged to this latter group. And, strangely, in discussion of the abstruse subject of ballet, she found her first meeting ground with her contemporaries.

It never occurred to her until she talked about it the other day that she had never played with children; that she had never learned to play at all. She says it without regret . . . "I never learned to play." And she doesn't care. Dancing, her work, is her play, too.

THERE'S a record that's missing from Eleanor's library. The music that is really responsible for Eleanor Powell's entrance to the world of show business has never been recorded. Perhaps no one but Eleanor would have caught the rhythm of it . . . the surge of the breakers on the Jersey coast; the noise the wind made blowing in from the sea. She was alone on the beach that day in Atlantic City, and she got up from the sand where she had been sunning, and did a dance to the sound of the wind and the ocean.

It must have been rather funny . . . the skinny little thirteen-year-old interpreting the song of the Atlantic.

A man walking across the beach stopped to watch her, with an amused smile on his face. After a few minutes, the smile gone, he came over to talk to her. He was Gus Edwards. And he offered her her first job in show business . . . dancing at the Ambassador Grill at seven dollars a night.

"You're too shy to undertake anything like that," Mrs. Powell told her breathless young daughter when she came racing home with the news. "You'll be frightened."

"But mother!" Eleanor Powell demurred, "I don't have to talk to anybody at all. All I have to do is dance!"

THEY played "Japanese Sunset" for the little thirteen-year-old that night at the Ambassador Grill. Play it for Eleanor Powell now, and you will see in her eyes the mingled timidity and assurance of a youngster who'd never been in a public place of entertainment before, but who, in a few minutes, would take her place in one as an entertainer. The timidity was there because she was afraid someone might talk to her; the assurance, because she didn't object to the presence of any of these people, if they'd only let her dance.

She didn't have a routine made up. But when they started playing "Japanese Sunset," she forgot the crowd and remembered only the music. Out on the floor, she improvised to the orchestration, and only when the dance was over and the audience was stamping its feet and clapping its hands did she remember that she had made [Continued on page 88]

BOB BURNS may be just a raw-boned, long-legged, drony-voiced hick from Arkansas, but he has a "feelin'" about life and success that could well be the envy of all the philosophers of the world. Says he: "If there's one thing I hate it's these fellows who make a million dollars and a big name for themselves and then sit back with their thumbs tucked under their arms and tell you how they did it all accordin' to plan. How they worked an' how they never took their eyes off'n the goal, an' how they juggled this way and that to get where they wanted to be. How they made their dream come true themselves. That's a lot of wool gatherin', that's all. There ain't no such thing as happenin' accordin' to plan, at least not accordin' to man's plan. Not that I think God's sittin' up in a big chair holdin' all the reins, guidin' us all . . . that just ain't practical to believe, 'cause there are too bloomin' many of us. But sometimes He causes little things to happen in the strangest way . . . and those little things is what brings on the big things.

"Supposin' it's a hot summer day and you're a-walkin' down the street and you reach inta your pocket to take out a han'kerchief to mop your forehead and as you take it out you pulls somethin' else outta your pocket—maybe a bunch o' keys or a nail file—and you go on a step and realize you dropped somethin' and you go back. You stoop and pick it up and in that instant somebody overtakes you who you haven't seen for a long time and that person turns out to be somebody who changes the whole course of your life. Maybe somebody who offers you a job, or maybe a girl you fall in love with and marry—and none of it might ever have happened if it hadn't been a hot day and if you hadn't pulled your han'kerchief outta your pocket and dropped somethin'.

"See what I mean? That's how I happened to get on the radio the first time when I first came to Los Angeles five or six years ago. A man said, 'Well, Bob Burns, ain't that funny, I was just wonderin' the t'other day where you was. Thought probably you was still back east. I'm at KHJ now . . . come down and see me, will you? I think we might do some business.'

"See? And yet I was out here at the time tryin' to get inta pictures. But the time wasn't right yet for me to get inta pictures. I had to go through with a lotta things afore then.

"It was another little thing, like droppin' a bunch of keys, that got me my first big break on the Rudy Vallee program. Only this time it was droppin' a nickel in the phone and callin' the wrong number.

"I went to New York just to get on that program, that was all, and I knew the man I had to see was Mr. Gordon Thompson at the J. Walter Thompson Company, a big advertisin' agency that puts on that show . . . but for some reason, 'cause I was scared, I guess, I kept puttin' off callin' him. I bought myself a little nickel notebook, and I had his number on one page, Mohawk 4-7700. Each morning I'd look at it and say, 'Well, now it's only ten o'clock; he'll be openin' his mail. Guess I'd better wait till he's got that over with. I'll call him about eleven.' But at eleven I'd get to thinkin' that now maybe he'd be busy and in conference, and I oughta wait till afternoon, till most of his day's business was over and he'd be in a better mood. But by afternoon I'd get to thinkin' that that was foolish; that if he'd done a big day's work most likely he'd be tired and cross. So I'd put it off till the next morning, and then go through the whole darn thing again. For two weeks I kept a-doin' that . . . puttin' it off and off.

"IN THE meantime though, I was callin' my friend Jerry Cady who worked at another advertisin' agency. I wasn't tryin' to get a job from him, only he was my friend. I had his number on the next page from Gordon Thompson's, and one mornin' when I was gettin' kinda lonesome I thought I'd call Jerry and ask him to go to lunch, and so I look up his number and put my nickel in the phone and called it, an' it nearly knocked me off'n my pins when I heard the switchboard girl say 'The J. Walter Thompson Advertising Agency' instead of 'Fletcher and Ellis.'

"By mistake I had turned to the wrong page and called the number that had been scarin' me for weeks. Well, it happened so fast I didn't have time to get scared—and bein' Scotch all I was thinkin' was that it 'ud be a shame to waste a nickel, so I said quick-like, 'Let me speak to Mr. Gordon Thompson!' and I said it with such force that before I knew it there he was on the phone. And so all because of a nickel [Continued on page 72]

How Movie Dr

Robert Young obeyed an impulse—and proposed instead of giving advice

Three weeks after Pat Paterson and Charles Boyer met . . . well, they didn't go to the movies that momentous evening!

the Stars pose!

By James Reid

Wouldn't you be thrilled to have Robert Taylor, Franchot Tone, Gary Cooper or some other handsome actor ask you to say "yes"? But their ways of popping the question might surprise you! . . .

They didn't believe in love at first sight, said John Boles and Marcelite, but . . .

On the spur of the moment, and jokingly, Donald Woods proposed

MEN in the audience resent romantic movie actors. They may not say they resent them, but they do. Movie actors make life more difficult for ordinary masculine mortals. In any situation, they always know what to do or say.

That's what depresses the men in the audience—especially during love scenes.

Any love scene worth the celluloid it is filmed on is also a proposal scene. And a movie actor can make a proposal look like the simplest, most natural thing in the world.

. . . . The hero suddenly realizes that he must have this one certain girl or risk unhappiness the rest of his life. And what happens? Does the realization overwhelm him, make him self-conscious, strike him dumb? Does he suffer, trying to tell her? Never!

He just seems to rely on instinct or impulse. And instinct (or impulse) never fails him. He always does the right thing, and says the right thing, at the right moment. . . .

And men in the audience do a slow, sizzling "burn" when women thrill to the hero's impulsiveness and poise, and rave about how romantic he is. For men can't forget—as women can—that a script provides everything the hero says.

Women can't help believing that he is "just like that in real life." Men can't help believing that he isn't.

LET'S investigate. Let's look into some real-life love scenes. Let's see how movie stars propose—off the screen.

Remember Robert Young as the understanding friend, in love with the misunderstood bride in The Bride Walks Out? And how he reacted when two pals of the bridegroom begged him for the loan of a car to take the bride back to her husband? His answer, in effect, was: "Why should I help you to take her away from me? I'm in love with her myself."

That scene rang true. It was believable—far more believable than his later change of heart. And Bob was prepared for that scene by a memorable moment in his own life!

He can't remember the time when he didn't know Elizabeth Henderson. They played together as children, went to school together, were high-school pals. They never kissed, never thought of each other romantically. They were "just good friends." After school, Elizabeth went on to college; Bob went to work—first for a newspaper, then for a bank, until the movies discovered him acting in his spare time at the Pasadena Playhouse, and he became a promising screen juvenile. And all this while, Bob and Betty corresponded.

Bob was caught up in the social whirl of Hollywood, where he was tremendously popular. Betty returned from college, and Bob knew that she was going with a certain chap and was "practically engaged" to him. Home over a week-end, Bob saw her. Betty told him about the other chap, about how likable he was—and about her own doubt that she was in love. She spoke almost in self-condemnation. Bob, listening to the story, suddenly realized something that he never had realized before. He told her, at the end, "How can I tell you that you should go through with it and marry him—when I want to marry you myself?"

And that's how Robert Young proposed! He harkened to a sudden realization, obeyed an impulse!

CHARLES BOYER had never been in love, never given a thought to marriage, until his third trip to America just three years ago. He looked upon bachelorhood as a misfortune that he could not help. He had been a star on the Paris stage since he was twenty-one; and every woman he had ever known had been intrigued by Boyer, the personality—not Boyer, the person. And certainly he did not expect to find things different in fame-conscious, glamor-conscious Hollywood.

On his arrival in Hollywood, he was whisked to a dinner party given by a producer. At the party he was introduced to a British newcomer whose name he had heard only once, and about whom he knew nothing—Pat Paterson. She, in turn, knew nothing about Charles Boyer, whose name she had heard just once, except that he was a French actor. They sat side by side at the dinner table—strangers completely at ease together.

He asked her telephone number. The next day, he called her. He suggested a dinner date. After that, they saw each other every day—lunching, dining, swimming, driving, going to the movies. Apart, they

WORM'S-EYE VIEW of Nelson Eddy

Isabelle Eddy is a red-haired beauty —and her son's best pal

By Merlin Pierce

When a pretty private secretary tells on her popular boss—well it's a real confession

MY FIRST contact with Nelson Eddy gives an interesting sidelight on his character. I was doing a bit of plain and fancy groaning after a particularly hectic week-end, when the phone rang. It was M-G-M Studio, inquiring if I'd be interested in being Nelson Eddy's secretary. The name meant nothing to me. I stammered and stuttered a bit, quite distrait, having a mental picture of my two black eyes (consequence of an odd accident, but why tell it—no one believes those stories, anyway). I called him, after asking some friends in the hotel who he was, to be told: "Blonde, handsome, gorgeous voice, bachelor—aren't you the lucky one!"

With some trepidation, I waited for him to come to the phone, hoping that my services would not be needed for at least a week; time enough for the orbs to get back to normal. But no. He was swamped, and could I come out that afternoon?

"Would four o'clock do?" says I, in a weak voice.

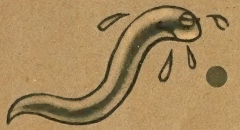
He laughingly replied, "I can see you're stalling for time." So I broke down and confessed that beside that Monday-after-a-week-end feeling, I had not one, but two black eyes. He chuckled and said, "You sound swell. Come right out."

So I donned the usual Hollywood disguise, black glasses, and tottered up the flagged walk of his large Beverly Hills home. Nelson met me at the door, tactfully ignoring the eye situation, and showed me into the study. After a few moments he said with a grin, "I was almost afraid to meet you after the glowing things I'd heard about you."

Nelson didn't mention the eyes until they were thoroughly well, when he quietly remarked how very nice I looked that day. After such an introduction, how could we help but become friends?

When he said he was swamped with fan mail, it certainly was no exaggeration. Wherever one looked in the study, there were vari-colored stacks of it, held together with elastic bands.

Nelson, his mother and I set to work opening, reading and sorting it. This was directly after his overnight success in Naughty Marietta, and Nelson was completely dazed by his sudden fame. Naturally, it pleased him enormously, but he took it quite seriously, as he does everything.



SKETCHY SCHEDULE For a SINGING STAR'S SECRETARY

Occasional sessions and telephone conversations with lawyer regarding all financial affairs.

Attend to all details for large parties. Caterer, etc.

Learn to whom he is in or out.

Try not to have colds. But if you do, spray everything in sight.

Call his accompanist daily and automatically pay his salary checks, along with those of agent, concert managers, and all household and sundry bills.

Publicity. Talk to studio publicity department and discuss same with star.

Sort fan mail. Segregate letters requesting information, such as concert dates in various cities, name of next picture, etc., and answer these. (Concert schedule is complete in midsummer).

Group unusually interesting letters for personally dictated answers.

Dictation.

Attend to personal correspondence (without dictation whenever possible).

Draw checks, make deposits, always keeping income tax records in mind. See that star has plenty of cash on hand for current expenses.

Choose wedding, anniversary and birthday gifts for friends.

Talk to brokers regarding investments.

AND ALWAYS BE A BUFFER.

Day after day, he read the letters himself, vitally interested in the reactions of his fans. It was amazing, the number of people who said it was their first fan letter, and the obviously high type of people who wrote them. They ranged from seven to seventy.

I think of one in the seven class who was quite heartbroken because Nelson sent him a greeting jotted down in red pencil. (Nelson has a habit of taking the original letter, turning it over and scrawling a few words and his autograph on the back in red or blue pencil.) To this little lad, red pencil meant but one thing. "No good. Stay after school and do this over." His mother wrote to Eddy, saying that in spite of this severe test of loyalty, she still found her son cutting out pictures of his idol.

THEN one in the seventy class. An obviously cultured English lady with a fine appreciation of music, who in a few weeks would enter the old ladies' home, and merely wanted a picture and autograph as mementoes of the most pleasurable moments of her life. Strangely, many of his letters stress the fact of his beneficial mental or spiritual effect rather than the usual patter about a star's nose or eyes, etc. This pleases him greatly, as he firmly believes in the laws of psychic attraction, the power of the will—in short, the power of the mind.

It seems that after seeing him on the screen, many people have a desire to unburden their souls to him, and actually do so. He seems to give them new courage to go on. This quality must be very marked to make itself felt through the medium of the screen, although one cannot possibly be in a room with him and not receive that feeling of strength and power which emanates from him.

Rush orders were sent for thousands of photographs. They disappeared in a few days, to be replaced by more. Nelson literally developed writer's cramp autographing these photographs. It was really a full-time job for him. He'd usually start after a late breakfast. Sitting at a desk in the corner of the study, he'd toss them on the floor at his feet until there was a great heap, then he'd stack them neatly in rows to dry.

He's intensely methodical in everything he does, and is a bit impatient of the lack of this quality in others. But it is part of his secret of success, I believe. He's very gay, withal.

AT LUNCHEON (usually the three of us, but sometimes Dr. Lippé, his teacher, friend and severest critic), he'd play all sorts of tricky games, laughing uproariously when his mother was stumped for the correct answer. Then sometimes to the playroom for a game of pool with Dr. Lippé, a quick trip to the studio for more fan mail and back to work again—Dr. Lippé sitting like a mischievous elf on the floor, stacking the photos while he and Nelson kept up a hilarious series of reminiscences of other days and other

"The Tender Savage"—that's what they call Simone Simon on the Continent. This intimate first interview tells you why!

THE rigmarole that led to my first meeting with Simone Simon made me expect to see an Oriental-perfumed, jewel-bedecked exotic who would receive me from a chaise longue, oozing glamour at me through the blue smoke of a scented Russian cigarette. That was before I had seen her on the screen in Girls' Dormitory. That was when I had only "heard tell" of the petite foreigner who had all the glamour tricks of all the Dietrichs, Garbos and Bergners put to together. Appointments were made with her, it seemed, only to be postponed. The French star was living up to her French starrishness!

Believe it or not, I had four people doing their best to arrange an interview for me. I called her on the phone myself several times, but never got beyond the Arthur Treacherish butler, who said that Miss Simon was sleeping, or that Miss Simon was working, or that Miss Simon was sleeping, or that Miss Simon was having a fitting, or that Miss Simon was sleeping. That sleeping business convinced me. A languid type, of course.

The date was finally arranged, much to my surprise, via an invitation to lunch at the West Side Tennis Club. I arrived, saw no maitre d'hotel at the door, so sauntered out toward the porch where stars were grouped at tables, eating. There were no waiters in evidence . . . a buffet table at the right explained that . . . and I wondered from whom I should seek the whereabouts of the exotic Simone.

There was a little girl sitting by the door. She had on shorts and a white shirt. There

"WILD WOMAN" from Madagascar!

And in THIS Corner

Clark looks dangerous enough to awe anyone, in this scene from Cain and Mabel. He is tough—sometimes. But at other times . . .

Is the Clark Gable who continually surprises and delights his friends with the unexpected things he does and says—not for publicity!

By Richard Harding

IT HAPPENED when the Cain and Mabel company, starring Clark Gable and Marion Davies, was working on the old Vitagraph lot. Lunch had been called and Gable sat at a table in a small lunch room, the Tam O'Shanter, on Glendale boulevard, with his trainer, Harvey Parry. They had just ordered, when in walked a mob of "extra" men who calmly proceeded to pull up chairs and join Gable and Parry at luncheon. Gable looked up with a grin.

"Sit down, gang. That sirloin rare looked good to me. What are you fellows having?"

Gable knew that another of Parry's "ribs" was being pulled on him—and any other star would have been burned to a crisp. A "rib" is Hollywood's term for a practical joke and Parry is known to be one of the best, or worst, "ribbers" in town. Gable was right at home with the "extra gang." All through the meal he laughed, told jokes, and kidded with the boys. When the meal was over, every "extra" placed his check in front of Gable and without a word, walked from the place. Once more the famous Gable grin,

"My pal." And he surveyed the staggering restaurant check ruefully.

MILLIONS of words and thousands of stories about Gable have been written, but here is revealed a Gable his fans have never known. Here is the real Gable, the man who has never forgotten that he, too, was once one of the "extra gang," glad to take five dollars for a long hot, hard day at the studio. Harvey Parry spent six weeks getting Gable into physical trim and training him for his rôle as the world's heavyweight boxing champion in Cain and Mabel, and perhaps got closer to the real Gable, than any other man has done since Clark became a star.

"Regular is the only word that describes Gable," Parry told me. "And I saw a side of him during those hard six weeks that I do not think his fans have ever seen. I had heard that Gable had 'gone Hollywood' and was difficult to handle, so when Warner Brothers hired me to train him for his ring work, I went out and talked things over with Clark. I knew him, for I was on The Call of the Wild with him—but I had never been forced to put him through six weeks of hard training routine. So I said,

"'I understand you're hard to get along with?'

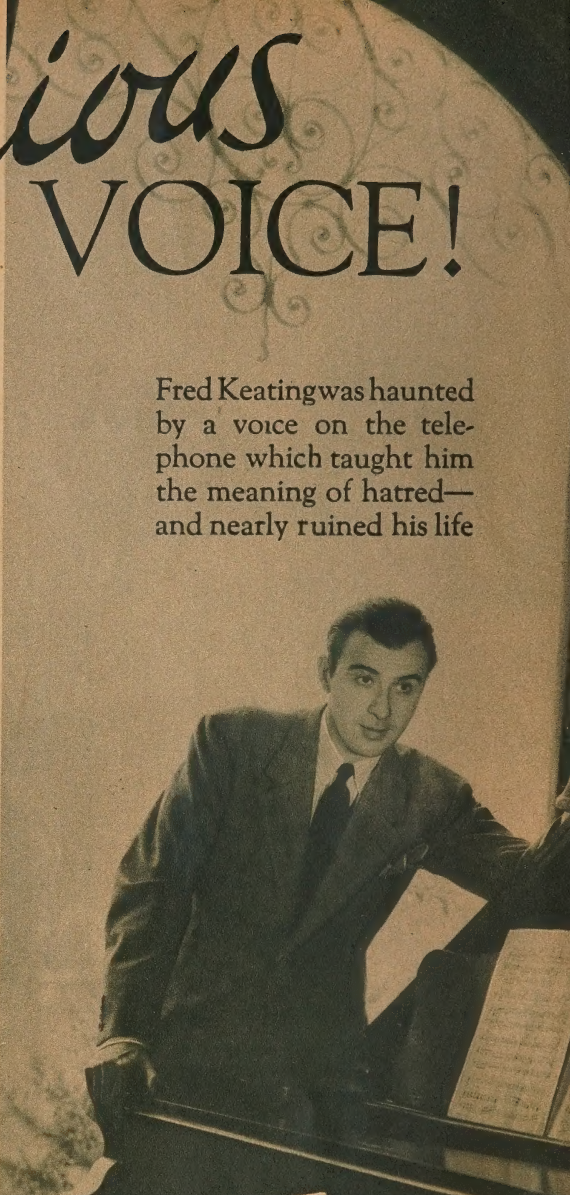
"'Yes?' said Gable. 'Well, perhaps I have to be with some people, to keep from being imposed upon, but we'll get along, Harvey. So don't worry about that. Where do we go from here?'

"During those six weeks, although I worked him like a horse, we never had a cross word. He went through difficult scenes during the day, and after that spent an hour or more in training. He would come to me worn out and ready to drop, but never a complaint at the routine."

PARRY and Gable "ribbed" each other, all through those six weeks. One day, after eating lunch off the lot, Gable came out of the cafe to find that rocks had been piled around his big Dusenberg, so that it could not be driven from the curb. He was [Continued on page 86]

The Mysterious VOICE!

By Gladys Hall



Fred Keating was haunted by a voice on the telephone which taught him the meaning of hatred—and nearly ruined his life

"THE VOICE on the telephone—how I hated it! How I shuddered and felt my spine crawl and my blood chill whenever I heard It or knew that It was speaking!

"In my mind, in my sick resentful heart I always referred to It as 'The Voice'—never as 'he' or 'him'. . . ."

And as Fred Keating spoke he shuddered as one shudders when the ghost of an old and haunted memory invades the dark alleys of the mind.

"Whenever my report cards came home from school," he said, "whenever I was ill, whenever there was something I especially wanted to do, some place I especially wanted to go—there would be long talks, arguments, discussions between my mother and—the Voice.

"Sometimes, when alone, I would answer the phone. My mother—who was Camilla Serrano, the concert singer and sister of that Broadway idol, Vincent Serrano—might be away on tour and I alone in the apartment in New York on a week-end away from school. And I would hear the Voice, disembodied and inhuman—and I would drop the phone and run from it as other children run from a bogey-man in the dark.

"By the time I was eight I knew better than to answer a phone call. And then, for ten years, I never answered a telephone again. To this day I feel a reminiscent spinal chill whenever the phone rings, though the Voice is silent these many years.

"IT WAS my Nemesis, that Voice. Frequently, after a bitter word-battle between my mother and the Voice—in which I always figured as the verbal bone of contention—there were tears. My mother's tears. And each one of them watered, and made grow, the hatred and resentment in my heart. And then there would be long silences and no word spoken—and I seemed to see bitter memories in my mother's eyes and to feel mysterious animosities making acrid the very air we breathed.

"For hours after the Voice had spoken there was, in our house, the feeling of a house with death in it. My mother and grandmother would speak in muted voices, thick with tears.

"But when I dared to ask furtive questions about the Voice I would be met with a raised barrier of chill, inscrutable silence.

"Whenever an interest entered my life—the Voice entered it, too. When I was eight Sidney Lenz, the bridge expert and a close friend of my Uncle Vincent's, taught me my first sleight of hand tricks. I came to idolize Harry Houdini and Nate Leipsig and Howard Thurston. Then, of course, the Voice entered my life again and I knew that It was trying to take the magic out of the magic that fascinated me.

"It was the Voice, undoubtedly, [Continued on page 96]

Swing Time

YOU may be excused from seeing this one only if you've been forcibly removed from society. Even then, perhaps you could persuade the warden. The Rogers-Astaire films are becoming classics of their kind—little gems which can't help but brighten the corner where you are. The current one has the best comedy of all their gay pictures—and Ginger shows a new ability to "punch" funny lines and situations. Astaire does a hot "Bojangles of Harlem" solo dance in blackface that will likely put callouses on your lily-white hands. He dances with three of his own shadows—who double cross him! This effect is achieved by having his previously filmed shadow duplicated thrice and projected on a screen behind him as he dances for this sequence. You'll like George Metaxa, who is a new screen face. Worthy of special mention for its clever lines is "A Fine Romance," sung in her best derisive manner by Ginger, and aided by Fred. Helen Broderick and Victor Moore get the most out of their hilarious lines. The story is so slender as to be almost inconsiderable—but it seems ample enough. Fred is a bit more restrained than formerly—but perhaps you won't notice, because the whole thing moves along at a fast pace, never stopping for breath. Ginger and Fred do three swelegant dances together, and there are enough catchy melodies in this to keep you in humming material for months.—Produced by RKO-Radio.

The Gorgeous Hussy

JOAN CRAWFORD is gorgeous—but the girl she portrays wouldn't be called a hussy in this day of casual broadmindedness. Franchot Tone carries his off-screen rôle of Joan's second husband right into this picture. But let's start at the beginning. Joan is Peggy O'Neale, friend of President Andrew Jackson. She helps him control his temper, gives him courage to carry on against his attackers when his beloved, back-woods, pipe-smoking wife dies. Joan becomes first lady of the land—the President defends her from slanderous charges. Three men fill her love life: Robert Taylor, Melvyn Douglas and Franchot Tone. Of course, she has a couple of elderly suitors on the side—and James Stewart, who is not at all elderly. The love scenes are beautifully done, and they'll be responsible for much of this film's popularity. Lionel Barrymore's President is a bold and striking figure. But it's Beulah Bondi's performance that you'll remember longest—she plays his wife. We had a feeling that the story lacked climax, but that it does, nevertheless, belong on your "must see" list, for it is an exquisitely-told story with a grand cast.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

What to Buy and Where to Wear It

By Sally Martin

"THOSE who dance must pay the piper."

In Hollywood the question is—how much? And where? And what to wear?

Soon the eastern states will be blanketed in their winter ermine and if you are migratorially inclined you will spread your wings for a flight to Hollywood and an adventure in sunshine.

Much has been written about the glamor of a Hollywood visit but too little has been said about the practical problems of this pretentious paradise.

Going to Hollywood is not enough. One must know where to go to see the stars, what to wear in their company and what to expect when the cash register strikes the musical note which signals the payoff.

The purpose of this article is to clear up a few of these mundane matters. After all, there is some comfort in knowing what to expect. Suppose we take a preview visit through a few of the various restaurants where the screen stars relax and play? It is possible to "see Hollywood" whether your limit be 50 cents or $25.

LUNCHEON AT ONE

Luncheon is Hollywood's favorite meal. Actresses, actors, directors and writers all stop the game of make-believe long enough to appear at their own special rendezvous to eat freely of this or that chef's specialty.

At the Victor Hugo, Vendome, Brown Derby or Sardi one will rub elbows with Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone enjoying a tête-a-tête, Isabel Jewell who has run over from the Lost Horizon set to have lunch with her fiance or Myrna Loy having a bite to eat with husband Arthur Hornblow.

Lunch varies at these restaurants from 85 cents at the Brown Derby to $1.10 for a buffet lunch at the Victor Hugo. The Vendome serves only a la carte. Sardi's prices for lunch are the lea side of a dollar. Entrees are always the chef's specialties.

If your idea of enjoying luncheon is to sit in a delightfully restive atmosphere and eat to your heart's content, go to the famous Victor Hugo owned by Aleidis. Here go many [Continued on page 98]

Mrs. Adam K. Luke, Jr. says: "Pond's Cold Cream certainly keeps my pores fine."

Faults that start in your UNDER SKIN

A SINGLE blemish can dim the freshness of your skin ... make you look older than you are.

A few coarse pores say, "She's getting on in years"—just as loudly as lines and wrinkles say it. Stubborn things—that keep on getting worse till you learn their real cause and the real way to treat them.

Deep-skin rousing needed

The truth is, almost all skin faults get their start, not on the surface, but in your underskin.

In your underskin are little hidden glands and cells and blood vessels. These are the foundation of your outer skin's health. The minute they function poorly, pores begin to clog. And then blemishes come. Even lines are really nothing but creasings in your outer skin, caused by failing tissues underneath.

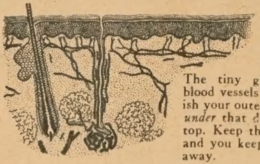
But—you can rouse that underskin to healthy vigor—by the regular use of Pond's invigorating deep-skin treatment.

Twice daily—for a fault-free skin

Pond's Cold Cream goes deep into the pores. Its specially processed oils loosen every particle of dirt. Easy to wipe it all off.

Now the rousing treatment—more Pond's Cold Cream briskly patted in. How wonderful it feels. Blood tingling. Skin glowing . . . and so much softer! You are waking up that underskin.

Miss Jane Mellon
"Pond's Cold Cream keeps my skin soft and clear — smooths out little lines."



Aging faults start here

The tiny glands, cells, blood vessels which nourish your outer skin are all under that dark layer on top. Keep them active—and you keep skin faults away.

Every night, pat in Pond's Cold Cream to loosen dirt, make-up. Wipe off. Pat in more cream briskly — to rouse your underskin, keep it working properly, so annoying little faults can't age your skin.

Every morning, and during the day, repeat this treatment with Pond's Cold Cream. Your skin becomes softer every time—looks younger. And it's all smooth for your powder.

How Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond Fell In Love

friends, is the actual truth—and that truth is sweeter and more delightful and even more amusing, by far, than any of the wild guesses of the wisenheimers. I'm going to tell it to you from the beginning—and I hope it'll correct a lot of wrong ideas you may have, a lot of the misunderstandings that have been built up around the two of them and their story.

Let's begin, about a year ago . . . let's begin where "boy meets girl"—

THERE was a big party in Beverly Hills. A famous Filmland hostess had invited scores and scores of people. Guests were arriving. An auto drew up before the door, and a beautiful girl stepped out, stood on the doorstep as she pushed the bell. Before the door could be opened, another car had arrived, and a blond lad, immaculate in evening wear, had bounded up the stairs and stood beside the girl.

While they waited, she looked at him. He looked at her. They grinned a bit awkwardly. You see, they'd never met—formally. The boy was quick to brush away the momentary awkwardness—he smiled, bowed to the girl:

"Miss MacDonald," he said, "since there's no one else here to do it for me—may I have the privilege of presenting to you Mr. Gene Raymond? Mr. Raymond," he said, talking to himself in mock formality, "this is Miss Jeanette MacDonald."

"Delighted," murmured Jeanette, holding out a lovely hand.

"Chawmed," kiddingly replied Gene, bowing over the hand.

The door opened, and together, they walked in. The hostess' eyebrows rose. She knew they hadn't been invited together; but singly. "Oh," she cooed, "how nice of you to come together . . . !"

Other guests saw. Hollywood looks were exchanged.

ABOUT a month later—Jeanette and Gene hadn't once seen each other in the meantime—believe it or not, the very same thing happened. Once again, Gene and Jeanette met on the doorstep of a party; once again, they entered together.

The next day, it was in the newspaper columns. It was on the tongue of the whispering claque of movieland. "Gene Raymond and Jeanette MacDonald are going together—buzz buzz buzzz. . . ."

Somebody began to ask: "What about Bob Ritchie?"

Now here's the spot where I'm going to knock one of your delusions into a row of ciphers. Jeanette MacDonald, when she first met Gene Raymond, was NOT engaged to Bob Ritchie, her manager, despite all the columnists and radio-casters to the contrary. Once upon a time, Jeanette and Bob were engaged to marry. But more than a year before that first doorstep meeting with Gene, Jeanette and Bob had in the utmost friendship, terminated their engagement. But not their friendship. One of Jeanette's closest, finest friends is still that same Bob Ritchie who is still her manager—and who, Jeanette says, always will be. In fact, you may as well know that one of the first wires of felicitation that reached Jeanette after the announcement of her engagement to Gene came from Bob. And let that settle that!

Now let's go on with the story—

ONE night, a week after that second doorbell encounter, Gene stepped up to a movie-house box-office and asked for a couple of preview tickets that had been left there for him. As he did so, he heard a girl's laugh behind him.

"What? Once again, Mr. Raymond? Is this a gag?"

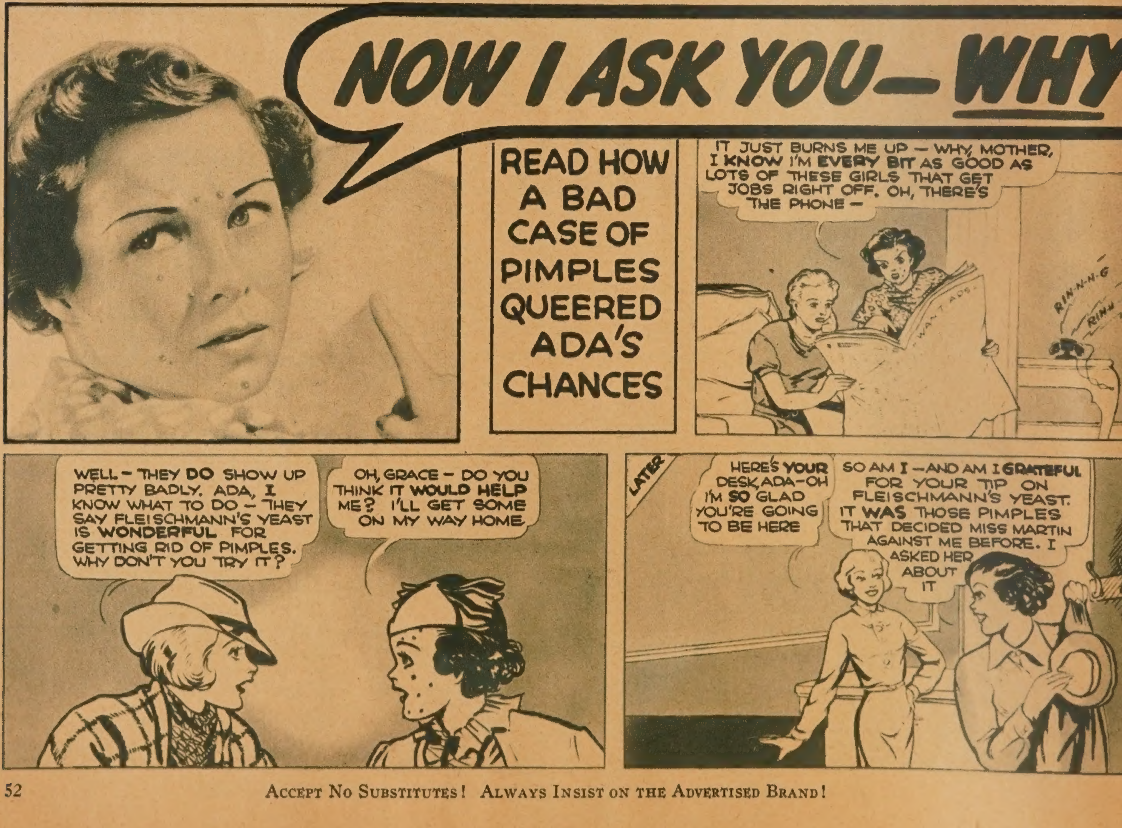
Gene turned, and there behind him was Jeanette, waiting to call for her tickets.

They laughed. Together, they went into the theater. Together, inside, they laughed over the column-cracks that had already been printed about their "going together," even though they'd never yet had a date.

"See here," he said, half laughing, "don't let's make liars of them. Why not come to dinner and a show with me some evening—soon?"

Jeanette replied: "Oh, sir, you know I wouldn't think of having a date with a gentleman unless he'd been to my home for dinner first!"

And so it happened—Gene and Jeanette's first real date. Dinner at Jeanette's home, where Gene met Jeanette's mother. Then Jeanette accepted Gene's invitation



NOW I ASK YOU—WHY

HERE'S YOUR DESK, ADA — OH I'M SO GLAD YOU'RE GOING TO BE HERE
SO AM I — AND AM I GRATEFUL FOR YOUR TIP ON FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST. IT WAS THOSE PIMPLES THAT DECIDED MISS MARTIN AGAINST ME BEFORE. I ASKED HER ABOUT IT —and one night, at the star-studded Trocadero, they stepped out together in Hollywood's night life for the first time.

Next day, in two different papers, they were reported engaged! It was, of course, rather silly. These two weren't even in love—yet. They were still in the process of discovering that they liked the same things—riding, music, dancing, laughter.

A friend who knows them well told me: "I know that Jeanette and Gene haven't the slightest idea when they first were in love. I think it was utterly like another romance of which I know—there was never a moment when they stopped being friends and became lovers. It just happened."

They'd been engaged for a week before Jeanette's mother made the announcement. I don't believe the actual story of what is quaintly called "the popping of the question" will ever be told. Neither Jeanette nor Gene is the kind who will fling to the wind such a treasure as the memory of that moment. Ask them about it, and they only smile.

I CAN tell you this—they became engaged on Gene's birthday—that was August 13. I know that that night, there was a big birthday party for Gene, and, naturally, Jeanette was there. Perhaps it was then that, somehow, Jeanette may have wanted to know what Gene would like most for a birthday present. And Gene made the obvious answer. And so—and yet, this is all just pure, sheer guesswork. And don't take it for truth at all, because it's just a crabby old writer's dream of what might possibly have happened.

But anyway, it was on that date—Gene's birthday—that they admitted to each other their love, and were willing to admit it, too, to the world. And so, one week later, there followed the formal announcement.

Gene and Jeanette are going to be married with "all the trimmings." It'll be a church wedding. It'll have everything—after all, it's Jeanette's first, as well as Gene's, and with all the naivete and breathless excitement of a first bride, Jeanette wants the ceremony to be full of the utter loveliness which a complete church wedding entails.

There'll be all the proper parties beforehand. There'll be a stag party for Gene. There'll be the announcements, flower girls, bridesmaids, rehearsals.

And then there'll be the wedding—in a fashionable church, somewhere, with all of Hollywood Who's-Who there for a glamorous setting. And Jeanette will wear the bride's veil—and that will be a novelty Hollywood hasn't seen in a long time.

After that—? Well, Jeanette and Gene have their plans. A honeymoon depends, of course, on work—but if they can, they want to travel. Whenever they can, they want to travel. That's one of the millions of things they have in common.

AND they're going to live far from Hollywood—at least an hour's ride away, in a ranch far north of Hollywood. When work demands, they'll live in town.

They'll live, of course, alone. Another thing they have in common is a great mother-love. Both Gene and Jeanette have wonderful mothers. Both Gene and Jeanette give their mothers a full measure of appreciation and devotion. Already Gene has presented his mother with a fine Beverly Hills home. There she will live after her son has married. Already, Jeanette's mother is making her plans to give her daugther and Gene privacy.

Work? Of course, they'll both go on.

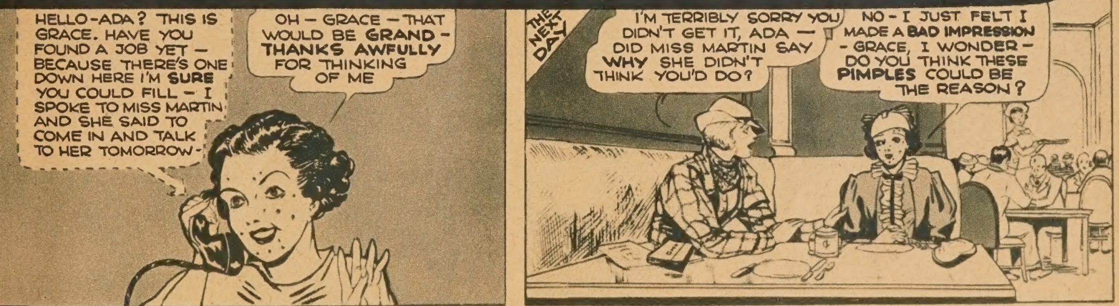
Let's face the inevitable next fact—that often, marriage of a single star interferes with that star's career. The thousands of girls who chased Gene in those personal appearance tours; the innumerable men who dreamed of Jeanette's smiles—what will be their reaction to this wedding? And what do Gene and Jeanette think of that angle? Let's see:

The records show that inevitably, a bachelor star's marriage has been followed by a falling-off in popularity, as indexed by the fan-mail barometer. BUT—and here's the important fact—the records show, too, that inevitably that falling-off has been made up, and many times over at that, when—and IF!—the fans learn that behind their favorite's marriage there was a true, real, honest love, and that happiness followed. The same holds true in the cases of women stars.

So Gene and Jeanette have no fear. They know their love. They know their fans will not begrudge them that great happiness. If their careers must suffer—(they don't believe that will happen)—but, I say, if their marriage means a decline of those careers for which they have worked, then they are willing to take it.

For above everything else in life to these two who, until now, have thought first and always first of Career, there is now a new First—their love. Nothing matters one millionth so much . . .!

CAN'T I LAND A JOB LIKE THIS!



HELLO-ADA? THIS IS GRACE. HAVE YOU FOUND A JOB YET — BECAUSE THERE'S ONE DOWN HERE I'M SURE YOU COULD FILL — I SPOKE TO MISS MARTIN AND SHE SAID TO COME IN AND TALK TO HER TOMORROW -
OH — GRACE — THAT WOULD BE GRAND — THANKS AWFULLY FOR THINKING OF ME
THE NEXT DAY
I'M TERRIBLY SORRY YOU DIDN'T GET IT, ADA — DID MISS MARTIN SAY WHY SHE DIDN'T THINK YOU'D DO?
NO - I JUST FELT I MADE A BAD IMPRESSION - GRACE, I WONDER — DO YOU THINK THESE PIMPLES COULD BE THE REASON ?

EKS
ATER
YOUR LITTLE FRIEND'S MADE A REAL HIT WITH MR BARNES— HE ASKED ME YESTERDAY IF SHE COULDN'T DO ALL HIS WORK
I KNEW ADA WOULD MAKE GOOD, MISS MARTIN—AND ISN'T SHE PRETTY NOW THAT HER SKIN IS CLEAR?
OH YES, MR. BARNES — I'LL BE RIGHT IN

DON'T LET ADOLESCENT PIMPLES KEEP YOU OUT OF A JOB

PIMPLES can easily spoil that good impression you hoped to make. Yet—they often occur after the start of adolescence—from about 13 to 25, or longer. At this time, important glands develop and final growth takes place. The whole body is disturbed. The skin gets oversensitive. Waste poisons in the blood irritate this sensitive skin. Pimples break out.

Fleischmann's Yeast clears these skin irritants out of the blood. Then, pimples go! Eat 3 cakes a day, one before meals—plain, or in a little water—until skin clears. Start today!

What Do People Say About Your Eyes?

DRAB—Pale, colorless lashes without benefit of eye make-up. Definitely uninteresting.

DREADFUL—Crude, stiff lashes, lumpy, stuck together as with ordinary mascara. Inexcusably artificial.

DELIGHTFUL—The NATURAL appearance of long, dark, lustrous lashes—soft and silky—with Maybelline. Truly, eye make-up in good taste.

Maybelline
The new Maybelline Cream Mascara—darkens, beautifies, and tends to curl lashes. Applies smoothly and easily without water. Black, Brown, or Blue. Complete with brush in dainty zipper bag.

So Important-that First Impression

Everyone notices your eyes first—remember this! Eyes without proper eye make-up often appear dull and lifeless — bald and unattractive. Many women deplore this in their appearance, but are timid about using eye make-up for fear of having a hard "made-up" look, as with so many ordinary mascaras.

Maybelline, the eye make-up in good taste, has changed all this. Now you may have the natural appearance of lovely, long, dark lashes—instantly and easily—with a few simple brush strokes of harmless Maybelline mascara. Non-smarting and tear-proof.

You will be delighted with the other exquisite Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids, too! Try the smooth-marking Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil to form graceful, expressive eyebrows—it may be had in shades to match the mascara. Use Maybelline Eye Shadow for truly glamorous effects — a touch gently blended on the eyelids intensifies the color and sparkle of the eyes immensely.

The new Maybelline Cream Mascara and the ever-popular Solid Mascara are preferred by over 10,000,000 discriminating women the world over. Either form is only 75c at leading toilet goods counters. Generous introductory sizes of all Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids may be purchased at all leading ten cent stores. For the finest in eye make-up, insist on genuine Maybelline!

good a cook as any housewife—try the following Lockhart Lamb Dinner.

LAMB ROAST—NESCO STYLE

1 4-lb. leg of young lamb
1 small clove garlic
1 stalk celery
1 teaspoon dry mustard
½ teaspoon curry powder
Flour for dredging
Salt and pepper
Olive oil

Pour a small amount of olive oil in the electric roaster. Pre-heat at 500 degrees. Rub meat with mustard, flour, curry powder, salt and pepper. Place stalk of celery and garlic in bottom of pan, and brown meat thoroughly in hot roaster, turning on both sides. When well browned, cover and reduce heat to 300 degrees and allow to slowly cook until tender, allowing about 25 minutes to the pound. Peeled potatoes and onions may be placed around roast about forty-five minutes before removing meat from roaster.

MINTED PEAS

2 to 3 lbs. of fresh peas
2 sprigs of mint, cut up with scissors
Salt and pepper to taste
Butter

Pour boiling water over fresh peas and place in one of the side compartments of roaster. Cook until tender, adding mint when peas are about half done. Place in roaster forty-five minutes before removing meat. Add butter just before taking from compartment.

APPLE BETTY

3 cups sliced apples
½ cup brown sugar
¾ cup cracker crumbs
2 tablespoons butter
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Place a deep layer of apples in buttered Nesco compartment, sprinkle a little brown sugar and cinnamon over them, and add part of the cracker crumbs. Continue until all ingredients are used. Place compartment in roaster about forty-five minutes before removing lamb roast.

A pretty girl is like a melody, we've been told, oh! so often. But a pretty girl with two cute pooches is even nicer, we think. This girl, Claire Trevor, is as smart as she is pretty because she wears a checked jacket with a velvet collar—and a feather in her perky and modish peaked cap

Most Bad Breath Begins with the Teeth!

WHY let bad breath interfere with romance—with happiness? It's so easy to be safe when you realize that by far the most common cause of bad breath is . . . improperly cleaned teeth!

Authorities say decaying food and acid deposits, in hidden crevices between the teeth, are the source of most unpleasant mouth odors—of dull, dingy teeth—and of much tooth decay.

Use Colgate Dental Cream. Its special penetrating foam removes these odor-breeding deposits that ordinary cleaning methods fail to reach. And at the same time, Colgate's soft, safe polishing agent cleans and brightens the enamel—makes your teeth sparkle.

Be safe—be sure! Brush your teeth . . . your gums . . . your tongue . . . with Colgate Dental Cream at least twice daily and have cleaner, brighter teeth and a sweeter, purer breath. Get a tube today!

CHIC SALE tells WHAT EVERY BRIDEGROOM SHOULD KNOW!

"Dinty, they tell me marriage nowadays is just like settin' down in a bear trap. Better watch your step!"

"Be firm, Dinty. Speak right up. Modern girls like it. What you say won't matter any, but you might just as well have the fun of sayin' it"

"From now on about all you'll contribute to the conversation is an occasional 'hem' and a coupla 'haws.' But don't let that discourage you—mebbe you won't have so much to talk your way out of"

For twelve years Dinty Moore has been Chic Sale's butler. Then he came down with a bad case of matrimony — which finally developed into wedlock.

As you read this he is convalescing on a honeymoon in our national parks. When Chic saw that his butler's affliction was fatal, he sat down to give him some good advice. Here is the result.

"Another thing, Dinty. Don't ever argue with a modern wife. It's much easier, and a heap safer, to compromise by doin' it her way"

"I didn't mean to make you cry, Dinty. I was just tryin' to give you a friendly slant on connubial bliss. I been workin' at it twenty years. I think mebbe you're goin' to find it's all right"

You can share the Screen Stars' secret of Beautiful Hair

★MERLE OBERON Star in Samuel Goldwyn's LOVE UNDER FIRE

EVERYONE knows that screen stars have their hair permanent waved just like other women. Yet their waves always look so natural . . . and add such a lovely touch of glamour to their personalities. Your hair can actually look every bit as charming and attractive. It is all a matter of the kind of permanent wave you choose. On such questions, Hollywood's stars are advised by the world's highest paid beauty experts, The Motion Picture Hairstylists Guild. They have tested every known waving method and Duart is the one and only permanent wave they have endorsed and recommended. And so nearly ALL of the beautifully waved heads you see on the screen have been waved by the Duart method. This same Duart Wave is available in a nearby beauty salon wherever you live, so why take a chance on unknown or unproven methods. Duart Waves cost no more. Remember to ask the hairdresser to explain how the Duart machine assures you of perfectly uniform waves because of the exclusive thermostat control that measures the exact amount of safe, gentle, electric heat for each individual curl.

The Texas Rangers

DEALING with one of the most vivid traditions of the old West, this film is picturesque, thrilling in spots—and full of whooping Indians, barking guns, clattering hooves. It's a horse opera in spite of its potentially strong theme, which was sadly mislaid by Director Vidor, and in spite of Fred MacMurray and Jack Oakie. These two are genial stagecoach bandits who join the law enforcers in order to aid their third partner in crime, Lloyd Nolan. But the spirit of the Rangers gets 'em and they must gun for their erstwhile pal. Stirring scenes between MacMurray and Nolan, when one is pursuer—the other hunted. Jean Parker is out to get Fred—and succeeds. This opus will be most applauded by boys who like elementary outdoor drama. Jack Oakie's comedy performance as a boasting, happy-go-lucky badman will be hailed by Oakie fans. Little Bennie Bartlett will sadden, then gladden you. Beautiful outdoor photography.—Produced by Paramount.

Old Hutch, laziest man in the world, (Wally Beery) won't even carry his own lunch basket

Old Hutch

FULL of humorous charm is this Wallace Beery starrer, which shows him at his best. He's the town lazy man, an uncouth fellow who fishes, leaving the support of his bright-eyed, hungry brood to his wife and young daughter. He stumbles on a cache of $100,000 in stolen bills—and goes to work (!) so townsfolk will get accustomed gradually to his having money. But the thugs who planted the "hot" money force Wally into their ranks. He turns the tables on them, becomes a hero. Elizabeth Patterson is Old Hutch's wife. Her dramatic denunciation of her shiftless husband won a spontaneous burst of applause from the hard-boiled preview audience. Notable, too, for appealing sincerity are the fine bits delivered by lovely Cecelia Parker in her scenes with Eric Linden—who also rates an orchid. No screen pair can equal their ability to depict youth's first fine and, may we add, naive and awkward rapture—difficult bits which they play perfectly. You'll enjoy the four cute children, too.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Cain and Mabel

IT HAS some moments of hilarity and gives Marion Davies—in the opening sequences at least—an opportunity to deliver some good comedy as a waitress turned musicomedy star. Since she needs publicity, and the current heavy-weight boxing champ (Clark Gable) also lacks popular appeal, their managers concoct a romance for newspaper purposes. It makes headlines. But the star and fighter snarl at one another, exchanging furious insults. Finally love rears its head —and then the trouble begins. Clark puts a great deal of vigor into his lines and is attractive. There are some lavish and beautiful dances which out-do anything seen before on the screen—or do you care? Marion's opening dance is catchy and well done. The picture goes into a decline at the half-mile post.—Produced by Warner Bros.

Piccadilly Jim

IRREPRESSIBLE Bob Montgomery is a playboy in this witty, fast-moving comedy Just as lively are Eric Blore, who does a beautiful bit of funny valeting, and Frank Morgan, as Bob's father. Bob is a London cartoonist who seizes upon a new-rich family as the butt for his comic strip. To his dismay he learns that the gal he loves belongs to that family—and that his papa is pursuing a rich lady of the same clan. Here the plot thickens—and grows funnier. Among the other top-notch performances: Billie Burke, as Morgan's light o' love; Madge Evans as Bob's yen; Bob Benchley in a priceless "drunk" bit, and Ralph Forbes as an earnest lover.—Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Mickey Rooney, Peggy Conklin, Freddie Bartholomew and Jackie Cooper say "Ah!"

Three Married Men

THERE'S a feud between the seven Mullinses and the five Carys—and then Mary Brian of the Mullins clan falls in love with Roscoe Karns of the Cary gang. Mary's two brothers, William Frawley and Lynne Overman, try to persuade the would-be groom that matrimony is not for him. The wedding preparations are funny. Then we spend some comical moments suffering with the groom because of his pajamas. The bride goes back to her mother. They reconcile. They decide to leave town on the train—and the conductor refuses to believe they're married and refuses to allow them to occupy the upper and lower. This ought to give you a pretty good idea of what this clean little comedy is all about.—Produced by Paramount.

Lady Be Careful

THE studio bought bawdy Sailor Beware, the stage hit, were compelled by censorship to revise the story—and drop the title hinting at the taboo drama. Undaunted, Dorothy Parker and husband Alan Campbell, together with Harry Ruskin wrote another set of juicy lines, inspired love scenes and fresh situations, so it emerges one of the bright comedies of the season. Lew Ayres is a sailor with a reputation as a lady killer. Bets are laid by sailors that he can make any girl fall in love with him, whereupon he meets Mary Carlisle, known as "Stonewall." Lew will doubtless regain his lost popularity with this film. Mary, Benny Baker and Larry Crabbe are excellent.—Produced by Paramount.

MR. AND MRS. DEEDS ARE BACK!

Remember Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur in Mr. Deeds Goes to Town? Of course you do, and you probably know they are being co-starred again, this time in the Cecil B. DeMille picture, The Plainsman.

Here's news! You can read the complete fiction story of this new picture of Gary's and Jean's before it is shown on any screen! ROMANTIC MOVIE STORIES magazine, ten cents at all newsstands, is printing this story as a complete novelette, illustrated with actual scenes from the production!

The big November issue (16 more pages than ever before) is crammed with twelve big fiction stories of coming movies. Included is Libeled Lady, with Jean Harlow, William Powell, Myrna Loy, Spencer Tracy, and many other stories of coming movies starring Shirley Temple, Fred MacMurray, Edward Arnold, Joel McCrea, Madge Evans and many others.

ROMANTIC MOVIE STORIES is the magazine. (On sale October 1.) You'd better reserve a copy at your newsstand. Newsstand copies are soon sold out at only 10c a copy.

Bette Davis' father always held Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink as an example for his daughter to follow. How the Movie Stars Propose were fiendishly lonely; together, completely happy.

Three weeks after they met, they were scheduled to go to the movies one evening, after dinner. Charles, happier than he had ever been before, suddenly decided that he wanted this girl sitting opposite him the rest of his life. He suggested, "Let's go to Yuma, instead of the movies!"

His proposal was as simple, and as impulsive, as that!

ERROL FLYNN and Lili Damita first met in England, and were instantly interested in each other. But both had fiery dispositions, which produced static early in their romance. Lili was to go to some party with Errol—and "forgot." Errol smoldered, despite her subsequent apologies. Later, when he was to go with Lili to another party, he forgot. Then she smoldered. While they were forgetting, they decided to forget each other.

They couldn't, they discovered.

A few weeks later, in Hollywood, they encountered each other at a party, instantly broke into smiles. Errol later called Lili, invited her to some function, jokingly warning her that, if she forgot this time, she would never hear from him again. She remembered. "Date" followed "date" in quick succession. One evening he showed her a precious jewel that he had brought back from the South Seas, and asked her if she would like to have it set into a ring—an engagement ring. And that's how Errol Flynn proposed. Three weeks after meeting Lili Damita for the second time.

PRINCES, millionaires, men of letters, statesmen, scientists, great musicians had proposed to Grace Moore—and she had gaily refused them all, living only for song. Music was more important than any man. Until, three years ago, she set foot on the gangplank of the Ile de France, bound for Europe, a vacation, and a concert tour.

On the deck, a few feet away from the gangplank, stood a man whose face arrested her. He was looking at her, fascinatedly. She returned his gaze.

She whispered to her secretary-companion, a moment later, "Please try to find out who that man is. . . . That is the man I am going to marry."

Her secretary laughed, suspecting facetious whimsy. "But how do you know he is not already married?"

"No—I am positive he isn't. I am positive that, if I ever meet that man, we shall marry." Grace Moore was intensely in earnest.

The man, simultaneously, was asking his companion, "Do you know who that girl is? . . . I want to meet her."

Grace Moore and Valentin Parrera, Spanish actor, did meet—on that voyage on the Ile de France. Both sought that meeting. And in that meeting, both found confirmation of their first-sight fascination for each other.

The last night of the voyage, they stayed on deck until sunrise, unwilling to part for the few final hours of the ocean crossing. That momentous, memorable

COLD WEATHER doesn't put a stop to this annoyance

You can offend with underarm odor even though you don't perspire

YOU'VE often heard women say, "No, I don't use an underarm deodorant in winter. I don't need to, because I don't perspire in cold weather."

They're perfectly sincere. Because they do not feel moisture under the arms or see it on their clothing, they conclude they have nothing to fear from perspiration. How horrified they would be if they knew the facts!

For, far from putting a stop to perspiration odor, winter often makes it worse. Tighter sleeves, and heavier materials keep air away from the underarms. And indoor life, with too little exercise and too much nervous tension is apt to result in ugly underarm odor.

It's something that your daily bath cannot prevent. The best a bath can do is just to cleanse for the moment.

The only sure way to avoid this danger is to give your underarms special daily care. And why not do it the quickest, easiest way? With Mum!

Just half a minute to use Mum. A quick fingertipful smoothed under each arm — that's all there is to using Mum! Then you're safe for the whole strenuous day.

Mum soothes and cools skin. Prove this by using Mum right after shaving the underarms. Even a sensitive skin won't mind!

Harmless to clothing. Use Mum any time, even after you're dressed, for it does not injure fabrics.

Does not prevent perspiration. Mum does just what you want it to do — prevents the odor of perspiration and not the perspiration itself.

Make Mum a daily habit, winter as well as summer, and you'll never need to fear perspiration odor! Bristol-Myers Co., 630 Fifth Ave., New York.

How the Movie Stars Propose!

crossing would too soon be ended. And in the grey dawn, as the coast of France loomed through the shore mists, he said, "I shall never leave you."

That was how Valentin Parera proposed to—and won—Grace Moore, who had been courted by royalty.

For her answer was, "And I shall always be with you." They were married at Cannes, France, a few days later.

WHEN Robert Taylor obeys romantic impulses, according to script, women the world over wish they could trade places with the heroine. In His Brother's Wife, he proposed to Barbara Stanwyck. Half of Hollywood believes that he has also proposed to her in private life. The other half doubts it. Neither Bob nor Barbara is telling. But it is a fact that his proposing has not been strictly confined to the screen.

When he was at Pomona College he fell violently in love with a girl who attended nearby Scripps College. He had no inkling then of what his future would be, but he was sure that he wanted it to be a future with her. With all the tempestuousness of twenty, he was positive that he never would find another girl so attuned to him.

He gave full rein to impulse. He made no attempt to mask his emotions. He told her his dreams of a future together, his fears of a future apart. He wanted to insure a future together. He pleaded, "Why can't we be secretly married?"

That was how Robert Taylor proposed.

They talked it over, decided that they should test their love until they were through college, and compromised on a secret engagement. And that evaporated when he became absorbed in dramatics, received an offer from M-G-M, and was rushing back and forth between Pomona and Culver City, taking lessons in screen acting. His absences made her fonder—of the other fellow. How that ever could have happened will forever be a mystery to twenty million women. But it did happen. Bob took it hard then. He can smile about it now. He has no regrets for that early impulsiveness. That impulsiveness was real, an intense part of his being.

GARY COOPER had a somewhat similar experience—and it took him years to get over it. He went to college in Grinnell, Iowa, fell in love with a pretty girl there, pleaded with her to marry him. She also compromised on an engagement—for his sake.

Gary had ambitions to be an artist; she wanted him to be unencumbered while he was getting started. He went off to Los Angeles, landed on a newspaper as a cartoonist, and had his head in a cloud of romantic day-dreams, when his job collapsed. He pounded the pavements, desperately looking for work, and was down to his last few cents when someone tipped him off to "extra" work in the movies. That didn't pay enough to support one, let alone two, though it might lead to something. The girl gave up waiting. She married someone else. (Incomprehensible, these early sweethearts!)

Time passed, and Gary slowly, surely, became famous as a romantic screen actor. He also became one of Hollywood's most popular—and most perennial—bachelors. His sales-resistance to marriage was phenomenal. Until he met Veronica Balfe, New York society girl, who was having a fling at the movies under the name of Sandra Shaw. Three months from the time they met at a movie party, Gary took her driving one evening. Later that same evening, they stopped to call on his mother and father, whom he wanted her to meet. She was wearing a diamond ring.

That was how Gary Cooper proposed. Invested in a ring instead of a speech.

IN HIS first picture, Franchot Tone appeared with Joan Crawford. It was not in the script that he should fall in love with her, but he did. And he was too sensitive to tell her so, in so many words. She did not want to hear, or even think, about love. She was too unhappy, too recently disillusioned by the breakdown of a marriage that had started out as idyllically happy. Franchot understood that.

He did not offer her a new love; he offered instead, a new friendship—an affectionate friendship. He accented the affectionate part by a daily gift of one of her favorite flowers. She accepted both the gardenias and the friendship.

He knew that it would be a long time before Joan would be able to consider marriage again for herself. He steeled himself for a long wait. Meanwhile, he had won one advantage. At least, he could be with her often. Weeks, months elapsed. He helped Joan to find new interests, new gaiety, new zest in life. In return for his affectionate friendship, she gave him hers.

One evening, he could control impulse no longer. Smilingly, he asked, "Why don't you marry me, Joan?" Smiling, she Wolfe Hopper and Gail Patrick aren't in love (with one another) . . . and they aren't married . . . but isn't it a nice picture? And that Travis Banton creation of white lamé and tulle is very chic for Winter weddings dismissed the question lightly. It became a form of banter between them, repeated at frequent intervals. But slowly, surely, his question became more serious—slowly, surely, making Joan consider it more seriously. That continued for a year, more than a year. Joan finally admitted that she loved him—but, still, that old fear of heartbreak in marriage haunted her.

If Franchot had been less patient, less persevering, less unselfish, less unfailingly faithful, Joan would not have lost that fear and found the courage to marry a second time. He obeyed that impulse to keep on asking.

JOHN BOLES first saw Marcelite Dobbs at a fraternity dance of the University of Texas. And, seeing her, he forgot completely about the girl he had brought to the dance; seeing him, Marcelite forgot about the boy who had brought her. John told her, "I never believed in love at first sight until tonight." He meant it. A blind person could have seen that. Tacitly, he was telling her, "I can never be happy now without you. You are the girl I want to marry, when I marry." That was how John Boles first proposed. And her answer was, "I never believed in miracles, either, before tonight."

ON THE screen, Donald Woods is an intensely serious, dignified, reticent young lover. Off the screen—well, it is a different story. (Producers, please note.) The girl he loved happened to go to Santa Ana, California, for a visit. He went down to look over Santa Ana, himself. He made an interesting discovery.

"Do you realize where we are?" he asked her. "In the Gretna Green of California—the mecca of marriage-minded young couples!"

"What should we do about it?"

"Why, become marriage-minded ourselves!"

"You mean, you're proposing to me?"

"I don't see anyone else. Never have seen anyone else, in fact."

"You can't be serious—or you would have asked me before. It wouldn't have taken you this long to make up your mind."

"Do you dare me to be serious?"

"Yes."

"Well, I've taken many a worse dare. I'm taking this one."

And gaily, arm in arm, off they went to the City Hall.

WARREN WILLIAM proposed, as he went off to war, by saying to Helen Nelson, with his goodbye kiss, "When I come back—" . . . Leslie Howard proposed in the same way, and utilized a brief leave to finish the sentence. . . . James Cagney wrote Frances Vernon a letter in which he asked, "What's the sense in our being apart?" . . . Buck Jones proposed to Odille Osborne by saying, "Should a girl marry a fellow who is broke and hasn't a job?" (Her answer was, "Not unless she loves him—like I do you.") . . . Richard Dix telephoned from New York to Hollywood, when he was about to embark on a sea trip, to tell Virginia Webster, "I can't go without you. I want to make it a honeymoon."

It's disillusioning, boys—but maybe the girls have the right impression of these movie actors. They are romantic. And they seem pretty well sold on this idea: When you make love, what you say isn't so important—it's how you say it!

The Best GRAY HAIR REMEDY IS MADE AT HOME

YOU can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy, by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded, or gray hair, makes it soft and glossy and takes years off your looks. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

"Wild Woman" From Madagascar

were freckles, a turned-up nose and pleasant warm eyes. But nothing to recommend her to pictures. She was, rather, sub-deb type, whom I judged to be about fourteen, and I remember I said to myself, "Funny, I didn't know this club was sponsored by society . . . thought it was just for movie folk," and at the same time I spoke to the child aloud. "You wouldn't by any chance know Simone Simon when you see her, would you? She's that new—"

A twinkle in the little girl's eyes arrested me. She stood up, her hands unwrinkled her shorts—another little girl gesture. Her lips parted, a smile, and then she said softly in that soft French accent which has since endeared her to an impressionable public. "Yes? I am Simone Simon."

It was such a relief, I beamed, and she beamed, and she said, "You are a surprise to me, too. I thought all woman reporters were like ogres to eat me up. You are hungry? We have to aid ourselves but that is better, don't you think, because then we can get a lot on the plate and no one knows what a pig we are!" She laughed gayly. "It is so foolishness. I was frightened of you and now I am not at all. Oh, look, they have roast beef, and salmon, and chicken! Is it not wonderful? Here let me give you something of everything. It's a nice club, don't you think? So much good food, and so many nice people.

When Simone pouts she looks like a fourteen-year-old. But to hear her talk . . . !

"And I am taking lessons at this tennis and I think I like it very much. I am only sorry I did not join before because I have been so lonely here, and now I think I meet a lot of these nice people, don't you think, and maybe make friends? See, there is Frank Lawton. I met him the other day. How do you do, Mr. Lawton. See, he remember me and speak to me. You see what I mean, it is nice to know people and speak to them. It has been so lonely here. Oh, look, olives—big—like they have in Italy!" Plop went one into her mouth and that plop ceased the monologue and allowed me a chance to breathe, and to reorganize my thoughts. So this was the French exotic, the combine of Dietrich, Garbo and Bergner! Phooey, this was a winsome little minx, a hell-cat and a domestic purring kitten rolled into one, a very natural and primitive, bubbling and vivacious little person.

SHE was born in Marseilles, some nineteen or twenty years ago, on April 23rd, the only child of a French father and Italian mother. From her father she inherits much of her imagination and vivacity. He was always lured by far places, strange ventures. When Simone was ten, he uprooted his home and moved it to Madagascar where he had invested in a graphite mine. From her mother Simone inherited another side—a side that loves music, laughter and beauty. Between the two of them somewhere along the line she also inherited ambition. As a child she thought she wanted to be an artist.

In Madagascar she took up sketching, and sculpturing, and it was the latter that later led her to Paris to study, when she was sixteen. It was during this year that she literally slapped opportunity in the face. While sipping her "little coffee" at a sidewalk cafe a man approached and told her of his admiration for her beauty. Simone thought he was being fresh, but he turned out to be Tourjanksy, a famous film director, who was seized with the inspiration to cast her in his next picture.

WHEN I asked her why it was she seemed so well adapted to rôles of girls-in-love, she tossed her curls and said, "Perhaps because I think love must be so wonderful. Oh, I have been in love many times, but they were little loves, one sided loves; the big one is still ahead of me. Some girls they are disillusioned about love. I am not.

"Oh, it is funny, the times I have thought I was in love. Most often I hardly even knew the man I adored. Once, for two whole years I was in love with a man and all that time I was never alone with him once, and all that time the only time he ever spoke to me was to call me Monkey Face. That wasn't ver' nice, don't you think, but it didn't matter because he had such a nice smile and such a nice voice when he said it that I liked to hear him say it. He was a student in sculpture like I was and used to study with the same teacher, and his lesson came after mine, and always I used to stay, just to see him, and he would come in and say, 'Hello, Monkey Face,' and then the teacher would send me away and that would be all. But I used to think of ways I could try to please him. Women must make an effort you know to please men . . .

"There were other times, too, even before that, when we lived in Madagascar, and there was a big, tall American engineer there, like your Gary Cooper, and I was only eleven, but I thought someday I would grow up and marry him. Only he had a wife, but I dreamed that she would run away and leave him and there was where I would come in—he would turn to me to console him. But those are just little loves. The big love, that is still ahead of me. I look forward to that. That is what I think of most often when I am acting love scenes before the camera."

ABOUT her years as an actress in France, Simone will not talk, for modesty's sake. But it's true that she was one of France's biggest stars.

Incidentally, when well meaning

French friends advised her to be very calm and nice in Hollywood, Simone is reported to have said, "That's very fine, my friends, but I won't change my character for a dozen Hollywoods. I lived for years in a wild country among temperamental people and animals, and I was most temperamental of all. You can't change nature and Simone over night."

However, Simone is not temperamental in the sense usually accepted by Americans . . . which is "nasty, unreasonable, difficult." In Europe temperament means something else . . . "changeableness, emotionalism, with a capacity for many varying moods." And in that sense, Simone is temperamental. As she said herself in an amazing interview, her first, with Twentieth Century-Fox's head, Mr. Darryl Zanuck. She asked him for a panther.

"I must have a panther. I am a very brave woman and I like wild things about me. I must be exotic, and besides, I love panthers. I had two of them when I was in Madagascar. I want this beautiful animal to walk with me when I go shopping."

But that noon at the West Side Tennis Club, Simone explained that she was "only fooling" about the panther. "I really didn't want one," she explained, "because if I went walking with a panther people in this country would think I was only doing it for publicity. I only told Mr. Zanuck that so he would know what kind of a woman I was. I do like panthers. I am wild at times. I just wanted him to know."

BUT if Simone asserts her primitiveness one minute, she is just as docile the next. Shortly after she arrived in Hollywood she was overcome with homesickness, and one of the things that disturbed her most was that the California poppies in the fields were gold, not red,

TATTOO

Waterproof . . . far easier to use!

True charm now replaces the bold, theatrical look that has discouraged so many women from using old-fashioned forms of mascara. The effect you have always wished to achieve with mascara is now actually possible! Your lashes seeming to sweep your cheeks with their length . . . their luxuriance rich with the enticing charm of naturalness!

Quite obviously, such exciting loveliness requires an entirely new kind of mascara; one that darkens lashes without shouting "mascara"; one that does not brand its user as artificial, "theatrical" or "bold."

TATTOO Cream Mascara is just that. It goes on so evenly and smoothly its presence on the lashes is not detected. Nor will tears, rain or a plunge betray the secret . . . for THIS mascara, not being mixed with water when applied, is really waterproof! Much easier to use than cake mascara too, and perfectly harmless. Can't smart.

She's Jean Arthur—playing Calamity Jane in The Plainsman—again opposite Gary Cooper, by the way. That's Cecil B. DeMille holding the target for Jean's whip practice. Brave man!

"Wild Woman" From Madagascar

like the poppies of her native land. They were not half so beautiful. Finally she could stand it no longer and cabled to France for some poppy seeds. When they arrived she put a bunch of them in her pocket, took a Sunday afternoon stroll through the foothills of Beverly Hills, across the fields, and when no one was looking sowed them to the winds.

"Now," she said, "pretty soon they will crowd the yellow poppies out, and there will be beautiful fields of red ones to remind me of home."

When Simone arrived in Hollywood she said the first thing she must look for was a garden. So she did, in reality, look for that first. And when she found the one she liked best she took the house that went with it. Now she practically lives in that garden; eats three meals a day in it and all but sleeps there. Also she bought a new blue Packard which she is just now learning to drive. Slacks and a little cap perched on the back of her head—that is her uniform.

AFTER the panther-talk the studio didn't know quite what to expect of the "wild" woman from Madagascar, but it soon found that its fears were unfounded. In other things they found her most agreeable. When she didn't like the hairdress which was designed for her, instead of making a fuss about it, she spent fifteen days quietly experimenting with different coiffures herself, until she found one that was acceptable to herself and the studio as well.

She doesn't talk much to others in the same picture, but she sits close to the director and seems to be watching, watching . . . eager to learn all there is to know about the American methods of making pictures. When she isn't working she dines often in the studio Cafe de Paris. When she is in production she eats in her dressing room. "Not because I am high hat. I would prefer the gaiety and excitement of the Cafe, but I must spend more time studying my lines than most actors do, because the lines are in a language that is foreign to me."

She seldom goes to night clubs and not once, since she has been in Hollywood, has she been escorted anywhere by a movie personality. "There has been so much to study and learn up till now, only now I am getting lonely, and now maybe I go somewhere with somebody, if they ask me," she added cutely. "People said I was trying to be like Garbo because I would not go anywhere or see anyone, but that is not so. Please you will not start any new rumor about me, will you?"

She rose to make a second trip to the buffet table. "Perhaps you will tell them I eat like a pig," she continued, laughing, "but that is true, so you can say that.

What is true I do not mind. It is only the other." Suddenly she stopped, serving fork poised in air. "Tell me, do you see anything of the Orient about me? No! But somebody who had never met me wrote, 'Simone Simon—she blends the sophistication of France with the charm of the Orient.' Humph!"—as she sent the meat fork stabbing, "I am as Orient as this—this piece of roast beef, don't you think?

"And tell me, why must Americans always think of France as sophisticated? Only Paris maybe is sophisticated. France is full of little villages and country and peasant people, you know, and that really is the nicest part of it. I am not a Parisienne. I have lived there and worked there, yes, but that does not mean I am sophisticated. I am not bored with anything. I love my work. I love people, I love animals. I love everything I do and see. I have happiness in much things. Everything is adventure and romance. Is that a sophisticated woman? When I like simple things? Do you like me in shorts? You do not think I am too bourgeoise in them? They are the first pair I have ever worn."

Such spontaneity, such effervescence, such blithe hopping about from subject to subject—well, you can see why any consecutive order would have been impossible in this story! But anyway, there she is: A minx who refers to herself always as a woman, but who looks like a child, and who has the amazing charm-combination of them both.

This is Dorothy Lamour's first picture, but she seems to have the right attitude toward her work. She and Ray Milland have the leading rôles in Jungle Princess

Every woman needs Kotex
FOR TRIPLE PROTECTION

Can't Chafe
The sides of Kotex are cushioned in a special, soft, downy cotton to prevent chafing and irritation. Thus Wondersoft Kotex provides lasting comfort and freedom. But sides only are cushioned—the center surface is free to absorb.

Can't Fail
Kotex has a special "Equalizer" center whose channels guide moisture evenly the whole length of the pad. Gives "body" but not bulk—prevents twisting and roping. The filler of Kotex is 5 TIMES more absorbent than cotton.

Can't Show
The rounded ends of Kotex are flattened and tapered to provide absolute invisibility. Even the sheerest dress, the closest-fitting gown, reveals no tell-tale wrinkles.

3 TYPES OF KOTEX ALL AT THE SAME LOW PRICE—Regular, Junior, and Super—for different women, different days.

—when you pick up a glass or cup? . . . You know from watching others that charm and poise can be destroyed instantly by the misuse of hands. And by the same token, the correct use of your hands can become a tremendous social and business asset. Great actresses accomplish much of their poise by proper hand action.

The makers of Frostilla—the famous skin lotion that keeps hands, face and body smooth and lovely—asked Margery Wilson, the international authority on charm and poise, to tell

- how to hold a cigarette
- how to pick up cards
- how to shake hands
- and how to make hands behave to the best advantage on all occasions

Margery Wilson gives the authoritative answers to these and other questions in an illustrated booklet on How to Use Your Hands Correctly. Although this booklet is priced at 50c, we have arranged to present it without charge to Frostilla users in the United States and Canada until May 30th, 1937.

Just mail coupon with the front of a 35c, 50c or $1.00 Frostilla Fragrant Lotion box (or two fronts from 10c sizes) and your copy will be sent FREE.

A Surprise a Minute!

yet. The little barbarian needs a lot of training. Give him time—he's only been with us a short time."

What a real, amiable, beautiful girl. So young, so vitally interested in what she is doing — so eagerly enthusiastic about even the most humdrum things.

You are conversing with a young modern, I told myself. Unaffected, sophisticated, interested in sports and in having fun. No sham about her. Straightforward. Eyes as direct and honest and knowing as those of a story book heroine. Plenty of fire in them too.

"I've just been swimming. I love the beach, but a day there, in the sun, would make me look like a lobster, so far as color is concerned. I don't tan, you see. This rest between I Married a Doctor and Mountain Justice left me free to do many of the things I've planned to do. My husband says I've been busier than when I'm working! Riding, swimming, planting my flowers, having fittings, studying music. I couldn't just stop in my tracks and do nothing. The theatre had made me a worker—and there seems never to be enough time for doing things." Her husband, incidentally, is James Townsend, popular actor's agent.

"One of the nice things in Hollywood is that there is this time to play between pictures. I hardly knew what it meant to have time to play before I came here. In the Civic Repertoire Company, one hardly had time to think outside of it, or think of oneself even. Rehearsals, rehearsals—performances each evening—matinees. If one is in stock or repertory, there is always next week's play to learn lines for. Sometimes, though, I miss that must do part of it as definitely as I miss the audiences."

I learned more surprising things about her. She hopes some day to direct. Is even now taking steps toward that end—for example, she has filled several good-sized note books with her observations on people she has met, places she has been, various things which would be invaluable to a director. It is her scrapbook for the future.

One of her prized possessions is a collection of old clothes. Most of these are costumes from the plays she has done. Old shoes, particularly the kind a character player might wear, are one of the features of this unusual and irreplaceable collection.

But her weakness is music-boxes. And she loves to show them. In her music-box "museum" are some very rare ones she has found in Europe and out-of-the way antique shops. Her favorite of all of them is a bird in a cage. You wind him up and would swear a mockingbird was singing just outside the window.

She refuses to mail a letter immediately after it's written, and usually saves it twenty-fours hours—then re-reads it. An avid knitter, she calls it her "vice" and admits anyone could do better. Her biggest adventure occurred when a farm house in which she was living burned to the ground. She talks a kind of pig Latin few can understand—and never reads the funny papers.

Josephine is five feet, four and a half inches tall, but for years was convinced that she was five feet, eight—and registered that height with agents and producers. She weighs 110 pounds.

Instead of the staid, serious Hutchinson her characters on the screen had led me to believe she was, I found the keen, enthusiastic, young modern that she is. Found a glowing personality which in some mysterious manner of her own artistic devising has managed to hide behind the quiet characters of her screen rôles. Here's hoping for a Columbus to discover the real girl for the screen. I'll give you one tip—that Columbus would be color. So here's to a rôle in a color picture for the surprising amber-haired and amber-eyed Hutchinson!

IT STARTED WITH A "COMMON COLD"!

(It Usually Does)

The Necessity of Definite Treatment

He wasn't feeling so bad yesterday—just headachy and loggy. Today they telephoned the office that he's pretty bad and they had to have the doctor in.

Everyone is shocked, for it was only a "slight cold" yesterday. Yet, isn't it true that nearly every case of bronchitis and pneumonia you heard of started with "just a common cold"?

If there's anything you want to be concerned about, it's the so-called "common cold."

Federal, state and city health departments are constantly calling attention to the danger of the "common cold." They know the insidious nature of the "common cold." They know, from experience, what it can develop into, almost before you know it!

To Be Safe

What you want to do, if you want to be safe, is to regard a cold—any cold—seriously. Keep two things in mind:

(1) A cold is an internal infection and, as such, calls for internal treatment.

(2) A cold calls for a cold treatment and not a "cure-all" or a preparation that is only incidentally good for colds.

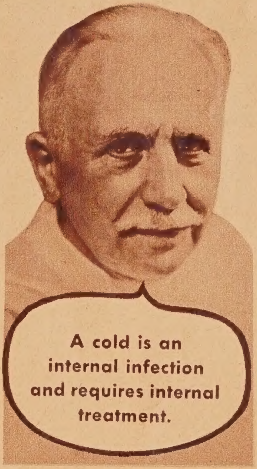
A reliable treatment for colds is afforded in Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine.

First of all, it is distinctly a cold treatment, a tablet designed expressly for the treatment of colds and nothing else. Secondly, it works internally and it does four things of vital importance in the treatment of a cold—as follows:



A cold is an internal infection and requires internal treatment.

First, it opens the bowels, an acknowledgedly advisable step in the treatment of a cold.

Second, it checks the infection in the system.

Third, it relieves the headache and fever.

Fourth, it tones the system and helps fortify against recurrence.

This is the fourfold effect that distinguishes Grove's Bromo Quinine and it is what you want for the prompt treatment of a cold.

Decisive Treatment

Grove's Bromo Quinine tablets now come sugar-coated as well as plain. The sugar-coated are exactly the same as the regular, except that the tablets are coated with sugar for palatability.

The moment you feel a cold coming on, go get yourself a package of Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine tablets. Don't compromise with less efficient methods. Start taking the tablets immediately, two at a time. Taken promptly, Grove's Bromo Quinine will usually stop a cold the first day and that's the speed of action you want.

All drug stores sell Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine and no reliable druggist will try to switch you to anything else. Ask firmly for these famous tablets by name. The few pennies' investment may save you a lot of trouble.

Eyes for Beauty

For lashes that curl fetchingly, use trusty Kurlash

"Before retiring, every bit of make-up should be removed and the eyes washed with a dependable lotion. A bit of nourishing cream should then be patted into the lids and all about the eye and a touch of oil rubbed into brows and lashes to keep them soft and pliable."

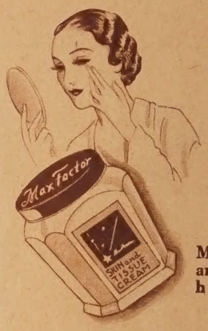
If Joan's rules of caring for and beautifying the eyes have kindled the high resolve to treat your own eyes with new courtesy, be diligent in the matter of hygiene and discriminating in your selection of cosmetics and you will be well on the road to eye beauty.

Since hygiene comes first, of primary importance is a dependable lotion to relieve irritated eyes and wash away dust particles at the end of the day. Murine is a soothing lotion that will refresh and cleanse reddened or sensitive eyes and can be used with safety as often as desired. There is an eye dropper right in the bottle which makes the application of Murine simple and sanitary.

The ideal brow line is one which follows the bone structure of the eye socket, but nature usually needs a helping hand in giving a neat arch and keeping stray hairs from growing beneath the brows and over the bridge of the nose. The persistent problem of tweezing has been simplified by the Kurlash Company with their scissor-handled Twissors, which have a stubborn grip and, best of all, permit full vision of the brow on which you are working. The price of Twissors is only twenty-five cents. For painless tweezing, always remember to soften the skin with a bit of cold cream before starting to work on your brows and to pull out the hair in the direction it is growing.

Kurlash is the name of that popular little instrument which clever girls use to bring out the full beauty of their lashes. It requires no heat and will curl the lashes in a twinkling, making them appear long and come-hitherish. The rubber reinforcement on Kurlash protects both lids and lashes in the curling process. Priced at one dollar.

If you have found applying mascara a tricky business you will be delighted with Maybelline's new Cream Mascara which is simplicity itself to use and gives the lashes a silky, natural appearance. Squeeze a tiny bit of the mascara from its metal tube onto the specially molded brush which comes with it, and stroke upward, brushing the mascara evenly to the very tips. Tube and brush have a neat little suede case with zipper opening which can be carried in the purse. The price complete is seventy-five cents.



Max Factor's Skin and Tissue Cream helps prevent crow's-feet

Newest of eye beautifiers from the House of Pinaud is their Six-Twelve Eye Shadow which comes in blue, violet, green and brown. Cream-like in consistency it can be blended into the subtlest of shadows. And don't distrust green because you have never tried it—you will find this shade flattering and piquantly different. The Six-Twelve Eye Shadow also comes in an attractive little tube all set to go places.

Laugh lines are quick to develop into crows-feet in the sensitive, thin skin around the eyes unless this delicate area is given special care and attention. Each night before going to bed, an easily absorbed tissue cream should be patted ever so gently around the eyes and over the lids with the fingertips. Max Factor's Skin and Tissue Cream is particularly beneficial for this important nightly ritual. And it needn't be confined to the eye area as the fine emollient qualities of this cream make it an excellent restorative for the face and throat when used as a night cream. Max Factor's Skin and Tissue Cream may be had at one dollar, or at two dollars for the "extra-large" size.

Maybelline Cream Mascara comes in a zipper case

A New $500.00 Trademark Contest

to be an artist to enter this contest. All you have to do is to write down your ideas clearly and briefly. You may send in as many as you like. The more the merrier. Mail your entry (or entries) to Contest Editor, SCREEN BOOK Magazine Hollywood, Calif.

This same offer appears in the November issues of SCREEN BOOK's affiliated Fawcett film Publications—HOLLYWOOD, SCREEN PLAY, MOTION PICTURE, and MOVIE CLASSIC. The winner among the entries submitted to SCREEN BOOK will be awarded a cash prize of $50 and a chance to win the $250 Grand Prize.

Here's a good tip to all contestants. When you have an idea that you think suitable for a trademark, jot it down at once. Ideas you know, have a habit of slipping away beyond recall unless transferred to paper. The history of all film trademarks disclose the remarkable fact that they were founded on flash thoughts of their creators.

And another thing. Be sure that your idea is original. You cannot hope to win a prize by copying what some one else has already used. Read the contest rules over carefully and then start picturing trademark ideas in your mind, being sure to transfer to paper those you think will be truly symbolic of the type of pictures Mr. LeRoy plans on producing.

Here are the rules:

1. Contest closes December 20th, 1936. All entries must be in the mail not later than midnight, December 20th, 1936.
2. Any reader is entitled to enter except employees and relatives of employees of Fawcett Publications, Inc., Motion Picture Publications, Inc., or A Mervyn LeRoy Production.
3. It is not necessary to submit a drawing of the trademark—you can outline your idea in words.
4. Do not submit fanciful or decorated entries.
5. Judges will be Mervyn LeRoy, S. Charles Einfeld, Director of Advertising and Publicity for Warner Bros., and Edward Selzer, Publicity Director for Warner Bros.
6. Contest closes midnight, December 20th, 1936.
7. In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded.
8. Submit your entry (or entries) to Contest Editor, SCREEN BOOK, Magazine, Hollywood, Calif.
9. Prize winners agree to sign over all right and title to winning designs and to accept the prize money as full compensation for the same. No entries will be returned.

From now on it's all up to you. Here's hoping your entry wins a prize!

I didn't want to waste I'm gonna make myself a million dollars. Is there anything planned about that?

"See, I didn't have time to have the jitters, to work myself up into a nervous state. I just told him I'd come all the way across the country to get on the Rudy Vallee program, and I was gonna get on it. And he said, 'That was takin' a pretty big chance, don't you think?' And I said, 'Not half as big a chance as you'll be takin' if you give me an audition.' And I told him I wanted a private audition too. I didn't want him shovin' me in with a lot of those hill billy fellows in big hats and with no mud on their boots. And so he said I could have a private audition the next day, and I said, 'All right then, and I'll bring my Bazooka.' He wanted to know what that was, and I wouldn't tell him.

"WELL, if you've never given an audition you don't know how cold it can be. All those listenin' fellows, they just sit there behind the glass with long faces and you can just see them sayin' to themselves, 'We'll get through with this one in a hurry.' They asked me where my script was and I said I didn't have none, and what's more I wouldn't have none when I went on the Rudy Vallee program either. And I said just to show them that my act wasn't a one-time shot, that they could name any subject and I'd talk on it.

"That kinda confounded them and I said 'Go ahead, gentlemen. Name anythin', birds, babies, trees, rivers, love, forest, mountains, moonlight—anythin'! But you know what? They couldn't think of nothin'. They had a conference and still couldn't think of nothin' so I figured I had the advantage over them right there. I was offerin' to talk on anythin', and they couldn't even think of one little thing.

"So I said, 'All right, I'll talk about gettin' on the Rudy Vallee program.' And I did. And I said I'd had a big disappointment in comin' to New York, cause I'd wanted to get on one of them amateur programs, but I'd found out you couldn't get on one of them less you were known, so now I'd had to come down a peg or two to the Rudy Vallee program. But I said anyway it had its advantages cause at least the competition on that program wouldn't be so keen. So I went on like that for a while and purty soon I had the job. All on account of a nickel spent the wrong way.

"That job next landed me on a program with Bing Crosby, and from that into a picture with Bing. And now I'm workin' in The Big Broadcast of 1937, and there'll be more, I guess. I got a contract now."

PERHAPS from this good-natured, good-humored "spiel" you can guess why a hick from Arkansas is the most refreshing thing Hollywood has yet seen, and why Hollywood would make him, if he would permit it, the most adored social lion.

"But I don't care for parties much," he says. "Course I go now and then . . . there was that party at the Countess di Frasso's. Only she didn't really invite me. It was Carole Lombard who got me to that one. Parties are like theater engagements; one good one gets you another!

"See, it was like this way. Marina Shubert and her mother, Nina Koshetz, gave a party for Bing Crosby and the rest of us on the radio show, and I got up at that party and entertained for a while, and Carole Lombard was there, and she liked it, I guess, and that's how she got me invited to the Countess' party. Just up and told the Countess to invite me, that's all. So I went. And I had a good time and I might go to others exceptin' there weren't that trouble about clothes.

"I don't like to dress up, and like that party at the Countess', f'rinstance. She called it a red and white party, and everybody had to wear red and white, and a pal of mine said I should get a white mess jacket and wear a red cummerbund. Well, I didn't know what either of them things was, but I guessed a mess jacket was the kind of white coats waiters wear, so I bought myself one, and the cummerbund sounded sorta like a sash, so I went to a haberdasher store to get one of them, and I took the waiter's jacket along to show the man what I wanted to wear it with, and he laughed. And he said that wasn't a mess jacket, that it was just a mess, but that they could order me one. So they did, and it cost about ten times as much as the waiter's jacket, which I took back, and it didn't look no better, it seemed to me. But see, that's the

This is how a polo addict gets in his home work. Paul's ingenious net-enclosed pen has sloping sides so the ball comes back to be hit again and again kinda thing you have to do if you go to parties much. So I don't.

"WHY, when I used to play my Bazooka in the Bal Tabarin in New York—even if it was a smart expensive place, I never used to dress up none. At just exactly twelve o'clock every night, a very elegant-lookin' master of ceremony, in a Brooks Brothers' suit of evening clothes would come out on the floor and announce me. And he would address them 'Ladies and Gentlemen' like they were, and tell them all about this wonderful artist they were so lucky to have with them . . . an artist who had played in front of kings and queens and duchesses and dukes . . . and who was here to play one solo for them now on the most unique instrument in the world.

"And then he'd bow, and then there'd be a blare from the orchestra, and then I'd step out. And I'd have on just a plain suit of clothes like I used to wear back in Arkansas, and maybe my hair'd need combing, and my face'd need shaving, and I'd just lift my Bazooka to my lips, without bowin' or nothin' and I'd play. And usually I'd play Margie—it was popular then—and after I got through I'd throw that Bazooka down and march off, to a table on the side, and no matter how much they hollered I wouldn't play no more.

"And did those society people love it! They used to come there night after night, and come early for dinner, which cost a lot more than if they'd come after the theater, just so they'd have a good seat up front when I'd play. Why a lot of people used to tell me if a week went by and they didn't come to hear my Bazooka they'd get lonesome for it. It did something to them, they said.

SKINNY, WEAK RUNDOWN, NERVOUS

Feed Strength-Building Natural Iodine to Glands for RICH, RED, NOURISHING BLOOD!

How Amazing New Sea Plant from Pacific Ocean Feeds IODINE-STARVED GLANDS, Quickly Renews ENERGY, Builds Glorious NEW STRENGTH and ADDS 5 Lbs. in one Week or No Cost!

Here's new hope and encouragement for thousands of tired, weak, worn out, haggard-looking women whose energy and strength have been sapped by housework and worry, who are nervous, irritable, always half-sick and ailing. Science has at last placed its finger on one of the principal causes of this dangerous rundown condition, and provides the way for building up and renewing a rich supply of red, nourishing, strength-building blood. "In most cases," agree many leading scientists and health authorities, "the cause of weakness, nervousness, skinniness and poor blood may be traced directly and indirectly to MINERAL and IODINE-STARVED GLANDS. When these glands don't work properly, all the food in the world can't help you. It just isn't turned into solid flesh, husky tireless strength, vibrant energy and the red blood supply that keeps you strong and well. The inevitable result is, you stay skinny, rundown, nervous, weak and ailing."

The most important gland—the one which actually controls body weight and strength, and assures the utilization of nourishment—needs a definite ration of iodine all the time—NATURAL ASSIMILABLE IODINE—not to be confused with chemical iodides which often prove toxic. Only when the system gets an adequate supply of iodine can you regulate metabolism—the body's process of converting digested food into firm flesh, new strength and energy.

To get this vital mineral in convenient, concentrated and assimilable form, take Seedol Kelpamalt—now recognized as the world's richest source of this precious substance. It contains 1,300 times more iodine than oysters, once considered the best source. 6 tablets alone contain more NATURAL IODINE than 486 lbs. of spinach or 1,387 lbs. of lettuce.

Try Seedol Kelpamalt for a single week and notice the difference. See flattering extra pounds appear in place of scrawny hollows. Notice how much better you feel, and if you don't gain at least 5 lbs. in one week the trial is free. Your own doctor will approve this way.

100 Jumbo size Seedol Kelpamalt Tablets—four to five times the size of ordinary tablets—cost but a few cents a day to use. Get Seedol Kelpamalt today. Seedol Kelpamalt is sold at all good drug stores. If your dealer has not yet received his supply, send $1.00 for special introductory size bottle of 65 tablets to the address at the right.

Around the World with Lead Pipe and Whiskey Funnel

"SURE, that's true about my used-to playing it for kings and queens and dukes and duchesses. That was right after the war. I was still in France and I had a band of my own and there was a lot of royalty in Paris and they used to like me around cause they liked my Bazooka. Even if it was only a piece of lead pipe and a whiskey funnel, it made the kind of music they liked. And I used to go to parties where sometimes there was Maurice, the famous dancer, and his partner. And often we played for them to dance to.

"Then there was the time we helped give the party at the Princess'—I forget the rest of her name now, but she was the Princess of Czechoslovakia or Bulgaria or one of those places, and she was one of the nicest ladies I ever knew. And one day when she said wasn't it a shame she was broke cause she owned a beautiful castle right outside of Paris where it would be a lovely place to give a party. And I said we'd give the party anyway. Me and the boys would provide the music, and as for food and drinks, the guests could bring their own. And she said that would be nice, only the palace wasn't in no shape to give a party, it was so dirty and run down.

"So me and the boys we went out there and cleaned it up, and the Princess helped, just to show you how swell she was. There she was on a step ladder washin' windows while we mowed the grass and scrubbed the floor.

"And you know, that was one of the most wonderful parties I ever saw. The King of Spain was there, and his cousin, Don Luis, and he was so impressed with my Bazooka he gave me and the boys a tip of $600, and asked me to be sure and come and see him in Spain sometime.

"BUT I ain't always played my Bazooka for royalty. No indeed. A lot of times I played it for hobos in box cars, when I was doin' a little freight hikin' myself. And I've played it for

OLD HANDS
YOUNG FACE

DON'T LET YOUR HANDS "DATE" YOU!

SOFSKIN CREME Quickly Restores Their Soft, Youthful Allure

TRY THIS AMAZING NEW CREME 10 DAYS FREE!

Maybe you don't do a stroke of real work. But just because they're in water so much oftener, your hands age faster than your face. Old hands sneak up on you before you know it—dry, veiny, rough-fingered, with wooden palms that repel a handclasp. What a tragedy while your face is still so young!

Now Science steps in with a marvelous new youthifier, SOFSKIN CREME. Your hands absorb its youth-renewing elements instantly. You can actually see them grow whiter, softer; harsh lines smooth out. So fragrant, so dainty, you'll love it. Leaves no shine or stickiness. Just soft, white, gardenia smoothness. You can wear gloves at once.

Already 12,000 Beauticians recommend SOFSKIN, use it themselves. It gives hand allure like nothing ever known before; SOFSKIN also gives arms and throat enchanting whiteness without powder; yet it is a perfect powder base. circus parades, and I've played it on the boardwalk at Atlantic City to attract customers inta my concession where you could play a horse racing game, and where the winner got little Chinese baskets full of candy. And I've played it in carnivals all over the country . . . and in my own traveling carnival which I owned myself. And when I couldn't raise money no other way, it always helped me.

"And I always say, 'See, it was just chance that made me discover my Bazooka.' I didn't set out to invent an instrument that people would like, and that would make me money. I was just cleanin' a piece of pipe out in the yard one day back in Van Buren, and was blowin' through it and it made a funny whistlin' sound, and I got to thinkin' if I put somethin' on the other end to make the sound bigger, it might sound like somethin' and so I put a whisky funnel on the other end, and that was the birth of my Bazooka. If the drain hadna got clogged up that day . . . well, see what I mean? It ain't plannin' . . . just circumstance.

"Course I've worked . . . I've worked hard. And I've near-starved. And that's no foolin'. But a lot of poor fellows do that, and still they don't get no place. And yet here I am playin' good parts in pictures on the same lot where I used to carry spears, and be only an extra.

"WHY, I guess, I might never have gone inta show business if it hadna been for one letter my high school principal wrote about me when I went to the University—and what I said about it. I guess I'd better tell you that, it should oughta help cinch the point.

"I didn't graduate from high school, but still I wanted to get inta the University and so I asked the principal of the Van Buren High to write me a letter of recommendation and he said, 'You would never present the letter I'd write for you,' and I said yes, I would, and so he wrote it.

Dear President Futrell:

Maybe you can interest this boy. We can't flatter ourselves that we did.

"And that was all, but anyway I took it to the president of the University, and he read it and looked sorta mad, and said, 'Mr. Burns, did you know what was in this letter?' And I said I did.

"And so right then and there he figured I was sorta fresh and he said, 'Well, then maybe you can explain why you presented it.' And I said 'I can,' and I did.

"I said, 'Why, I was so bad in school that there was a blot on me, and I want to come to this University with a blot on me, so's I can wipe it off. It's no problem gettin' through a University with a clear slate to start with, but it is somethin' to get through and remove a blot at the same time. That's what I want to do.'

"And he stood up and shook my hand and said, 'My boy, that's very admirable. I wish you luck, and what's more I'll keep a personal eye on you.'

"And he did. And at the end of four months he kicked me out."

Bob Burns looked at me and grinned. "You liked that! You laughed! Well, I guess maybe I'll have to use that for one of my jokes."

He took me to the door. "Thank you for comin' round. It's a right nice compliment to be interviewed, but don't you go tellin' folks I knew where I was goin' and that's why I got there. Cause I didn't!"

"I DREADED TO SIT DOWN

Yet Standing or Reclining Gave Me No Relief!"

What suffering Piles cause! What they do to you, physically and mentally! But pain is not the worst thing about Piles—they can develop into something very serious.

For the treatment of Piles, there is nothing better than to try Pazo Ointment. Pazo is definitely effective. Almost instantly it relieves the distress due to Piles—the pain, soreness and itching.

Effective for 3 Reasons!

First, Pazo is soothing, which tends to relieve inflammation, soreness and itching. Second, it is lubricating, which tends to soften hard parts and make passage easy. Third, it is astringent, which tends to reduce swollen parts and check bleeding.

Pazo comes in tubes fitted with a special Pile Pipe for application high up in the rectum. It also now comes in suppository form. Those who prefer suppositories will find Pazo Suppositories the most satisfactory. All drug stores sell Pazo, but a trial tube (with Pile Pipe) will be sent on request. Mail coupon and enclose 10c (coin or stamps) to help cover cost of packing and postage.

Today's Gossip

You'd probably never guess it, but Frances Farmer is wearing underwear of the 1905 vintage. She's quite unaware that she's being photographed as she autographs pictures for her fans on the sidelines of the Come and Get It set flying between Los Angeles and San Francisco.

THERE HAVE BEEN so many upsets in the matter of predictions coming through this year that this may be another one.

Here it goes. Don't bet too much that George Raft and Virginia Pine will be married in the near future.

And take the short end that George Raft will either reconcile with his present wife or remain a bachelor.

Don't say we didn't tell you.

IN 1932 BOB BURNS first gave an audition for a Los Angeles radio station. He never heard anything from it until recently while he was making The Big Broadcast of 1937. One of the station executives sent him their audition "report card" which read: "Burns, Robert. Sings, plays guitar and ad libs. Fair hill billy, corn fed type. Has 'gawkin' around' idea. Might have possibilities." Might. Incidentally, of his "Paw," Bob Burns says: "He knew only two tunes—one was 'Dixie' and the other wasn't." (Don't miss the story Bob tells on himself—on page 34.)

THINGS ARE coming to a pretty pass when the sanctity of the home is thus threatened by a brazen invitation to wake up with Robert Taylor!

Advertisement in a Los Angeles newspaper: "Extra! Open your eyes with a first peep at Robert Taylor . . . Special Breakfast Show . . . Starts at 7 a. m. Coffee and Doughnuts. A photograph of Robert Taylor and complete showing of His Brother's Wife before 9 a. m., all for 30 cents."

CLAUDETTE COLBERT tells me that she thinks girls who grow up in a family where there are no boys usually marry younger than girls who have grown up with brothers. For example, there was her high school chum,

Gracie Allen takes advantage of the fact that it's still leap year—by leaping at unwilling-to-be-leaped at Jack Benny. They're working together in The Big Broadcast of 1937

Katharine, who shortly after she graduated gave up a promising career as a pianist to marry. "But when I was that age men were never as glamorous or as appealing to me. You see, my brother Charles, used to have many annoying habits which sort of made me immune. One was walking around the house in his underwear with a straw hat clamped down on his head to keep his hair from curling. That's just one of the reasons why at sweet

A stubborn donkey versus Katharine Hepburn, leads Katie to reflect that you can lead a donkey into water, but you can't do much with him when he decides to sit down in midstream. This was snapped while they were trying to film Portrait of a Rebel ① Rich red blood, necessary to properly build up every part of the body, is especially promoted by the easily absorbed iron in this new discovery.

② A healthy digestion which gets ALL the good out of your food requires an adequate supply of Vitamin B. This new discovery supplies this precious element.

③ Normal, regular elimination to remove poisons and thereby promote health and growth requires adequate Vitamin B. This is the third purpose.

Posed by professional models

NEW DISCOVERY GIVES THOUSANDS NORMAL CURVES—in a few weeks!

SKINNY, rundown men and women now have a marvelous new triple-acting treatment that has put pounds of solid, naturally attractive flesh on thousands who never could gain before. Not only has this new discovery filled out broomstick limbs and washboard breasts to naturally good-looking curves, but it has also brought normally clear skin, freedom from indigestion and constipation, new pep and popularity.

Doctors now know that the real reason why many find it hard to gain weight is they do not get enough digestion-strengthening Vitamin B and blood-building iron in their food. Now with this new discovery which combines these two vital elements in little concentrated tablets, hosts of people have put on pounds of firm flesh, normal curves—in a very short time.

7 times more powerful

This amazing new product, Ironized Yeast, is made from special imported cultured ale yeast, the richest known source of Vitamin B. By a new process this special yeast is concentrated 7 times—made 7 times more powerful. Then it is combined with 3 kinds of iron, pasteurized whole yeast and other valuable ingredients in pleasant little tablets.

If you, too, need Vitamin B and iron to build you up, get these new Ironized Yeast tablets from your druggist at once. Day after day, as you take them, watch skinny limbs and flat chest round out to normal attractiveness, skin clear to natural beauty—you're an entirely new person.

Money-back guarantee

No matter how skinny and rundown you may be from lack of enough Vitamin B and iron, these marvelous new Ironized Yeast tablets should build you up in a few weeks as they have thousands. If not delighted with results of first package, money back instantly.

Today's Gossip

sixteen I never thought much of the breed!"

AT A RECENT national broadcast starring Jeanette MacDonald she proved to be, in several cute instances, the delightful, warm, human, youthful person we know in Hollywood as "the new Jeanette MacDonald." (She used to be pretty prim and staid, you know.) At the broadcast, when many a star would have been putting her most elegant foot forward, Jeanette arrived in a simple white sport frock with a gay red and green fishnet kerchief knotted carelessly around her neck. At the end of her first long scene when many another would have stepped back to take a dignified bow, Jeanette sank down in a chair, sprawling arms and legs, mopped her brow and uttered an unmistakable "Whew!"

Again when Cecil B. De Mille, director of the program, was telling the radio audience how he had once refused to give Jeanette a part in a picture because he didn't think she had "anything," Jeanette looked across the mike at him and made a foolish little-girl face, wrinkling her nose and sticking out her tongue—the kind of face for which her mother would undoubtedly have spanked her twenty years ago. In both instances the visual audience was delighted and fluttered in its seat. But the thing that gave her fans the greatest kick was when Jeanette, in the midst of a scene, quite unconsciously removed her glasses and wiped them on the flawless white of her skirt! It was the gamin in her coming out. While the audience laughed the glamorous star of Lubitsch bedroom-scene fame blushed a rosy red!

RELATIVES OF THE STARS seldom ever attain a place on the screen for themselves, though many of them try. To-wit, the brothers of Joan Crawford, James Cagney, Gene Raymond; Jack Oakie's mother, ditto Ida Lupino's, etc., etc. However, jobs are assured them in the production end of pictures. Norma Shearer's clever brother, Douglas, is head of the sound department at M-G-M. Jean Parker's brother-by-adoption is in the publicity department at the same studio. Hal (Crawford) Le Seur is also there now. Ginger Rogers' mother runs a Charm School at RKO. Gladys Swarthout's husband gets paid for technical advice on her pictures at Paramount. The latest to join this group is Shirley Temple's oldest brother, who has been made an assistant director (to Dave Butler, who has megaphoned a number of Temple pictures) at Twentieth Century-Fox.

Bette Davis is one of the few stars who has never tried to pull strings for any of her family—and not even for her husband, Harmon Nelson. Her sister, Barbara (who is cute, too!), is working at the Stetson Shop on Hollywood Boulevard.

OVERHEARD ON The Plainsman set—and who says Gary Cooper hasn't a sense of humor? Lunch is called and Gary turns to his ever-present Man Thursday, Cracker Henderson: "Where is my horse, Cracker? Are the tires pumped up?" Whereupon Cracker hauls a bicycle out of its hiding place, and Wild Bill Hickok goes galloping off to his dressing room.

ROCHELLE HUDSON is one of the few stars who really means it when she says she hates being in pictures. She became an actress, not because she wanted to, but because acting provided a way of making a living at a time when the family cupboard was most bare. Now, still in her very early twenties, she dreams only of the day when she may retire. And that to her means marrying and settling down. A lot of suitors have laid their gifts at her feet—most recently the wealthy Quentin Smith, of Chicago—but to date Rochelle hasn't met the one love for her. And she doesn't think Hollywood is the place to look, either. "There are so few attractive men here, except actors, and I don't think I'd ever want to marry an actor. They too self-centered."

Which reminds me that Alice Faye is another girl who is discouraged about the prospects of finding a happy marriage in Hollywood. For two years now she has been asking Madame Wanda, the seer at the Assistance League Tea Room to tell her when she would meet and marry the man, and still Madame Wanda insists that it won't be until 1938. "It's sort of discouraging," says Alice, "because everytime I meet someone I think I might like, I remember what Madame Wanda said, and say to myself, 'No, sorry, but this can't be the fellow, my dear. I don't meet him for two more years.'"

YOU CAN DEFINITELY check off that so-called romance between Cary Grant and Mary Brian. Neither ever did have any idea of marrying. Now Cary is seen with Sonja Henie, the Olympic champion skater, as a once-in-a-while pal.

RECENTLY FIFTEEN husky Idaho lumberjacks brought to Hollywood from the lumber country for Come and Get It, descended on Director Howard Hawkes, en masse. Fifteen husky six-footers petulantly asking for their rights—regular make-up tables, dressing rooms and stand-ins no less. All stars had them, they said! They had read about it in the movie magazines they had at their lumber camps!

OF ALL THE RIDICULUM! Dick Powell recently bumped into a roadster with an Ohio license, and was politely offering to pay its pretty driver for the damages when she recognized him and said, "Don't do that, Mr. Powell. Just scratch your name on the crumpled fender and I'll keep it as a souvenir."

WE ARE AS sick and tired as you are of the reams printed and reprinted about Hollywood diets and reducing exercises, but here is a stunt for reducing in spots that really deserves space. It's contributed by Arline Judge, and she's a good walking advertisement for it herself. But first there's a prelude. First you have to drop in at the nearest gasoline station and get that nice fellow who always gives your windshield an extra wipe to donate an old tire tube. Then, when you get the tube home, split it all the way around. Now put on a rubber bathing suit, and wrap the tubing around you to cover the fatty role wherever it may be.

Tie it securely around you with a rope or belt. Now cut yourself a hunk of clothesline, and jump rope. Jump ten or fifteen minutes every day and you'll soon lose inches where you want to lose them. The explanation is that you will perspire most heavily where the tube surrounds you. You can also use the same method on fat upper arms or thighs.

Of course you'll look silly, like a half-dressed underseas diver, and your family will bore you with all sorts of pun attempts—"Well, Susie it's time to retire, isn't it?" for example—but what do you care. For beauty's sake you can put up with this tirade. Or is this already becoming tiring?

STRANGE OLD PLACE is this Hollywood.

A representative of a famous night club in New York came to Hollywood to select a group of Hollywood girls famed for their beauty, grace, dancing ability and all else, winners to receive contracts to appear at this famous club for an extended engagement.

The contest was held, the cinema's fairest extra girls competed and eventually 16 were selected with great acclaim.

Of the 16 selected and now in New York, four had been in the chorus of the aforesaid night club for many months.

They left to crash Hollywood and pictures!

THINGS THAT COULD only happen in Hollywood: When Dorothy Lamour was summoned to Hollywood to act in The Jungle Princess, she wired ahead for a luxurious apartment, and to have it all furnished in white, modernistic style, and bought an entire new wardrobe to wear against this setting. But, arriving here, she was whisked to location in the wilderness where all she wore was a Malay sarong, and where she lived in a tent. Finishing the film she had to rush back to New York; so that white modernistic apartment is now "that Hollywood apartment of mine which I never saw."

SIMONE SIMON is to do the Gaynor-famous rôle in a remake of Seventh Heaven, with Don Ameche. Janet Gaynor says: "Naturally I feel a little envious that someone else is to make my favorite picture but as long as someone else is to do it, I am glad that someone is Simone. It is nice that a part of a French girl will be played by a real French girl for a change."

JAN KIEPURA, the tenor who blasted you out of the theatre with the volume of his voice in Give Us This Night, will not return to Paramount to make the other picture he contracted to do.

Jan will not even return to America. He is building his own studios in Poland, is going to produce, direct, star and everything including financing.

THINGS THAT ANNOY US—such obvious bids for publicity as: Mary Carlisle's having lunch with a lion in the studio commissary. Quoted from a publicity release: "The lion's name was Bessie and she is reputed to be the great-great-granddaughter of M-G-M's lion, Leo. Bessie lapped milk, consumed ice cream and then finished off a plate of Irish stew. Then with her playful companion on a leash Mary made a tour of the studio." So which!

Betty Furness and her hats come under the same cat-egory. Those vegetable-bedecked creations, reputed to be the garden work of Designer Bernard Newman.

And, incidentally, what happened to Jean Harlow's book, Today is Tonight about which so many fan magazine articles were written, a whole year ago.

RECALLING SOME interesting things she learned about fans in England, Mary Brian points out that in London she often had a group of ten or twelve escorting her around all evening. They would be waiting for her at the stagedoor of Charlot's Revue. As she would get into her cab, they would hop on their bicycles, and like the tortoise who always beats the hare, they would beat her to her hotel to be on hand for further greetings as she drove up. They would still be there when she came out again a little later, perhaps en route to a night club. The ringleader would overhear her giving her destination to the driver, and off they would pedal, to be at the night club when she got there. And so it went, on and on, into the wee sma' hours when she went home. "A nuisance? Not a bit!" Mary says. "They never mob you or tear at you or make silly requests like American fans sometimes do. Their attentions are really the greatest compliment a celebrity can have. Because they like you they just want to see you and be with you as much as possible. Every American actor or actress who has gone to London has experienced the same thing!"

What are the 8 "MUSTS" doctors demand of a laxative?

YOUR DOCTOR doesn't mince words. He says, emphatically, that a good laxative should meet 8 specific requirements. These requirements are listed below for your protection, Please read them carefully:

The doctor says your laxative should be: Dependable . . . Mild . . . Thorough . . . Time-tested.

The doctor says your laxative should not: Over-act . . . Form a habit . . . Cause stomach pains . . . Nauseate, or upset the digestion.

And Ex-Lax meets every specification . . . Ex-Lax answers the doctor's requirements for a laxative at every single point.

Trust the doctor's judgment when next you need a laxative. Don't flirt with trouble in the form of harsh, nasty-tasting cathartics. Start using Ex-Lax—and you'll find new comfort, mildness and complete relief. Find out for yourself the advantages that have made Ex-Lax the world's largest-selling laxative. Discover the real reasons why Ex-Lax has been used in doctors' families, and in millions of other homes, for over 30 years.

Ex-Lax tastes like delicious chocolate. Children take it readily. And it's just as gentle, just as effective, for them as it is for you. At all drug stores in economical 10c and 25c sizes.

ALICE WHITE Film Star

Worm's-Eye View of Nelson Eddy

ways. Watching Dr. Lippé sitting there, laughing up at his best friend and star pupil, I often wondered what he was thinking of this unforeseen outcome of his years of patient coaching.

During one such scene, I heard a glorious soprano voice emanating from the upstairs region, singing "Sweet Mystery of Life." Seeing my expression, Nelson explained proudly,

"That's Mother. Didn't you know she was with Gilbert and Sullivan?"

No, I didn't know, but maybe that explains a lot. Certainly Isabelle Eddy, his mother, explains a great number of things in Nelson. His tenacity, his great moral courage, his complete faith in the power of thought, his great understanding of humanity. For here is a woman who has met great obstacles with a smile, sacrificing everything to her son's talent—but what a glorious reward!

THERE has been much gossip in Hollywood as to whether or not Nelson has an Oedipus complex (as usual, the Greeks have a word for "mother-complex"). As usual, the comments are made by people who do not know of the beautiful understanding that exists between these two. They are not merely mother and son, but two dear friends who admire and respect one another.

Nelson is very demonstrative in his affection for his attractive red-haired mother and gives an inkling of what a perfect husband he'll be. He kisses her often and earnestly—not little filial pecks, but huge hearty smacks. And if she seems a bit down, he'll say, "Go buy yourself some hats, Muz." Mighty understanding for a bachelor, what? To her, "Nelse" is still her little boy, of whom she's inordinately proud.

STRANGE, but in spite of all Nelson has — youth, looks, voice, charm, money, success—he doesn't seem really happy. As a matter of fact, at times he seems quite bored. I remember once he made all arrangements for a European trip and was quite keen on it for a day or two. But at the last minute he lost all interest and cancelled reservations. Just wasn't interested enough to make the effort. He seems dormant somehow—not fully awakened emotionally.

He goes out socially very little, despite numerous invitations, and entertains less. Is a marvellous host, however: gay, carefree, and witty. Doesn't care for swank of any sort, but like a little boy, is a bit impressed with it in others. But personally, he's not having any. Their menáge is simple. One servant, two cars, one dog.

A few incidents showing his generosity of spirit come to my mind. One morning he was busily practising with Ted Paxson, his accompanist. The bell rang and Nelson, being nearest the door, opened it, music in hand, still singing. It was a chap who for some time had been trying to secure the place as Nelson's stand-in. Eddy already had one and had told this chap so in a letter, but here he was anyway. Although Nelson obviously could not give him the desired post, he invited him in, entertained him for two hours, sang for him and discussed music.

Then the first time he heard Igor Gorin sing, he came home and said, "That guy starts where I leave off." This of another baritone under contract to his own studio, mind you! Not much like the professional jealousy that's supposed to exist among opera singers, eh?

REGARDING his love life, I can only say it's about like that of any young attractive bachelor. No more, no less. I suppose you've all read about his trouble with perspiring, aspiring females following him about? I feel I must rise to his defense here.

Just look at it from his viewpoint: finishing a picture where he has probably worked harder than many a day-laborer, rising in the cold gray dawn, going to work without any breakfast, often working late in the evening. Then to bed. Same program has been followed every day for months. Rushing around to get ready to go on concert tour (from January to May, covering the entire United States.) Continually recalled by the studio for retakes at the last moment. Final frenzied arrangements with his concert manager, ditto with radio sponsors.

So picture this harried young man, at last shoving off for far places, finding the ubiquitous adoring female on his train, on his trail, on his plane, at his broadcasting station, at his hotel—well, in his hair.

I'm sure you'll be as surprised as I was at the lengths to which some of these gaga-gals go.

F'r instance, a few that haven't reached

If there is anything that makes a prettier picture than a man with a horse he loves, we've never seen it. Meet Ross Alexander and Sailor Boy the press: while on tour, he and his accompanist noticed the same young girl following them from city to city, all over the country. She finally had our dignified Nelson ignominiously running down the main streets of various towns, hat in hand, coat waving in the breeze, trying to reach the haven of a cab or a railway station.

This went on for some months. He thought his "sleeper-jumps" would discourage her. How little he knows of the questing female! He finally was forced to hire detectives. They ascertained that she was a clever business girl, of good family and of good standing in her community, and this emotional outbreak over Nelson was entirely unprecedented. He tried talking to her, to help her reach an understanding of herself—to no avail.

Finally, he reached New York, still being pursued. He went on the air that night, having had no time for rehearsal and physically dog-tired. Five minutes before his first number, a messenger arrived with a letter from the girl saying that when the first note of his first song came over the air she was going to kill herself in such and such a room at a nearby hotel. The program was hastily revised while Nelson and some friends dashed over to the hotel. Sure enough, the stage was all set. For the girl's sake, there was no recourse but to turn her over to the police.

THEN another experience of this sort—this really is a honey. The cook of one of our Prominent People here in Hollywood got a yen for Eddy. The first inkling of her feeling came when Nelson and his mother began receiving notes, half in French, half in English, remarking upon their menus of each meal. The girl's notes went on to say that she was a far better cook than the one the Eddys had, and she didn't like the looks of the food they were eating. They should discharge this person, and really get a good cook—herself, for instance. Nelson and his mother came to the conclusion that the letter writer must be peering in windows while they ate, for she gave minute descriptions of their dinners. A most unpleasant sensation, don't you think? When they ignored these notes, the mood of the sender changed and her letters became increasingly bitter and threatening. They still ignored them. Coming home from the movies one night with his mother, they found a nice-looking young woman waiting for them in front of their house. Tall, erect, becomingly dressed, and with a charming manner. In halting English, she told her story in a convincing manner:

ACCORDING to her, she had been the mistress of a very famous baritone in the East. He had thrown her aside like that worn-out glove we hear so much about. Hearing Nelson on the radio, she heard him sing the same songs her lover once sang (naturally, all baritones sing the same songs, more or less), so she knew that her lover was hiring and paying Nelson to sing these songs on the radio to torture her. And she couldn't stand it any more, and must kill Nelson and his mother.

They tried to talk to the unfortunate girl, but to no avail. She bombarded them with endless letters—often incoherent and heart-breaking, but nevertheless plainly threatening.

Finally, it was necessary to call for help. In court, she told the judge the same strange story of persecution, and was sent to the psychopathic ward. It pained both Mrs. Eddy and Nelson extremely to do this. After a few months, they were pleased to give their permission for the girl's release, provided she would go back home. Her home was in an eastern state. She was released with the proviso that she would not write any more letters, or attempt to see Nelson. She promised. She was released and put on the train. She immediately started writing letters.

But, her hatred had now turned to love and all would be forgiven if Nelson would do a simple little thing like marrying her. She arrived at her home, probably laid low with writer's cramp, but continued her writing. In one letter, she told him about hearing a Hollywood gossip columnist over the air, telling about Nelson's social doings with the glamour girls, and she told him not to fear, that she would never believe such silly stuff. She knew he was true to her and he was paying that man to say those things to test the strength of her love.

Then the last I heard, she said she was getting tired of this waiting around and would expect him on the 2:15 the following Tuesday, and he'd better be there. For him please not to worry about money. She'd found a place where they both could room and board for $12 a week, and she imagined he could afford that by now. Again I ask, can you blame him?

So the next time you read about Nelson Eddy fleeing the females, remember that the foregoing incidents are but a few that I know are factual. What'll the poor guy do—marry in self-defense?

JACK DUNN, Sonja Henie's skating partner, took one look at his recent screen test and reached for his ice skates.

"It's awful!" he moaned. "Look at me! Listen to that voice! If I didn't know it was my own mug, I'd think it was Frankenstein's sick brother! I'm going to Alaska!"

But it couldn't have been quite that bad, because Universal came through with a nice contract for the guy. And they're not foolish.

BETTE DAVIS had the laugh on all and sundry the day she turned waitress for the Assistance League tea room.

Watching carefully, as usual, for the various faux pas naturally expected of amateur service, the presiding hostess was amazed at the precision of the Davis technique.

Without a single superfluous motion, Bette served to the right and removed from the left. Butter dishes and water glasses were replenished unobtrusively. In fact, the entire performance was technically correct in every detail.

After it was over, the hostess all but took Bette on her lap while she gasped her admiration and approval of the excellent service.

"Think nothing of it!" Bette smiled. "I worked my way through college waiting on table. And, believe me, four long years of dealing them off the arm isn't forgotten in a hurry!"

A COUPLE of M-G-M sound men have red faces that won't fade back to normal for a good many days.

Past masters at the wireless dot-and-dash system, the boys evolved the idea of signalling one another by whistling in code. It was a novel stunt and developed to the point where they were carrying on entire conversations without any of the innocent bystanders knowing from nothing.

On the set, where Eleanor Powell was rehearsing a dance routine, one of the boys started to whistle out a story he'd heard the night before.

Right in the middle of it, the prancing Powell stopped her hoofing, puckered up her lips and whistled out: "SOS!" just as plain!

And that was the end of what might have been a good story. Or maybe Eleanor had heard it before?

ANNE SHIRLEY and Phyllis Fraser planned a vacation trip to Catalina and figured their finances to such a fine point that they stepped off the boat, on the return trip, with exactly thirty cents (and a healthy appetite) between them.

Using one nickel for a necessary telephone call, the girls hied themselves to the nearest sandwich stand and ordered two hamburgers and a brace of root beers. Waiting for the order, they counted their money again. Business of fast thinking: two hamburgers, 20 cents; two root beers, 10 cents. 20 and 10 is 30. And thirty from two bits is . . .

"Please . . ." Ann said hurriedly, with a winsome smile to the counter man and a gentle, but definite, kick in the shins for Phyllis. "I guess I'd rather not have a hamburger, after all. In fact, I guess neither of us would really care for a hamburger . . ."

"Er . . . no," Phyllis added her regret to Anne's. "No hamburger, please. Just . . . uh, make mine . . . uh . . .", a swift, surreptitious peek at the right hand side of the bill-of-fare, "a hot dog!" they announced in unison.

And the budget was saved. With a nickel over!

THREE years ago, when Johnny Downs was making personal appearances in vaudeville, an over-active press agent evolved the idea of having a local bank present Johnny with a two-dollar bank deposit.

It made a nice little item in the papers and, feeling that it was really a good idea, Johnny put seventy-three dollars with it, making a grand total of seventy-five smackers that could be depended upon to draw the New Orleans rate of interest up until he might get around that way again to collect.

The other day, Johnny received a letter bearing a New Orleans post mark. In it was a check for five dollars and sixty-two cents and a brief bit of information advising him that the bank had busted, they were paying off the small depositors according to the accepted percentage, and . . . that's all there was, there wasn't any more!

CECILIA PARKER will give no quarter to her opponents in the current hectic debate, to-wit and viz.: that New York men have it all over the Hollywood boys.

To back up her opinion, Cecilia lists five points in favor of our young men:

They don't try to impress you with their importance.

They are gentlemen, good companions and considerate.

They don't pretend to know everything.

They bring you home safely from a "date," and at a reasonable hour.

They are more natural, poised and, above all, they have a swell sense of humor.

Constipation Relief

THE BEST CORRECTIVE IS ALL-VEGETABLE

by Elizabeth McKenna

DO YOU want to know what's the best and safest help for a system that has gone sluggish, and needs assistance in throwing off its food-wastes?

Hundreds of thousands of women swear by NR Tablets (Nature's Remedy). Because they have had proof again and again —not only themselves, but for every member of their families —that this pure, all-vegetable corrective is just right for stimulating clogged, sluggish bowels to an easy, normal movement that flushes away dangerous waste poisons.

Nature's Remedy is so sensible. It is entirely different from other laxatives, being purely vegetable. You'll notice the amazing difference in its action the first time you try it. So gentle and easy—yet so very thorough and invigorating. This is because NR is made up of a perfect blend of the most effective vegetable laxatives. NR is a corrective, a conditioner that aids in training the bowels to normal, regular functioning.

Try this stand-by of millions tonight. See if you don't wake up tomorrow morning feeling more refreshed—more "fit"—more alive and vigorous, than you have felt in a long while. You can try NR at small expense—25 doses in the handy tin only 25 cents—at all druggists.

The Great Ginger Rogers Hoax!

already had signed a contract. P. P. S.: The producer isn't speaking to her yet.

And there was the one she pulled on long-suffering Fred Astaire in their latest picture, Swing Time. Ginger disguised herself in blackface and persuaded one of the girls in the Harlem chorus to let her take her place. She gummed up all the numbers, fell over her own feet, drove Fred Astaire and Hermes Pan, the dance director, to the verge of insanity—and then wiped off the sepia grease paint and laughed—and laughed—and laughed.

THE great Queen Elizabeth hoax, will probably go down in Hollywood history as the most successful practical joke ever perpetrated in a studio.

RKO was losing its collective mind trying to find the ideal actress for the rôle of Queen Elizabeth in Katy Hepburn's Mary of Scotland. Hundreds of aspirants had been tested, thousands of pictures of would-be Elizabeths flooded Pandro Berman's mail.

One day there arrived a photograph which "had something." Pan Berman, who is not only an unusually smart producer but also an unusually keen judge of potential talent, took one look at that picture and was instantly impressed.

He showed it to his wife; he showed it to a score of friends.

"There," said he, "is the ideal Elizabeth. That girl looks the part."

Several days later, he showed it to a friend of Ginger's—and the friend started laughing. "It's Ginger Rogers. She wore that costume to a masquerade about a year ago!"

Pan Berman has some reputation as a practical joker himself, so he said nothing to Ginger but vowed that he would turn the tables. And his intention filtered eventually to Ginger.

A FEW weeks later, with "Queen Elizabeth" still a nebulous quantity, Director George Cukor came to Pan Berman in great excitement.

"Listen," said he, "Lady Ainsley's in town!"

"Who?" demanded Berman.

"LADY AINSLEY!" quoth Cukor, his voice vibrant with reverence.

"And who the h—is Lady Ainsley?"

"My God, man! Surely you've heard of Lady Ainsley," exclaimed Cukor, his voice dripping amazement and reproach. "Why Lady Ainsley is one of England's greatest tragediennes—one of the greatest artistes of the European stage. She's a direct descendant of Queen Elizabeth! She's terrific!"

"It's funny I've never heard of her," Berman admitted, somewhat shamefacedly. "I thought I knew every great European star, by name, at least."

Cukor was aghast.

"You're never heard of Lady Ainsley!" he accused.

Berman, against his better judgment, began to be decidedly uncomfortable. "Well . . ." he said.

"What an Elizabeth . . . what an Elizabeth!" mused Cukor, and Pandro Ber-

Now that the frost is about to descend on the pumpkin, a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of such fall sports as riding. And so Kent Taylor takes Tala Birell out to admire Red Rascal, a blue ribbon horse that is beautiful, but far from dumb man, dazzled by the exploitation possibilities of having a direct descendant of the Virgin Queen in the cast, as well as by the director's enthusiasm, said, "Why don't you give her a test?"

"I doubt if we could interest her," Cukor admitted ruefully, "but I'll try."

A few days passed and Cukor called Berman. His voice was ecstatic. He announced that he had made a test of Lady Ainsley. Would Mr. Berman come to Projection Room B and see it? Mr. Berman would!

And on the screen, clad in figured satins and velvets, appeared a personality so dominant that Pandro Berman gasped. Her face was regal and its expression hinted of instinctive cruelty. Her voice, low-pitched and dramatic, throbbed with emotional strength. Her hair, piled high in the fashion of the sixteenth century, lifted from a broad, intellectual forehead. It was Queen Elizabeth come to life.

"She is terrific!" whispered the producer. "Why haven't I heard of her before? Can we sign her?"

But there, it seemed, was the difficulty. George Cukor was apprehensive and evasive. Lady Ainsley didn't think much of pictures. Lady Ainsley . . . the Ainsley millions, you know. Lady Ainsley was here on a vacation . . .

Now Pandro S. Berman, one of the youngest major producers in screen history, didn't reach his position of power by admitting defeat so easily.

"Where is she staying?" he demanded.

Cukor explained that the great English star was a house guest, incognito, at Pickfair. Obviously one shouldn't intrude upon her there.

"Hasn't she an agent?"

"I'm not sure, but it seems to me I heard that Harry Edington is handling her."

"I'll call Edington," said Berman.

But he didn't call Edington until that afternoon and a certain red-haired minx had already enlisted Hollywood's premier agent in her services by then.

Edington was non-committal. He doubted . . . he hedged . . . he hummed . . . he hawed. . . .

A week passed—a week of determined effort and annoying frustration on the part of Mr. Berman; a week of delirious, ecstatic joy on the part of Ginger Rogers, alias Lady Ainsley, whose disguise had been so perfect that not one person in the studio, except the director who was a party to her plot, had recognized her.

And then, suddenly, the gag was exploded by a newspaper columnist. How she traced the elusive clues, how she solved the mystery, Ginger has never learned, but there, in her column, was the tip-off:

"What red-haired star is playing a gigantic practical joke on what producer by posing as a great foreign actress?"

Pandro Berman had been victimized by Ginger before. Hastily glancing over the facts, he recognized her technique. And Ginger realized the jig was up.

That afternoon, at the races, she met Pan Berman.

"Howdoyoudo," said she in her best English accent.

"Lady Ainsley, I believe," answered Berman with a slight bow.

And again the Roger's chortle, starting convulsively below the diaphragm, swelled to the shriek of a typhoon.

Which, all in all, explains why any veteran Hollywoodite, confronted by a new face, knows instinctively that he is face to face with a stranger—or with Ginger Rogers.

And in This Corner!

Clark spars with Harvey Parry, his trainer and confidant, in the canvas-enclosed ring in full dress and there was a crowd of extras and other studio workers looking on, wondering if he could take it. He could! He called to a newsboy who stood gazing at him with worship in his eyes.

"Will you take those rocks away for me? I'd do it myself if I weren't in soup and fish!"

Eagerly the boy went to work, and when the last rock was removed, Gable handed him a five dollar bill.

"Gee, Mister Gable," said the boy, "I ain't got change for that!"

"No?" grinned Gable, "Well, old pal, who said anything about change? Run along and buy yourself something—and thanks!"

"No, Mister Gable, I'll take it home to Ma. She needs it . . . bad! Gee, you're a swell guy!"

Clark spoke. "Harvey, I've seen the time when five dollars looked like Andy Mellon's millions to me."

IN ORDER to reduce Gable's weight, Parry placed him on a rigid diet. Gable's usual lunch was three huge ham-and-cheese sandwiches on rye, a quart of milk and half an apple pie. One day Parry was late arriving on the set and found Gable ready to partake of his heavy usual repast. Without a word, Parry picked up the sandwiches, pie and milk and passed them around to the workmen eating near.

"Your usual lunch will be here any minute, Clark. I ordered it for you!"

"Okay, teacher, you win!" grinned Gable. And just as eagerly consumed the fruit salad, whole wheat bread and pint of milk.

GABLE still is just a big, husky kid, according to Parry. Clark decided to "doll up" the decrepit old Ford that Carole Lombard had given him—for a joke. Parry took him to a garage which specialized in "hopping up" Ford cars. Gable had a new high speed engine put in the car and every new gadget the garage man could supply.

When it was finished, it had cost him more than a new, 1936 Ford would have cost, but he was as pleased as any boy. When he learned that we had only one car, and that my wife had to take me to the studio each morning and call for me at night, he turned the Ford over to me. When it went haywire, he insisted on driving me home in his Dusenberg, although it took him miles out of his way. Often he had dinner with us. Once he said, "Harvey, I envy you. You can get away from things and people and relax. There are few places I can. I go hunting or fishing every time I can get away. Not just to kill things, but so that I can be myself. Why, over in Arizona where I hunt deer, they don't even know I'm in movies. I'm just plain old Bill Gable, one of the boys!"

Gable, famous movie star, earning a weekly salary in four figures, able to afford a mansion in Bel-Air, envying a Hollywood "stunt" man!

PARRY and a fellow "stunt" man, Duke Green, were on location with Gable on Call of the Wild. Gable recognized Green as the owner of a steak house he had frequented in his extra days. He approached Duke.

"Didn't you once have a steak place in Hollywood—and don't you remember me as one of your customers?"

"Sure I do," said Duke. "But you are a big shot now and I didn't want to remind you of those days!"

"Don't think I've forgotten them. I used to come into your place and fill up on steak—when I had the price. I knew that if I had to, I could keep going for three or four days on one good steak dinner—and a lot of times I did. Tonight I'm buying you the best steak in this man's town, just for old time's sake!"

CLARK'S unintentional knock-out of Allen Pomeroy, the former inter-collegiate boxing champion, made the headlines. Many fans believed it to be merely a publicity stunt to prove that Gable was really the he-man he was supposed to be. The manager of the Elks' Convention offered him $50,000 to box Max Baer four rounds during the Elks' meeting in Los Angeles. Many different stories have been printed about that unfortunate incident but here's how it really happened:

"When Pomeroy reported for work as Gable's ring opponent," says Parry, "Gable remembered that they both had carried spears in a show, long ago. They became friendly and laughed over old times. The much publicized knock-out happened this way: For the first scene of the fight sequences, Gable and Pomeroy were supposed merely to go through a routine of careful sparring, which we had rehearsed time after time. The director told them both that when they had finished it, he would call 'Cut' and they were to stop.

"But, as they sparred lightly, it looked so good that the director decided to let them go on. They ended the routine and did not get word to stop—and neither knew quite what to do! As men will, in the heat of a ring battle, they both became confused and excited. Both began to slug, and Gable does not realize how terribly hard he can hit. They started hard right swings and Gable's landed first, just back of Pomeroy's left ear. It was such a hard blow that Pomeroy's body did a pinwheel, his face striking the canvas in the exact spot where his right foot previously had been. It was one of the hardest blows I ever saw in any ring!

"Pomeroy went out like a light. Gable was the most contrite man I ever saw. He helped carry Pomeroy to his corner and did not find words to tell how sorry he was that it happened. When Pomeroy at last came to, Gable insisted that work stop for the day. That night he telephoned Allen twice to ask how he was. Clark was thoroughly disgusted with the resultant publicity given the unfortunate incident!

"To say that Gable knocked out a friend just for the sake of publicity is absolutely untrue!

"ONCE, during rehearsals, Pomeroy uncorked a hard blow which we believed had broken some of Gable's ribs. Gable insisted that nothing be said about it to the studio, for fear Allen and I would be reprimanded. We slipped secretly out to a hospital and had an X-ray taken which proved that no ribs were broken. But Gable suffered intense pain for days."

And there you have a picture of the Clark Gable you have never known, the eternal boy, the regular fellow who remembers his lean years and his old time pals. The Gable whom Hollywood has not spoiled.

"Once during road work," says Parry, "I took Gable over into the Toluca Lake district where many movie stars live. He saw Dick Powell's home, Bing Crosby's, Andy Devine's and others for the first time. He insisted that we see them all. Imagine Gable, biggest of them all, wanting to see the homes of the movie stars, just like any tourist! That proves to you, doesn't it, just what sort of fellow Gable really is?"

Eleanor Powell's Musical Diary!

a public appearance. But she didn't run away. She was twelve now . . . much too big a girl to show her fear.

"BLACK BOTTOM!" Does anyone remember it? Most people turned in their records of that jazzy selection toward the end of 1927. But Eleanor Powell still has hers. It's the tune to which she won her first contest. She'd been lent to Benny Davis' night club in Atlantic City that night by Edwards; and she found the contest scheduled for the evening. They let her enter for a joke . . . because she had pretty stiff competition. All of Benny Davis' professional entertainers were out for the prize that night. It consisted of two little cardboard squares that would entitle the winners to see the Dempsey-Carpentier boxing match after the show.

Everybody was black bottoming as fast as they could! Eleanor hadn't black bottomed before, and she saw no way to be different than to do it as slowly as she could. She brought the house down; and rated the tickets. A waiter talked her out of the proceeds of slow black bottoming five minutes. "You don't want to see a brawl, kid," he told her, and Eleanor said that of course she didn't. After she had given over the tickets she learned that they were worth something in the neighborhood of a hundred dollars . . . and the Powells could have used a hundred dollars nicely at that time.

"Black Bottom" means more than the winning of a contest to Eleanor. It is a little reminder to keep her wits about her in the give and take of show business.

She acquired a manager after that . . . and a confidant as well . . . all in the person of Billy Grady. He's casting director at M-G-M now . . .but he was on the other side of the fence in those days; selling talent to other casting directors. He was the first person to see potentialities for bigness in Eleanor Powell. And her only superstition centers around the little ivory turtle he gave her when she put herself in his hands. She has always carried it. And, she says, it has never failed her.

IT WAS Billy Grady who made Eleanor take up tap dancing. It was Jack Donahue, to whose school she went, who made her keep it up. Strange as it appears, Eleanor couldn't get the hang of tapping out the rhythm of music at first. She went home and cried and decided she'd have to give up being a dancer. Jack Donahue called her up and made her come back. At the end of her third lesson, she was tapping. At the eighth, she was being used as an object lesson for the class. Ten lessons graduated her . . . and twenty dollars is the sum total of her investment in the kind of dancing that brought her to Hollywood and world-wide fame!

Next in the musical sequence of Eleanor Powell's life you hear the hit melodies of Follow Thru, the first show in which she appeared. She had to wait a long time for that engagement. Billy Grady wouldn't let her accept other offers that had come pouring in, because they didn't give her a chance to do anything but dance.

"Get typed as a hoofer, and you stay a hoofer," he warned her. Eleanor listened . . . obeyed . . . and was rewarded. Follow Thru played for a year and a half. And Eleanor Powell, as one of the principals, was in demand on Broadway.

Fine and Dandy . . . Hot Cha . . . The Varieties . . . Scandals . . . Crazy Quilt . . . who remembers their hit tunes now? The answer is . . . Eleanor Powell. Tunes that were played in night clubs and whistled in streets and then forgotten, are still carefully cherished in her library. She keeps them . . . the diary of her career on Broadway. It was in this interim that she lost her manager. Billy Grady went out to Hollywood to take up the work of casting M-G-M's pictures.

SHE came to Hollywood without the fanfare of publicity. Metro intended giving her only a supporting part in Broadway Melody. She was considered a comedienne dancer; not leading lady material. But when Eleanor took her test, the camera picked up something she hadn't known she had . . . romantic appeal. That was Hollywood's first gift to Eleanor . . . she had always wanted to do romantic leads; until the camera discovered her, she had never dreamed she could.

But Hollywood's greatest contribution to Eleanor Powell was to be made later.

Eleanor Powell's eleven-year-old protégée, a Los Angeles girl named Peggy Ryan, will be seen dancing in Top of the Town, a sparkling musical now in preparation. This child is said to be almost as good as Eleanor, the queen of all lady tappers

She appeared before the dance director one morning to show him her first picture routine. She'd worked on it as she'd never worked on anything before But he shook his head.

"Why don't you get around . . . go places? You're not using any space!"

Eleanor Powell, said, bewildered, "But I can't turn my back on the audience!" Entrance . . . "travel step" . . . "sock steps" . . . and a smash exit . . . all to be worked out without once insulting the patrons by a view of a dancer's back! When they told Eleanor Powell that she could go right to town on that set, and the camera would follow her around and pick up every movement . . . from the front . . . she says that she felt she had come to a dancer's paradise. Hollywood had given her the right to let herself go in dancing, for the first time in her life.

"I felt," states Eleanor, "like a bird set free." Reference to the other gifts of Hollywood . . . opportunity, climate, stardom . . . seem conspicuous by their absence from her conversation. She thinks in terms of the dance.

It's a bit difficult to believe that a girl as young and pretty as Eleanor can live so exclusively . . . to dance. But . . . would any girl you know turn down a date with Jimmie Stewart because she was working on a new routine? Eleanor did, the other night.

Would the girl next door let her mother do all her shopping . . . even hats and dresses? Eleanor does . . . because she doesn't want to take time off from her dancing.

Is there anyone in your acquaintance who'll get up from the dinner table to get to work? Eleanor will arise right in the middle of dessert, and with her fork in hand, she'll proceed to execute the idea for a step that's just come to her.

She dances in her sleep . . . literally . . . because she'll dream a routine, and get up in the middle of the night to see if it's workable. There's many a time Mrs. Powell has heard a nocturnal noise and arisen to discover a pajama'd Eleanor tapping out a new step . . .

NO WONDER she can live her past in music. Play the Broadway Melody hits and you may recall Eleanor's breath taking capers. When she plays them, she recalls a scene quite different . . .

The lobby of a theater . . . people crowding around her to congratulate her on Hollywood success . . . her mother's gratified smile . . . and a man waiting for her by the entrance. Billy Grady and Eleanor Powell flew into each other's arms, and both of them burst into tears. The career which Billy Grady had started on its way had achieved the heights.

They enjoyed the luxury of tears for a minute . . . then, startled, Eleanor looked up to see people jamming in around her . . . she was a star, but the thing that had first prompted her mother to send her to school was still a part of Eleanor's make-up . . . she was still bashful . . .

Over Billie's shoulder, she saw a door . . . with a sign . . . and she broke from his embrace and made a dash for it . . .

While the music of the picture still came from the theater, Eleanor enjoyed the luxury of a good cry in private, guarded by a sign that said, "Ladies."

Later, when Born to Dance is no longer the sensation of the hour, and there is nothing left of it for Eleanor but the records of the melodies, they will recall to her the most difficult task she has yet undertaken . . . the task of out-Powelling Eleanor Powell.

Hollywood Tips for Home Makers

Now it's Ingo bikes for the kiddies . . . Hollywood is full of young Ingo Bike enthusiasts these days . . . you see them scooting down the streets in every direction . . . They work just like the "grown ups" Ingo Bikes do . . . If you don't believe that the kids are thrilled to death with them, take another look at the smile on little Dickie Moore's face . . . How about an Ingo Bike for Junior? He'll be asking for one before long!

Isabel Jewell endorses those distinctive looking Olson Rugs with their Early American designs that are so popular in Hollywood! . . . You have no idea what a new rug can do for your living or dining room! And the Olson plan has made it so simple for everyone to have a new rug . . . Why not look into their plan of manufacture and see for yourself exactly what they can do for you . . . You will be amazed with what they have to offer!

And now we have Fels-Naptha soap chips! . . . your old favorite is now obtainable in quick dissolving dustless chips that bring you lots of golden soap teamed with dirt-loosening naptha . . . Fels-Naptha chips are just another form of that good old reliable golden bar—the soap that banishes the "tattle tale gray" from your wash . . . Try some next time you do the wash!

A triple tested insecticide that really kills insects. That is exactly what the Black Flag people have had on the market for years . . . Black Flag comes in two forms . . . In powder for insects that crawl and in a spray for insects that fly . . . Don't be tormented any longer . . . banish with Black Flag!

LET'S EAT! . . .

Marlene Dietrich often orders raw mushrooms—and eats them without sauce or seasoning of any kind! . . . Anita Louise drinks a glass of steak juice before retiring at night. A large piece of beef is broiled to provide the juice. . . . Garbo is imbibing quarts of half carrot-juice, half milk—to get extra energy.

"The Queen Has a Most Excellent Taste for Tea"

Some gracious Victorian lady may well have ventured such an opinion, for it was known that England's great Queen Victoria had had her private tea blended specially to her taste by the famous tea house of the time—Ridgways (Est. 1836).

Since 1900 all the world has been able to taste and enjoy Queen Victoria's private tea—now known as Ridgways "Her Majesty's Blend".

For 100 years Ridgways have been the world's Foremost Quality Teas.

Today Ridgways offers teas for almost every taste and purse. The experience of 100 years, in selecting and blending fine teas, assures the deliciousness and quality of the Ridgways Tea you may choose—

Divorce Love Teams Okay

WHAT is my reaction on seeing now-dissolved couples making love on the screen?

What would be your reaction in watching two unfriendly surgeons working together to save a life? Would the doctors think of petty disagreements between themselves, or their work?

Two teachers in the same classroom are often not friends, but they play the friendly game with the children. They would not think of doing otherwise.

When actors are called upon to take parts best fitted to their talents, they do it. It is only Freudians in the audience, the neurotics saturated with sickening sentimentalities who would react to anything except the miracle of the scenic effect and appreciation of the cleverness of the actors in presenting the play.—*Hortense Smith, 130 Main Street, Johnson City, N. Heaven As It Should Be

THE day of the stupendousmagnificent-tremendouscolossal film is over. And good, good riddance.

At last the screen has achieved that true film-fan's heaven of delight, a humble epic—an utterly human one. I refer to Green Pastures, that refreshing and naive picture of Paradise. What a happy way of presenting Bible history! How the audience chuckled at the animals double-filing into the ark while Noah gravely checked them off on his alphabetical shopping list! How they blew their noses when Moses attained his glimpse of the river Jordan! And what a nice picture of chubby-cheeked God!

We hope that when Gabriel is at last permitted to blow that coveted blast on his trumpet, De Lawd (a genial old chocolate Santa Claus with a grandfatherly beard) will lead us, too, into such simple green pastures of fish-fries and custards, of God in a frock-coat and scrub-ladies with checked gingham wings; such pastures where everyone will do as he desires—where cooks will cook, choirs sing, little boys ride fleecy clouds, and the rest of us go to the celestial movies!—Mary Barger, 40 Park St., Brockton, Mass.

Be Fair to Rural-ites

WHY are small town people invariably portrayed as malicious gossips, dumb hicks and cruel tightwads? There is a tendency in almost every picture about small towns to picture its people with contempt and bitterness. We, who live in small towns, have our odd mannerisms and fixed habits—but not to the exaggeration which the movies show!

Be more fair and honest, producers, when casting for small townspeople—and don't forget that they are the most critical, human and sincere audience you have. They are the bulwark of the movie public.—Bruce Cameron, Oakmont, Pa.

For the Hard-of-Hearing

TALKIES are the greatest entertainment attraction the world has known. How many of us have considered the hard-of-hearing folk that have lost their amusement since talking pictures came along. Only one theatre in Philadelphia is equipped with ear phones for the people who cannot hear pictures without them. In silent days, subtitles enabled us to understand the story. But now, unless you can hear, it is impossible to follow the story. Isn't there some organization that could assist us in having more theatres install these ear phones. It seems only a duty that these unfortunates should be helped.—J. Lucas, 127 Ashby Road, Stonehurst, Philadelphia, Pa.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief of Pain

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and waste out of the blood. If they don't pass 3 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing.

If you have trouble with frequent bladder passages, with scanty amount which often smart and burn, the 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes and dizziness.

Don't wait for serious trouble. Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills—used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help flush out the 15 miles of Kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.

'S Wing Time for Ruth!

actress involved in a scandal. "Mary is honest and brave," said Ruth, "she had rare courage to risk and sacrifice everything to win her child. I'm for her."

Sort of honest and courageous herself—that Chatterton!

AS THE aviatrix, Ruth Chatterton is a woman of cool, calm and sane flying ability, coupled with enthusiastic sportsmanship.

Of all the Hollywood actresses who have been widely publicized for years as accomplished flyers, and who have had their pictures taken in cute costumes et cetera, Ruth Chatterton is one of the few girls of picture prominence who actually can fly. Yet, she has never cheapened the sport she loves so much as to publicize her flying ability, which in her opinion, is still that of the average amateur.

In other words, she never permits her profession to intrude upon her sport, and vice versa.

Two years ago Ruth Chatterton took her first ride in an airplane with a French war ace. A few days later she was talking lessons from Bob Blair, one of the greatest pilots and instructors in this country. Three months after she took her first lesson, she had won her pilot's license.

As a close friend of Ruth's, I'll confess that I silently watched these lessons, particularly the necessary stunting, with considerable trepidation.

When it was all over and we were celebrating her victory in the Glory Hole at her Beverly Hills home, Bob Blair said to me: "Ruth is a natural flyer. She is a remarkable pupil. It's a cinch to teach a person of her intelligence, particularly when she is keen and fearless."

It is odd that Ruth manages to convey confidence in her own ability to her family and friends, who go flying with her any time, anywhere.

Several of her friends, who had vowed that they would never fly in any ships but transports, have succumbed to the Chatterton enthusiasm.

Brian Aherne will soon have his pilot's license due to the hours he has gained in the air in Ruth's Stinson while she was grounded for eight weeks while playing in Dodsworth. During the making of a picture, in fairness to the studio she always refrains from flying.

BUT the moment the last scene of Dodsworth was in the can, she took to the air. Not only that, but she gave Samuel Goldwyn a few gray hairs by taking everybody in the United Artists studio who would fly with her—fellow players, executives and technicians—on short hops over southern California.

Ruth has all sorts of naïve excuses: that she had to get in training for her Air Derby, which was the feature of the National Air Races in September. But the truth was that she simply wanted to enjoy the kick of making her passengers air-minded.

From the thrilling moment at seventeen when a sophisticated New York theater audience of first-nighters gave her an ovation for her performance in The Rainbow, which made her a star overnight

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c at all drug stores. © 1935, C. M. Co.

with her name in electric lights, the actress confesses that nothing has ever thrilled her as much as the sight of some thirty sport-minded amateur flyers in a cross-country race following her into the Los Angeles Municipal Airport to open the National Air Races.

As the aviatrix, Ruth annually contributes $2,000 and a magnificent trophy to this international event. I say "international" because this year the Chatterton Air Derby was given that flavor by the entries of English Peggy Salaman and Chinese Katherine Cheung.

Says Producer Goldwyn, "I hope the success of Dodsworth compels her to stay in pictures because I think she is one of the very few great actresses we have today.

"In fact, there is no limit to her opportunities to become a most important artistic force in pictures. By virtue of her stage experience not only as an actress but as a stage director, she could easily become a successful director. If Ruth will spend six months learning the technical side of the business—in the cutting room, behind the camera, etc., she could be the leader in elevating her sex to top positions of importance in the motion picture industry."

And so, happy landings to the lady whom critics dubbed "first lady of the screen!"

—By SCOOP CONLON

If a girl pretended to be stone deaf when the director called "cut" on this scene—could you blame her? John Boles and Rosalind Russell consider it merely a pleasant enough way to earn their Craig's Wife's salaries

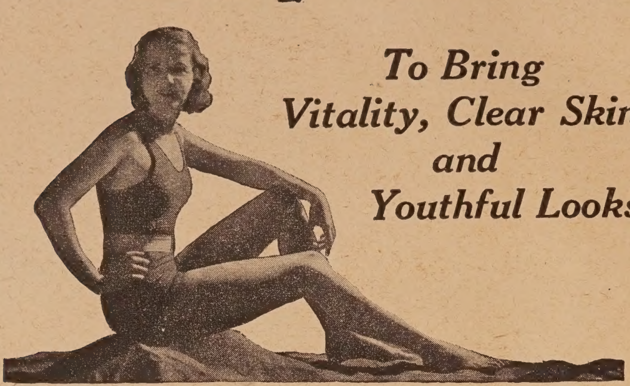
Kidneys Must Purify Blood



Women Need Help More Often Than Men

The only way your body can clean out Acids and poisonous wastes from your blood, is through 9 million tiny, delicate Kidney tubes or filters. If, because of functional troubles, your Kidneys get tired or slow down in their work, these poisons remain in the system and make your eyes look dull and your skin coarse and dry, and at the same time you find yourself all Tired-Out, Nervous, and unable to keep up with the speed of modern life.

Functional Kidney troubles also may cause much more serious and disagreeable symptoms, such as Getting Up Nights, Leg Pains, Backache, Circles Under Eyes, Dizziness, Rheumatic Pains, Acidity, Burning, Smarting, and Itching.

Any Doctor can tell you that the speed of modern life and present day foods throw an extra heavy load on the Kidneys, and that most people need help from time to time if they are to feel their best and preserve their youthful appearance. Fortunately, for sufferers, it is easy to help functional Kidney Troubles with the Doctor's guaranteed prescription Cystex, which now is available at all drug stores under a positive guarantee to satisfy completely or cost nothing.

Dr. T. J. Rastelli

Doctors Praise Cystex

Doctor T. J. Rastelli, famous Doctor, Surgeon, and Scientist, of London, says: "Cystex is one of the finest remedies I have ever known in my medical practice. Any Doctor will recommend it for•its definite benefit in the treatment of many functional Kidney and Bladder disorders. It is safe and harmless." And Dr. C. Z. Rendelle, another widely known Physician and Medical Examiner, of San Francisco, recently said: "Since the Kidneys purify the blood, the poisons collect in these organs and must be promptly flushed from the system, otherwise they re-enter the blood stream and create a toxic condition. I can truthfully recommend the use of Cystex."

World-Wide Success

Cystex is not an experiment, but is a proven success in 31 different countries throughout the world. It is prepared with scientific accuracy in accordance with the strict and rigid standards of the United States Dispensatory and the United States Pharmacopoeia, and being designed especially to act in the Kidneys and Bladder is swift and safe in action. Most users report a remarkable improvement in 48 hours and complete satisfaction in 8 days.

Guaranteed To Work

Because of its unusual success, Cystex is offered under an unlimited guarantee to do the work to your complete satisfaction in 8 days, or money back on return of empty package. Under this unlimited guarantee you can put Cystex to the test and see exactly what it can do in your particular case. You must feel younger, stronger, and better than you have in a long time—you must feel that Cystex has done the work to your complete satisfaction or you merely return the empty package and it costs you nothing. You are the sole judge of your own satisfaction. Cystex costs only 3c a dose at druggists, and as the guarantee protects you fully, you should not take chances with cheap, inferior, or irritating drugs, or delay. Ask your druggist for guaranteed Cystex (pronounced Siss-Tex) today.

The Mysterious Voice!

that made me what I am today—" and the long, tense figure of Fred Keating stirred in his chair. Those dark fingers of his which have drawn so many rabbits out of so many hats, performed so many mystery-miracles with cards, now played restlessly with his cigarette.

We were having lunch together, Fred and I, in the breakfast room of his home. Aubrey, his colored man-servant and best friend, was serving him cold roast beef and hot toast and mustard. Fred said, "Aubrey and I have been together for so long I can't remember whether I adopted him or he adopted me.

He does everything for me, acting as cook, valet, bartender, chauffeur, bookkeeper and general manager. He worked without pay—when vaudeville collapsed and I had to turn to new fields.

"BUT as I was saying—the Voice! It made me what I am today, a man of about thirty-three who has never been in love, who has never had a home, who detests the idea of marriage, who never will be married.

"Oh, I have my romances, of course. Life would be a dull thing without feminine companionship. But I always know them for what they are—romances. In the nature of things transient and temporary.

"It was the Voice that sent me out into the world of Magic, of make-believe, of the theater and of the press. For I have played the piano in a nickelodeon theater . . . I have toured the roads of the world with Howard Thurston, making flowers to grow out of carpets and water to cascade from nothingness—and cards to perform like little, living minds . . . I've been a reporter on the New York World, a little sick over my first gory murder story . . . I've sold fiction stories . . . I've worked with the late Texas Guinan and loved it . . . I've been press agent for Gene Denis . . . I've played in pictures with Joan Crawford, with Charles Boyer, with Walter Connolly, with many stars . . . I've just finished a starring picture of my own, titled Devil on Horseback for Hirliman Studio.

"I started in vaudeville and in vaudeville I hope to end this effort called Life. I've done the legitimate theater, too, with Talullah Bankhead, with Hope Williams. But I am not an actor. I'm an entertainer. The two are not always the same. I hate to stay long in one place. I detest the repetitiousness of the theater. I love to sing and dance and be master of ceremonies. I love the open road.

"I WOULD never have come to Hollywood if it had not been for Aubrey. Aubrey wanted to see Hollywood. And so we came to Hollywood. Aubrey likes Hollywood. I didn't remain under contract long. Contracts are prisons. And there isn't enough gold in these here hills to make me do a part unless I want to do it. I don't want money. I've been so poor back East that I've had to run my car out to Long Island and hide it in deserted barns so that the company wouldn't take it away from me. And I've got more kick out of it than I get now, when it is paid for and secure.

"I don't want Fame. I don't want boredom. Above all things, I do NOT want boredom.

"The Voice taught me that unhappiness is abnormal. It taught me that marriage is abnormal for those of us who are not fitted for it.

"WHICH takes us back through the years to the dark savage little youngster who used to say to his mother, 'Why do you mention my name to It? It hates me . . .'

"And then sometimes, in desperation, my mother would break down and weep the harder and beg me to believe that the Voice was good and kind and meant well; that to the Voice I owed everything I had—my food, my education, my clothes, the very nice roof over my head.

"I always had things other fellows had—bikes and private schools and football gear and pocket money. But it drove me violently insane to know that I was under obligation to the Voice . . . the Voice that had haunted me and taunted me ever since I'd been able to distinguish one voice from another.

"I was fourteen when I ran away to join Howard Thurston on the road. The Voice was why.

"FOR there came the day when a boy in my class at school invited me to spend the week-end with him at his mother's home. He was impressed with my sleight of hand tricks and wanted to exhibit me to the family. I accepted.

"It was one of those handsome, old Park Avenue houses. When we arrived some sort of a soirée was in progress. I can distinctly remember every detail of that snowy winter evening . . . the dusk outside . . . the sensation of light and warmth as we entered the brightly lighted rooms from the five o'clock darkness outside . . . the sudden change from dusk to electric lights made me stumble.

"I was presented to my hostess, and then—and then—a man's face loomed up beside her. We were introduced. He spoke. He spoke my name. And instantly I realized that I was in the bodily presence of—the Voice!

"Every atom of my body trembled with loathing. Beads of perspiration broke out on my forehead. I stood transfixed before this person, this ogre who had dominated me, terrorized me, ruled my life with a bodiless presence, made me wish I never had been born.

"I was meeting face to face, for the first time in my life—my father!"

FRED KEATING lit another cigarette with hands that trembled just a little. He gave a short laugh. He said, "There is an epilogue, of course. They are both gone now, my mother and father. It is all long ago. In later years we became fairly good friends, my father and I. He was Frederick L. Keating, Commissioner of Licenses in New York. He was a talented pianist, a sometime newspaper man and an able lawyer by profession.

"I learned later that my mother and father had separated before I was born. The wound had been deep. My father had resented me. He never wanted to see me. He never did see me until that day I was formally introduced to him in that house on Park Avenue. He had directed my life—over the telephone. He never should have married. Like me—or am I like him?—he was made for the lone trail and gypsy emotions.

"Yes, we became fair friends before he died. But I shall never forget the day when I stood face to face with the Voice and, with unspeakable hatred in my heart, was formally presented to—my father!"

"Paying the Piper" Is the Fashion in Hollywood!

of the most fashionable of Hollywood's smart set. One sits in the palm room and eats sumptuous foods such as Frog Legs aux Fines Herbes or Sweetbreads Saute Sec with Fresh Mushrooms prepared by Gregorio, famous culinary artist.

The eternal question of what to wear arises and is smartly solved by two popular screen players, Marjorie Weaver and Evalyn Knapp. Marjorie Weaver who won the SCREEN BOOK contest and as a result signed a seven-year contract with Warner Bros. has just finished work in the technicolor production God's Country and the Woman. Evalyn Knapp's latest film is Bulldog Edition for Republic. Marjorie prefers a simple black mohair alpaca trimmed with taffeta rickrack and a chic black felt hat banded in red antelope.

Evalyn Knapp wears a crêpe back satin in the new vintage shade with the satin side brought in at the waist and sash. The shoulder fulness and draped neckline held together by a rhinestone pin are interesting. On her head perches a saucy felt hat of the same shade.

COCKTAILS FOR THREE

Let us suppose there are three of you and you want some place to go for cocktails. An ideal spot is the bamboo room at the Vine Street Brown Derby where one may hobnob with the scintillating stars of Hollywood. Here is the place to enjoy a Planter's punch for which the Derby is famous. On warmer days it would be pleasant to have cocktails outdoors on the lovely patio of the original Brown Derby overlooking Wilshire Boulevard and just across from the famous Cocoanut Grove. Cocktails at all Brown Derbys are 25 cents. Mixed drinks are 35 cents.

And for clothes—Marjorie Weaver has the problem well in hand by wearing a smart one piece velvet dress under a luxurious mink coat. The coat designed and executed by Willard George, eminent Hollywood furrier, is a masterpiece of beauty and skill. The shoulder and skirt fulness are new style notes for winter. A touched suede turban in red antelope adds the finishing touch.

Evalyn Knapp chooses an odd green for her wool costume trimmed in fox. The straight one piece dress cut high under the bustline is topped by satin in the same shade. A lovely rhinestone clip trims the neckline. She wears a brown hat and shoes and carries brown bag and gloves to complete her ensemble.

"DINNER AT EIGHT"

"Dinner at eight, please James, and let's make it the LaMaze," chorus Evalyn and Marjorie in unison to James Blakeley's polite inquiry as to where to dine. The LaMaze serves delicious food where one may dance. A large blackboard is brought in on which is written the dinner menu. Dinner is $3.00 per person and well worth the price.

Evalyn is wearing a charming dinner suit of black velvet in the new street length. The coat is fitted tight through the waist with a perky, old-fashioned peplum. The top of the one piece dress is green metallic with short, full sleeves and V neckline held by a rhinestone clip. An extremely chic velvet hat trimmed with ostrich tips lends an air of enchantment.

Marjorie's dress is satin embossed crêpe also in the newer length, black with short silver fox sleeves and worn with a small off-the-face hat. Gayly colored bows lend color.

MAKING THE ROUNDS

If you prefer to go some place for dinner to linger through the evening, dancing and drinking highballs, try the Trocadero. Dinner here is $2.50 per person with cover charge $1.00. Drinks are 60 cents.

Formal attire is the order of the day, though one may drop down stairs at the bar dressed informally. Marjorie prefers for this event a lovely formal gown of silver cloth. Three large flowers in soft colorings are worn on the left shoulder.

Evalyn spends the evening at the "Troc" in a charming black lace creation made over a satin slip. A square neckline is smart as is the gay bouquet tucked in the beltline.

There is only one Cocoanut Grove and your stay in Hollywood would not be complete without visiting this famous spot. Dancing to the tune of Eddy Duchin's popular orchestra, having a drink and a sandwich tops a delightful evening. Cover charge is only $1.00 per person and drinks are 50 cents.

Marjorie, dancing with James Blakeley, who has the juvenile lead in the Pickford-Lasky production, The Gay Desperado, shows to perfection this velvet gown, smart in its utter simplicity.

Of course, it is possible to go on and on but—when little feet whimper in tiny shoes and the Hollywood sky turns from deep blue to cold grey it is time to pay the Piper and applaud the Sand Man.

There is a limit to the twinkling of even Hollywood stars.

Write to Sally Martin, fashion editor, SCREEN BOOK, Hollywood, Calif., for personal help with your wardrobe. Enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Mrs. Charles Chaplin (Paulette Goddard to you!) dazzles the other diners-out at the Victor Hugo with her sumptuous yet simple cloth of gold dress, and sable cape. Tomorrow morning she'll be wearing a pair of worn, dirty canvas trousers and bouncing around the deck of the Panacea, Charlie's boat

Another Dizzy Spell!

● I had one of those dizzy spells that made me feel sick all over. Felt bilious, nervous. My complexion was a sight. The trouble? Constipation! Then I remembered FEEN-A-MINT. I didn't think it could be as good as my friends all said it was but I decided to try it. I chewed one tablet. Now I wouldn't think of using any other laxative.

THE 3 MINUTE WAY! Three minutes of chewing make the difference

● When you feel "all clogged up" chew a dainty tablet of FEEN-A-MINT for 3 minutes—or longer if you wish. It's this 3 minutes of chewing, medical science has proved, that helps make FEEN-A-MINT different, so thoroughly dependable, such a blessing to constipation sufferers. You'll like the cool mint flavor of FEEN-A-MINT. It's convenient and so economical too!

● Next day—happy, full of vim and pep! Bowels regular. FEEN-A-MINT brings blessed relief. It's so gentle. There's no griping, nausea, nor disturbance of sleep. Non-habit-forming. Don't tolerate constipation another day. Use FEEN-A-MINT—the delicious chewing gum laxative. More than 16 million people do

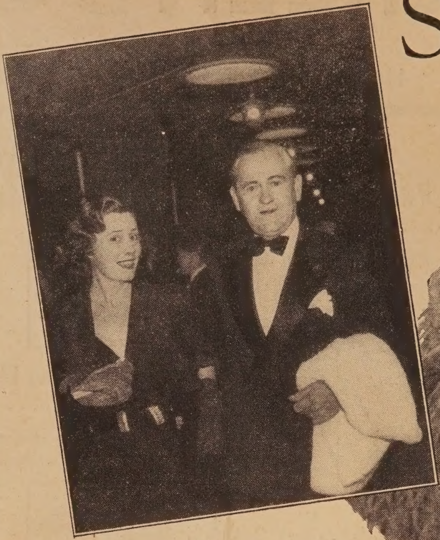
MYSELF—As I See Me!



Irene (Delsa to you!) has been married to Dentist Francis Griffin since 1928. He stopped a New York cab horse from running away with Irene and an ancient carriage. That's how their romance started

—IRENE DUNNE

I OFTEN think that if I had not gone on the stage, I should have liked to be a secretary . . . I never visit an executive office without being impressed with the "in the know air" of some girl secretary . . . nor without feeling that these girls have their fingers on the pulse of exciting events . . .

I like gray street clothes . . . white summer clothes . . . lingerie in delicate pastel shades . . . I can never feel right in a tailored suit unless I have some very feminine accessories to relieve the severity of the masculine motif . . .

When non-professional people tell me they were uneasy with me at first acquaintance because I am an actress, I feel a sense of personal failure . . . because I dislike forbidding mannerisms in anyone . . . and I should dislike thinking that anything I say or do could keep anyone from judging me as I want to be judged off the screen . . . as a person, not a personality . . .

After some years of picture work, I still look back fondly to my part in Cimarron . . . my first screen rôle, and my favorite one. . . .

Two things in life inspire me with a sense of high anticipation . . . one is my trip to New York to be with my husband . . . the other, my return to Hollywood to renew my work . . .

Now, as I am finishing Theodora Goes Wild for Columbia, I find my thoughts turning eastward . . . I begin to anticipate New York, and my husband's companionship . . . But I know that after a stay . . . after talking with playwrights with plays on Broadway . . . and novelists with books on best seller lists . . . and other people who are doing things . . . I shall look forward avidly to Hollywood and to doing my own job . . . perhaps doing it better than I have ever done it before. . . .

During the years I have lived in Hollywood, I moved annually . . . always some reason why I couldn't or wouldn't keep a house . . . eventually I solved the problem by building one . . . I helped to design it . . . every bookshelf and every closet is just where I want it . . . and now there are few words so pleasant to me as "home" . . . there's something substantial about the word . . . and I like substantial things . . . words and houses. . . .

A moment in my life that stands out glamorously across the years was the one when Florenz Ziegfeld, seated in a theater where I was [Continued on page 67]

A Fascinating New CONTEST!

WIN $500

Help Mervyn LeRoy find a trademark for his pictures!

20th Century Fox

Paramount Pictures

Columbia Pictures

Radio Pictures

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

For one simple idea—$500 reward! Read the rules and enter today!

SHARPEN your pencils, you readers of SCREEN BOOK—and let's all help Mervyn LeRoy concoct a trademark for the motion pictures he is going to produce under the company name of Mervyn LeRoy Productions and release through Warner Brothers.

If the idea you send in is considered the best of those submitted to SCREEN BOOK, you will win $50 in cash. Your suggestion then will be eligible for the grand prize of $250 which will be paid to the smart person who submits the trademark selected to appear on all the screens of the world—flashing in front of the eyes of everyone who sees one of Mervyn LeRoy's fine films.

Send in more than one idea if you like. Perhaps, like Jimmy Durante, you "got a million of them." So much the better. Submit them all!

$50 is also offered to each of the best trademarks submitted to the other magazines owned by Fawcett Publications, Inc., HOLLYWOOD, SCREEN PLAY, MOVIE CLASSIC and MOTION PICTURE. The prize entry from each magazine will be judged with the $50 prize winner of each other magazine. And the lucky one wins the grand prize.

If you can judge from Mervyn's past success (Anthony Adverse, I am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang, Oil for the Lamps of China, Tugboat Annie, Five Star Final, Gold Diggers of 1933, Little Caesar and many others, as well as an hilariously funny Warner Bros. picture now ready for release, Three Men on a Horse) the pictures he makes will be popular hits. The first one produced under his own banner will be titled The King and the Chorus Girl, the second will be Son of the Gods.

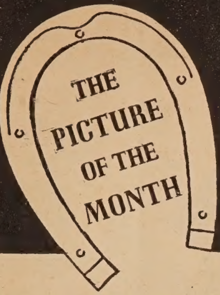
Your trademark, therefore, should stand for quality. Perhaps it will show the name of the company, or the initials. Perhaps it will bear a motto—or some emblem of progress or artistic achievement. Let yourself go—for your idea must be original—and not a copy of some trademark already in use. The whole thing is made easier for you because

YOU DON'T HAVE TO DRAW THE TRADEMARK.

That ought to help, for few of us are artists, anyway. If yours is picked as the best—or one of the best—it will be transposed into a fine sketch carefully done by a trained artist.

Just tell in writing what trademark you think would be suited to stand for popular film attractions. Make your description as [Continued on page 76]

WINNER OF THE LAUGH SWEEPSTAKES!



Thanks to the inspired "Oiwin" of that bewildered young man, Frank McHugh, "THREE MEN ON A HORSE" is both the picture of the month and the farce of the year! Take our tip and be in the grandstand when it romps into town!

'Oiwin' had two great passions—poems and ponies. But when his tearful bride faced him with a notebook filled with strange feminine names and numbers 'Oiwin' became an "also ran!"

The "mob" discovered 'Oiwin' and found a walking gold mine. His penchant for picking ponies made paupers out of bookies but millions for the mob!

"Oiwin, you're the first guy to really prove that man's best friend is the horse."

"It's the horse that deserves the credit—all I did was pick him—he had to go to the trouble of running."

When his bride found out that the names in the notebook weren't pretties but ponies—all was forgiven—and 'Oiwin' forgot about races and went back to rhymes. It's the big cheek-to-cheek finish of the Laugh Sweepstakes of the year!

"3 MEN ON A HORSE"

"Three Men On a Horse," the sensational stage success is in its second big year on Broadway and still going strong! The greatest comedy hit in 10 years played by 6 companies in 4 countries to capacity crowds!

HINTS for the EYES OF WIVES!

by Jane Heath

● UNLESS you have one of the rare husbands who is amused to watch mysterious beauty rites, it's up to you to join the secret association of KURLASH enthusiasts. These wise ladies keep a little private cache of KURLASH products and slip away for a few minutes' beauty conference with them daily. Husbands are entranced with the results—and never know why wives look prettier.

You can whisk your lashes into KURLASH ($1 at good stores) in a split second. When they emerge, they'll be curled back soulfully—looking longer and darker, making your eyes larger. No heat; no cosmetics—nothing to arouse husbandly suspicions. Do not hesitate to use these other absolutely undetectable KURLASH products also. Try them in private . . . and give your husband a BEAUTIFUL surprise today.

● Lashtint Compact. A patented mascara case with a little sponge, ensuring just the right consistency to darken the lashes naturally without stiffening or caking them. Waterproof. In black, brown or blue. $1.

● Kurlene. Dresses the lashes, keeps them soft and silky, darkens them, tends to make them grow longer and thicker—and, either alone or mixed with a little Shadette (not illustrated, $1) in a shade to match your eyes, gives the youthful shiny-lidded look that is so flattering. 50c and $1 sizes.

● Twissors. The little miracle tweezer with curved scissor-handles lets you see to trim brows accurately. Only 25c.

Wouldn't This Be Fun!

MANY of our stars have become definite types and their portrayals are, therefore, chiefly routine. I would like to see our stars in a variety of rôles in which they could show their various abilities. Why can't we have:

1. Robert Taylor, the millionaire playboy, as a tough detective.
2. William Powell, the suave gentleman and sparkling conversationalist, as a Mexican bandit.
3. Gary Cooper, the whimsical adventurer, as a dumb detective.
4. Marlene Dietrich, the mysterious siren, a quick-witted manicurist.
5. Janet Gaynor, the sweet small-town girl, as a jewel thief.
6. ZaSu Pitts, the fluttering comedian, as a sophisticated debutante.
7. Alice Brady, the mad-modern comedian as Lady Macbeth.
8. Boris Karloff, who specializes in scaring little children, as Sammy Botts, publicity agent par excellence.
9. Anne Shirley, the stormy mountain girl, as a troublesome daughter of the Blue Book.
10. Arthur Treacher, the magnificently erroneous butler, as Sherlock Holmes.
11. Charles Butterworth, the bird-brained comedian, as a cynical gangster.

Modesty At All Costs!

WITH our streets crowded with girls of every age, astride bicycles; wearing culottes. Tahitian paru costumes on our best bathing beaches, why, oh, why does the heroine (wearing decorous pajamas) still persist in reaching for that inevitable dressing-gown, when blood-curdling groans or screams plus pistol shots awaken her?

The average person in a moment of stress, would investigate as is and donning a robe would obviously be about the last possible act.

This seems a false note in otherwise realistic cinemas—symphonies of naturalness.—Harold Davis, 2 Summer Street, Malden, Mass.

RUSSELL PATTERSON'S MONTHLY HIT PARADE

Russell Patterson

3 GREAT Contributions TO GREATER ENTERTAINMENT

By RUSSELL PATTERSON

FOR months Hollywood has been predicting that this would be the greatest movie season in history. Well, I've just been looking over some of the screen capital's coming product, and all I can say is—Hollywood wasn't fooling! Don't misunderstand me. I'm not a movie expert—but I know what I like. And I want to tell you, in a few well-chosen words—and pictures—about the three approaching attractions that I like best.

Bing swings into his biggest laugh show, with 5 new song hits, in "Pennies From Heaven"

The first one you'll see will be the new Bing Crosby show—"Pennies From Heaven". Here's the funniest picture Bing's ever made. It's his first for Columbia—an engagingly human romance with five grand new songs. And how Bing sings them, with plenty of inspiration from Madge Evans, who grows lovelier with every film. Their love affair literally starts on a dime—and almost ends in jail, when Bing takes under his wing an irrepressible little gamin (Edith Fellows, the 10-year-old who scored so heavily in "She Married Her Boss").

And don't miss Irene Dunne in "Theodora Goes Wild"! This mad, merry Columbia film is one of the biggest comedy surprises the screen has sprung in years. This story of a girl who starts half-a-dozen near-divorces trying to get her man, will have you howling from the very first foot. Melvyn Douglas is splendid as a New York artist who brings out the worst in small-town Theodora—more, in fact, than he bargains for!

But the greatest treat that screendom has in store for you is Frank Capra's magnificent production of "Lost Horizon", a film that, without question, will take its place among the ten finest pictures ever produced. The story was adapted by Robert Riskin from James Hilton's world-famous novel, with Ronald Colman in the star rôle...a combination that is nothing short of inspired. Obviously Columbia has expended a fortune on this film, but to my mind it's money well spent. The picture is spell-binding, with its strange story of five people kidnapped and whisked far beyond civilization, imprisoned in a paradise where people never age. Capra has definitely topped his "It Happened One Night" and "Mr. Deeds" in this one.

"Lost Horizon" won't actually reach the screen for some time yet. But when it does, you'll agree that this grand picture alone would have made good Hollywood's boast about its "greatest movie season".

Columbia is rumored to have spent two millions on its production of "Lost Horizon". Here are Ronald Colman and Margo in a tense scene, with producer Frank Capra in inset.

A Jolly Good Fellows!

She hiccupped her way into movies—and she's up to stardom now

By Gail Farrar

EDITH FELLOWS is a bright-eyed, crisp-mannered miss of thirteen. She looks younger, acts older and feels—well, that depends upon her mood.

Everything is "fun" to Edith, we soon discovered. It's "fun" to have her pictures taken in the portrait gallery; it's "fun" to have her dresses especially designed for her; it's "fun" to study her lessons between scenes on the set. But fan mail, autographs and previews are the most "fun" of all.

Edith is an illusion-destroyer. Always we have sympathized with screen youngsters, thinking they were being deprived of a normal childhood while they brought entertainment to the millions. We were sure they could not help but develop a false set of values, that their perspective on life must perforce be biased by the amount of money they are able to earn as youngsters. We were sure, also, that even their "naturalness" is artful and contrived.

Edith, without half-trying, erased our preconceived notions. Our interview was just a pleasant way of "playing house" with grown-up company. There was nothing gauche about her manner, nothing at all artificial about her hospitality.

The Columbia starlet talks easily and brightly on any subject. During our half-hour chat, she told us the story of her new picture, Pennies from Heaven, which stars Bing Crosby; she revealed her adoration for Bing Crosby; she has met his wife, Dixie Lee, and their three youngsters, Gary, Philip and Dennis, and thinks they're the nicest family in the world; she told us, also, how long she has been in pictures, how strenuous was the struggle for recognition, how sacrificing was her guardian-grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth Lamb Fellows, whom she calls "Nana."

ONE subject was left untouched—the recent court trial wherein her mother sued to regain her custody and "Nana" fought to retain the rights granted her by another court.

No, Edith didn't mention the matter, but she made one remark which was more revealing than she perhaps realized. "I'm not at my best today," she said. "When I'm in a picture, I usually forget about everything except my part. I haven't been able to do that very well lately. But they"—"they" being Director McLeod, Bing Crosby and Producer Emanuel Cohen—"like my work and it really does look all right in the rushes. I want to give

HOW TO AVOID THAT "Made-up" LOOK

Be colorful . . . but not painted. The Color Change Principle available in Tangee lipstick, powder and rouge intensifies your own natural coloring.

Today it is quite simple to make the most of your own natural skin tones. The Tangee cosmetic principle brings out a liveliness and sparkle in your lips, cheeks and skin that is yours alone, because it is your coloring. Exactly how the Tangee Color Change Principle accomplishes this is explained in the pictures below. It will take you 22 seconds to read how to be lovelier . . . in your own way.

Tangee your lips . . . don't paint them. On your lips Tangee changes to the blush rose Nature has hidden there.

In the new Tangee Face Powder, the Color Change Principle ends that "powdery look". Reveals a new warm underglow.

TANGEE ROUGE

Your cheeks when rouged with Tangee are radiant with a delicate ruddiness that is natural only to you. In Creme or Compact.

Insist upon Tangee for all your make-up essentials. Only in Tangee can you obtain the Color Change Principle. Powder is 55¢ and $1.10. Rouge, compact or creme, each 83¢. Lipstick is 39¢ and $1.10.

• BEWARE OF SUBSTITUTES! There is only one Tangee—don't let anyone switch you. Always ask for TANGEE NATURAL. If you prefer more color for evening wear, ask for Tangee Theatrical.

When Doctors Swab SORE THROAT... surface germs are destroyed, soreness relieved, healing quickened.

When you Gargle with PEPSODENT ANTISEPTIC... you continue your doctor's treatment by destroying surface germs, relieving the cold.

USE PEPSODENT ANTISEPTIC FOR COLDS — TO RELIEVE THROAT SORENESS

● The reason doctors have you gargle is to relieve soreness, kill germs. So remember, Pepsodent Antiseptic is three times as powerful in killing germs as other mouth antiseptics. You can mix Pepsodent with two parts of water and it still kills germs in less than 10 seconds! Thus Pepsodent goes 3 times as far—saves you ⅔ of your money.

So active is Pepsodent that, in recent tests on 500 people in Illinois, Pepsodent users got rid of colds twice as fast as others! Get either the 25c, 50c, or $1.00 Pepsodent Antiseptic at any drug counter, and see for yourself how pleasantly effective it is.

SAVES ⅔ OF YOUR DOLLAR ..Goes 3 times as far!

TODAY'S GOSSIP

This is what's being whispered around Hollywood! . . . .

THIS GABLE ROMANCE is beginning to look like the love of Carole Lombard's life. There is a picture of Clark in every room of her house and one of the two of them taken together which smiles down at her happily from a spot right over her dressing table. Few people remember that Carole and Clark made a picture together four years ago, No Man Of Her Own.

Friends of Clark and the second Mrs. Gable hope they will be reconciled—and that there will be no divorce.

Close friends of Gable know that he is very fond of his wife's children, by a former marriage, and friends of both are working hard to patch up the marital differences.

AT LAST THERE IS something definite concerning George Raft and the missus. When Mrs. Raft came to Hollywood a short while ago—after almost a decade's separation—everyone thought that a divorce settlement would be made. But Mrs. Raft is gone again and things are just the same. So George is going to Mexico and get himself a divorce there, which won't be quite so legal so far as courts are concerned, but which will allow some mayor or some minister somewhere to marry him to Virginia Pine.

The third Mrs. Fairbanks with Doug. The former Lady Ashley drives a swanky English motor car, on the side of which is lettered S. A. — which means Sylvia Ashley. Topping, what?

—Charles Rhodes photo

The pretty bride and proud bridegroom: Joan Blondell and Dick Powell. Joan ordered two identical pink dresses made by different designers, wore the one she liked better. Before the ceremony, they moved their belongings into their new home. Dick sold his home which won an award as the most artistic home in America

BILL POWELL decided recently to take a little vacation and to travel incog.

The first leg of his trip was to be via plane so he sneaked over to the airport where he had registered for a seat under another name.

Jean Harlow accompanied him to the airport and bade him a fond farewell.

And if you call spooning with Jean keeping one's self out of the public eye, then you are a softie.

CLARK GABLE is so bugs about his new $16,000 Dusenberg that he won't allow anyone other than himself to touch it. Recently on the lot Clark was polishing the chromium innards

If there's any truth in the old saying "Happy is the bride the sun shines on," Maureen O'Sullivan should have all she can attend to in the way of bliss as Mrs. John Farrow. Sally Blane Foster was bridesmaid, A. H. Tandy, British consul, was best man. Joan and Jack Morgan helped with the ceremony, too of the car when Director Van Dyke came along and said, "Can I believe my eyes? This is the first time I have ever seen a motion picture star polish his car without a photographer around." "Don't worry," Clark said, "there'll probably be one along in a minute." And much to Mr. Gable's embarrassment, one appeared before he had the words out of his mouth. But it was, in truth, happenstance. Clark does do all his polishing and tinkering himself, and not just for publicity.

You hear a lot about motion picture stars being held up with high prices, but, as a matter of fact, they usually get their cars at a large discount, or sometimes even as a gift from the automobile manufacturer who considers it quite an advertisement. When Clark bought his first Dusenberg he turned in a Lincoln, a Ford and $2,000 cash, but he's grown wiser since and the $16,000 model he has now was bought for a great deal less than that.

He also went car-shopping for Joan Crawford recently, and with a little string-pulling saved her several thousand dollars.

Speaking of vehicles, Bob Taylor's next purchase will be one of the peculiar aero-cycles that they make in England. They have two wheels in front and one in back, and are really only glorified motorcycles, but Bob's interest has been intrigued.

Frances (Rhythm on the Range) Farmer is another recent bride. She and Lief Erickson spend their spare time going on mad camping trips in a motorcycle with side car Cary's nose not a little out of joint. Gerald has a two-seater plane and he had a bright idea recently. He tied a love note to a miniature parachute and the idea was to drop it from his plane and have it land in Mary's front yard. But it pays to be sure of things, and who knows but what there might be a wind, so the young man landed first and then drove by in his automobile and tossed it (with his heart attached) right where he wanted it to land! Now, that's pretty cute; why don't movie stars think of things like that?

EVERY ACTOR has his own prelude to the taking of a big scene . . . a gesture, a prayer, a phrase—something for good luck. Charles Laughton recites two lines from a favorite dirge, Loretta Young crosses herself devoutly, Janet Gaynor pats her Seventh Heaven shoes, Clark Gable goes into his "thumbing" routine, and the loquacious Gary Cooper just yells "Hey!"

Incidentally, Gary has been making a lot of "Hey, nonnynonny" even away from the camera range lately. You can find Mr. and Mrs. Cooper in just about any "day after" social column these days. It looks like Sandra is getting her way. From "chaps" to monkey suits is the title of this one.

JOAN CRAWFORD is well-known for her many generosities . . . there is the Joan Crawford Ward in a Hollywood hospital, good-sized checks to charity organizations, etc., but there are other things, that while they don't seem so important, show what a real girl she is. Gail Patrick is one to tell that she owes her new figure entirely to Joan, and all because of as unmentionable a thing as a girdle. Gail was telling Joan how she wished she had her secret of wearing clothes well, when Joan up and told her where to purchase it. Doesn't sound like much, but it shows that nothing is too small for Joan's friendly interest.

And now we hear that Julie Haydon, too, is starting to repay an old debt to her. Julie made such a success in The Scoundrel that it's hard to realize that she had any hard sledding after it. But it's a long time between contracts sometimes, and Julie arrived in Hollywood without the proper wardrobe befitting a successful young actress. Knowing that it's the fine feathers that make the impression in this town Joan insisted on sending her to Bullock's and outfitting her completely, at her own expense. The fine feathers flew. Now, Julie has a

Genuine Bayer Aspirin—the Thing to Take for Fast Relief

Instead of buying costly medicines for a cold, try the way nearly any doctor you ask will approve as the modern way — BAYER ASPIRIN. It is perhaps the most famous and most widely used of all cold remedies today — yet costs only 15¢ for a dozen tablets or two full dozen for a quarter anywhere in the United States.

The way you use it is this: Two BAYER tablets when you feel a cold coming on. Take with a full glass of water. Then repeat, if necessary, according to directions in each package.

This will act to fight fever, cold pains and the cold itself. And it will save you from taking strong medicines for a cold. Medicines that often upset the whole system. Relief comes rapidly.

Superstitious!

What has the most superstitious man in the world—Preston Foster—to say? You'll laugh . . .

By Mary Pennington

MR. WEBSTER—the kindly old gentleman with the whiskers who wrote the dictionary—defines superstition as "a belief in the supernatural." He'll even string along with you to the extent of defining supernatural. He says it is "beyond, or exceeding, the powers or laws of nature."

Which isn't much help. Mr. Webster was probably a nice man, but at times a little vague.

One really should obtain information on superstitions from the superstitious—a husky guy like Preston Foster, for example. Foster, actor by profession and yachtsman for fun, cheerfully admits that he believes in all the good luck charms of both stage and sea. And that, ladies and gentlemen, is some wad of superstitions.

Amiably, this six feet something or other of bronzed brawn consented to cast a weather eye over the words of Mr. Webster. He looked disgusted.

"Nuts," said Mr. Foster in the vernacular. "You just play a hunch.

"Look," he explained honestly, "I don't know whether I'm superstitious or not. But there's so blamed much luck in this business of being an actor you can't help 'believing in signs.'

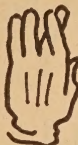
"You start off like I did, a green kid from a small town, and you get a bit part in a company of professional actors. You turn up some night in a cheerful mood and whistle in your dressing-room. The whole gang, from stars to call boy, blows you to bits. And you learn that whistling in dressing-rooms is bad luck. That night every time something goes wrong—and plenty does—you catch someone scowling at you. And you never whistle in dressing-rooms again. Pretty soon you've got a whole collection of superstitions travelling right along with you. The orchestra mustn't play 'Home, Sweet Home.' You must never say the last line of the play until opening night. Real flowers are only permitted on the stage if they come over the footlights. You avoid the dressing-room numbered 13. Silly notions? Sure. But I'll bet two bits that you pick up pins or walk around ladders or cross your fingers. I," said Mr. Foster virtuously, "never cross my fingers. Knocking on wood is better," he added unexpectedly with an engaging grin.



"After all," he explained cheerfully, "superstitions don't cost anything and they don't hurt anyone. And they might do some good. Who knows?" Which can be regarded an as unanswerable argument.

Though Mr. Foster takes his "rules and regulations for the superstitions" with his tongue in his cheek and a twinkle in his eye, there is one thing he is very firm about. He believes in hunches.

Hunches have gotten him jobs. Hunches have saved his life. Hunches have kept him out of various and sundry difficulties. He can prove it.

"The most important hunch in my life came while I was still on the stage in New York," he said. "Things hadn't been going very well for me—a run of bad luck. The parts I wanted I couldn't get, and the parts I got didn't last. Put me in a company and the play was sure to fold up.

"Then I landed a good part in Two Seconds. One night, during a few minutes break in the rehearsal, I was smoking a cigarette in the alley just outside the stage door. Just as plainly as though someone had walked up and told me, I suddenly felt that this particular play—this particular part—was going to bring me the long-awaited break. I knew—and don't ask me how—that with that part I'd win a Hollywood contract and, even-

NOSE PORES

Largest Pores on Your Body— A Test of Your Cleansing Methods!

By Lady Esther

The pores on the nose are the largest on your body. For this reason, if allowed to become clogged with waxy excretions, they will become conspicuously large and noticeable.

The pores on your nose, therefore, are a good test of your skin-cleansing methods. If the pores are plugged with waste matter and gaping large, it's a sign your methods are insufficient. By keeping your pores—and this includes the pores of your nose—thoroughly clean, you can keep them normal in size, invisibly small.

A Penetrating Cream Required

To get at the dirt and waxy matter that accumulates in your pores, you must use a face cream that penetrates, one that actually works its way into the pores. Such a cream is Lady Esther Face Cream. It does not merely lie on the surface of your skin. It actually penetrates the pores, and does it in a gentle and soothing manner.

Penetrating the pores, Lady Esther Face Cream goes to work on the imbedded dirt and waste matter. It dissolves it—breaks it up—and makes it easily removable. In a fraction of the usual time, your skin is thoroughly clean.

Cleansed perfectly, your pores can again function freely—open and close as Nature intended. Automatically then, they reduce themselves to their normal small size and you no longer have anything like conspicuous pores.

Lubrication, Also

As Lady Esther Face Cream cleanses the skin, it also lubricates it. It resupplies it with a fine oil that overcomes dryness and keeps the skin soft and smooth.

Make a test on your face of Lady Esther Face Cream. See for yourself how thoroughly it cleans out the pores. Mark how quickly your pores come down in size when relieved of their choking burden. Note the new life and smoothness your skin takes on. One test will tell you volumes.

See For Yourself!

Our Hollywood FRIVOLITIES!

UNIVERSAL recently selected three smart girls to play in a picture of the same name. And Warner Brothers have just found, after looking high and low, the dumbest gal in the country. For a brief while Hollywood was turned into a veritable shambles of intelligence tests and stuff.

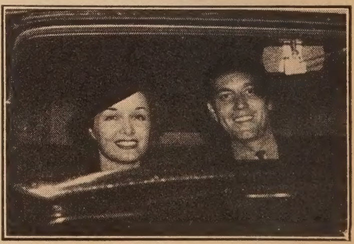
Of course, it's all over now, so don't crowd, girls! But it was exciting enough, while it lasted, and more fun.

The crown of blanks for the dumbest dame went, without any quibbling, to Marie Wilson. (No relation!) And now, the Warner boys are wondering whether Marie was really born that way or if she's just smart enough to make it a good act.

For instance, on the King of Hockey set, Marie was supposed to walk out of a scene, leaving the other members of the cast to carry on the action. She walked out all right, but, instead of sitting down quietly and cutting paper dolls or something, she turned around and walked back into the scene again!

"Hey!" the director yelled. "You've spoiled the shot! What are you doing, anyhow?"

"Nothing," Marie said innocently. "I just wanted to watch, that's all."



And now it's Gail Patrick and John King who are going 'round and 'round until the rumor comes out here that they're altar bound. He drives forty miles every evening to be with her—she's on location that far from Hollywood. What would you think?

Incidentally, it was just a year ago that Marie was giving her manager a big argument over the quality of her histrionic ability. She insisted she was a dramatic actress. Her manager was equally insistent that her best bet was comedy. It was a tough battle. But, after plucking a couple dozen gray hairs out of his toupée, the manager resignedly arranged for screen test that allowed his client to run the gamut of emotions, from A to B.

Unreeled in the projection room, the result was so funny that the operator got hysterics, the manager got high blood pressure, and Marie got a contract!

Maybe it's the McCoy. But we're more inclined to believe the gal is dumb . . . like a fox!

IT WAS Pinky Tomlin's birthday. And, because Pinky was tied up at the Orpheum, where he was making a personal appearance, the gang decided to surprise him by attending the theatre, en masse, and handing a huge birthday cake up over the footlights, by way of wishing their pal many happy returns.

To simplify the transportation problem, Pinky's manager chartered a City bus and, at a given time, the gang climbed aboard and set out merrily enough for the theater. Cake and all.

Pulling up at a traffic stop, the birthday party noticed a bewildered pedestrian signalling frantically for the driver to open the door. The driver shook his head, it being a

★★★ Good Entertainment
★★ Not Bad
★ Ho Hum!

Ruth Chatterton and Walter Huston give the finest performances of the season in Dodsworth, a brilliant picture

Rosalind Russell is a suspicious, mean, selfish wife to John Boles in Craig's Wife

Appealing and tender are love scenes between Loretta Young and Don Ameche in Ramona, produced in color

By Florence Johnson

Dodsworth

IT WAS a swell story, and even Author Sinclair Lewis couldn't find fault with the way it has been adapted for the screen. Walter Huston, as an indulgent American husband, gives one of the best performances of his . . . of anyone's . . . career! Ruth Chatterton is his giddy, selfish wife, trying to ward off advancing middle-age by a series of spurious love affairs with Continental gallants. (Two orchids to Paul Lukas, please, for his depiction of one of these gentlemen who kissed and ran). Then there's Mary Astor, much more than adequate as the wandering expatriate, seeking vainly and unselfishly for a reason to live. She finds it in Walter Huston . . . and when the errant wife discovers that her latest "fiancé" will never be her husband, the situation takes on the elements of high drama. This is beautifully, honestly, unmelodramatically done. Don't miss it.—Produced by Sam Goldwyn.

Craig's Wife
★★★½

THIS is Columbia's picturization of the prize winning stage play, and it's a job well done. Rosalind Russell plays the part of Craig's wife . . . and she succeeds in making herself thoroughly detestable as a selfish, grasping woman whose schemes for her own security eventually result in gaining her that security . . . and losing her everything else in the world, including her friends, her niece, and her husband. John Boles, as the "romantic fool" of a husband turns out a performance that in no way suggests any kind of a fool at all. Personally, we wonder how Miss Russell could possibly have the heart to be cruel to anyone like Mr. Boles. But the play's the thing. Billie Burke, Dorothy Wilson, and the rest of the cast detract nothing from its merit—Produced by Columbia.

Ramona
★★★½

YOU'LL probably cry when you see this—and you should!—but you'll be glad you didn't miss it for it's a genuine work of art and a fine piece of entertainment. Filmed in color, this version of Helen Hunt Jackson's famous novel, is entirely unlike the conventional kind of film drama. It begins with a mood of great gayety and descends into tragedy—ending with a funeral. Loretta Young is charming as the girl reared in an aristocratic Spanish household in early California days. She marries Indian Don Ameche, becomes an outcast, but is nevertheless supremely happy. To speed medicine to their ailing child, he takes a horse—without permission, and is killed by John Carridine. It is a remarkably keen scene, perfectly acted. Pauline Frederick is magnificent as Kent Taylor's mother, Loretta's foster-mother, who reveals that the girl beloved by her son is part Indian. Taylor, Jane Darwell, Katherine de Mille as a fiery servant in love with Ameche, Ameche himself and the rest of the cast are skillful. The preview audience exclaimed at the loveliness of some of the color scenes. Natural color photography is much improved—but not yet perfect.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Frank Morgan and Shirley Temple are at their brightest in Dimples

One of the film's funniest men, Arthur Treacher, makes Thank You, Jeeves, a comedy hit. Virginia Fields is the girl

Bob Burns and Martha Raye join a bunch of lunatics in a radio station, and therefrom results The Big Broadcast of 1937

The Big Broadcast of 1937

"EVERYTHING happens to me," says Jack Benny plaintively—and not the least of those things is Gracie Allen, who is at her looniest and best. But then so is the rest of the cast who clown through this year's edition of Big Broadcast, scattering laughs, music and romance where they'll do the most good. Think of Benny, Gracie, George Burns, Martha Raye, Bob Burns, Ray Milland, Shirley Ross, Sam ("Schlepperman") Hearn, Bennie Fields, Frank Forest and a scintillating flock of dancers and entertainers let loose one picture. Then there's Benny Goodman's hot swing band. Wonderfully effective was the insertion of a Bach number by Leopold Stokowski and his symphony group. The setting is a radio station, of which Benny is manager. Gracie wants a program to advertise her golf balls. The whole piece pokes fun at behind-the-microphone activities. Bob Burns' best scene is his blundering interruption of the prim, spinsterish lady broadcasting advice to the lovelorn. Martha Raye goes to town with a musical number. Jack Benny emerges as a romantic fellow. He's good—and so is Ray Milland. It's a whale of a show!—Produced by Paramount.

GARY COOPER Meets Calamity!

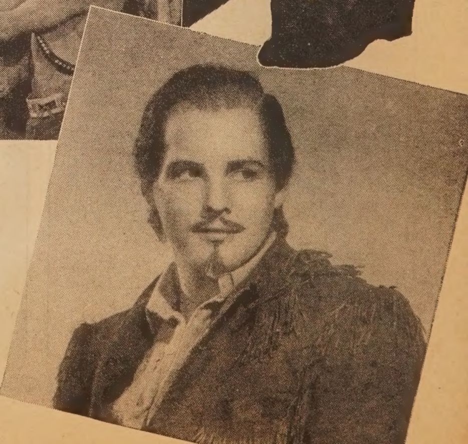
Out where men are men and the woman in the case is Calamity Jane, The Plainsman comes to life

He loves her—but he'd die rather than let her know it. Jean Arthur and Gary, in The Plainsman, portray two of the most colorful characters in American history: Calamity Jane and Wild Bill Hickock

Gary, as the most famous peace officer of the wild and woolly West, gets orders from John Miljan, here effectively disguised as General Custer

IT HAS long been director DeMifle's ambition to film the colorful story of Buffalo Bill. The longer he researched into this period of the West, the more Wild Bill Hickock kept elbowing Buffalo Bill out of the limelight. So Wild Bill is the principal character in The Plainsman. Montana-born Gary Cooper portrays Bill, another lad from the same territory plays Buffalo Bill. There will be no fictionized incidents in this great screen story—it will be history of the kind that ups the blood pressure. Part of the action was filmed in Montana, and part of the action filmed in and about Hollywood. The thousand Indian warriors summoned on Montana location brought their squaws and papooses with them—which complicated Paramount's feeding problem. None of them had seen cameras with their sound cables. About these the Indians crowded curiously, calling them "picture boxes" and "talk rope." Capt. Jim Moore, only surviving eye-witness to the assassination of Hickock at Deadwood in 1876, acted as technical director. DeMille, directing the Hollywood scenes, kept in constant touch by private telephone wire with location director Rosson, whose technical crew was vaccinated against spotted fever, the sickness-producing bite of ticks, grasshoppers, etc.



And then came the Indians!—to capture Calamity Jane and Wild Bill. Nearly 1,000 Cheyenne braves whooped it up to provide a bloodcurdling re-enactment of the mass slaughter of Custer's valiant army. Right, James Ellison is Buffalo Bill. He is a Montanan who was brought up on anecdotes concerning this thrilling tale of the West

STORM over LEE TRACY

The boat almost sank, the emergency radio never did work—but nothing could spoil the appetites of Lee and his pal, Lou Yanarelli

By

Dell Hogarth

Want to cruise to Honolulu on Lee's yacht? It'll be an eventful journey! Hop aboard . . .

LEE TRACY isn't exactly a profane man but he knows a few choice words. He used 'em all, in every pitch of a disgusted and angry voice, when he sailed his yacht in the recent annual race to Honolulu. His crew, now that they're safely ashore, laughingly relate how he swore his way over and most of the stormy way back. That, to be sure, is but friendly exaggeration. But regardless of the colorful way Lee expresses himself they all agree the cause was justified. The radio would never work.

This log of 5,000 miles in a small boat becomes, you will discover, the story of a temperamental radio. It was a jinx from the start, as uncommunicative as Garbo when they needed it desperately, and recovered, finally, to play an exciting rôle in the only drama of its kind to happen at sea.

There was that never-to-be-forgotten night, for example, when Lee piled out of his bunk to discover the Adoree was sinking. It was 4 a. m. He had just been awakened to take his turn at the wheel. As he stood in the gloom of his cabin, rubbing sleep from his eyes, he became conscious of a peculiar motion he had never experienced before—a sluggish roll with a [Continued on page 72]

Bob Taylor's BATTLE for SELF-RESPECT!

By Katharine
Hartley

This is the story of a strange situation—and gives you the inside on what this business of being a movie star really means to the nation's newest rave

Bob is refusing flatly to have his name mentioned in connection with Garbo's except professionally. Here they are in a scene from Camille

THERE is a new force to the Taylor walk . . . a new push to the Taylor shoulders. A new, thoughtful authoritative tone to his voice. A new watchfulness in his eyes. It isn't conceit, or putting on airs, or demanding the best for the best. It's Bob Taylor's fight for self-respect!

Not so long ago Bob could be coaxed into most anything . . . most any part, most any interview, most any publicity picture. He didn't mind what gushy things they wrote about him in the papers; he didn't kick when he had to pose with freak celebrities; he didn't even complain when they asked him to make faces for "gag" pictures. But that was before he realized the magnitude of his fame. Now that he does—and he would be a ninny not to—he has suddenly put his foot down on all frothy Ballyhoo. In gaining the glitter of stardom he has determined not to lose any of his self-respect as a man!

There are things like that which Bob must watch now if he is to keep any control at all over his destiny. The reputation of a star is the sum total of little things.

When Bob made a personal appearance at the Texas Centennial a few months ago, two very amazing things happened. Few people know about either of them, because Bob didn't want them known, and in his fight to keep them unknown, he won two very important advances in his battle. Had he given in easily he would have gone down in his own esteem.

The first incident occurred the afternoon of his arrival in Dallas. Protected by two six-feet-four Texas rangers, one on each side, he was making his way through the tunnel that led into the stadium where he was to be interviewed over a microphone, present the crown to the winner of the state beauty contest and later dance with her. Thirty-six thousand people inside breathlessly awaited his arrival . . . twice as many people as had turned out a few weeks before to hear President Roosevelt . . . 36,000 people who had paid from one to three dollars for admission.

The tunnel was jammed and it was slow moving. Contestants, contest winners, judges, officials, newspaper men, photographers, lined its walls. One official moved forward with a beautiful girl, the winner of the [Continued on page 84]

HOLLYWOOD'S GREATEST ROMANCE!

By

Marian Blackford

LI'L DANNY CUPID has taken Hollywood by storm. . . . It's been a year, this 1936 that's ending now, wherein outstandingly as compared with other years, the screen's lovers have carried their make-believe romantics into reality—into their own lives, to equal and to out-romance the love stories they acted in. Look at them—

Dick Powell and Joan Blondell, honeymooning down in tropic seas as I write this; Maureen O'Sullivan and Johnny Farrow, steadfast through years of obstacles, finding happiness at last; Gene Raymond and Jeanette MacDonald, making ready for their wedding day—and the others, that you know: Bill Powell and Jean Harlow, Carole Lombard and Clark Gable, Bob Taylor, bringing a renewed happiness into Barbara Stanwyck's life—why, you can go on through 1936's record for countless romances, and each one seems deeper, richer, finer, greater than the others.

But let me point out now, one that hasn't had all the splendiferous ballyhoo of Gene and Jeanette; all the gossiping and peeping that surrounded Clark-and-Carole's; all the fuss and dither of Dick's marriage to Joan—yet one which, to my mind as I see the inside story of it, is somehow sweeter, stronger, lovelier than so many of those others. It is the love story of adorable Ann Sothern and of stalwart Roger Pryor—the story of a love that swept aside obstacles and doubts and criticism and bitterness, that survived gloriously the dangers that beset and wreck other Hollywood romances—separation, evil tongues, "other men" and "other women," and that has just culminated in not "just another Hollywood wedding," but a wedding at which all Hollywood stood on the sidelines and cheered.

Before one of Hollywood's best-known pastors, in a church he specially threw open at that hour for these two lovers, Ann Sothern and Roger Pryor stood at a minute past midnight one Sunday morning, and whispered the vows which made them man and wife.

In all Hollywood, I haven't heard

To carry out tradition Ann wore six-year-old blue shoes, borrowed a hanky from Joan

Papa Dionne, who has made big-business out of his souvenir stand and his personal autograph, believes in office hours. Ten clamoring tourists begged him to sign—at the usual two-bits—but it was five o'clock and Papa was weary. Two-fifty went into the ash-can, just like that. And two years ago it represented the profit on a great, great many bushels of potatoes.

Shortly after the Twentieth Century-Fox troupe arrived, the night was enlivened by a fracas between Mme. Legros, one of the Quint midwives, and her business manager, over the birth-basket. Mme. Legros wanted to take that first crib home with her; the manager insisted that it remain at their partnership souvenir stand, as a business-getter. Result—sounds in the night, contusions and abrasions. Mme. Legros has the basket—but the gossip is that the original clothes hamper

Jean Hersholt, Dorothy Peterson, playing in 20th Century-Fox's Reunion, starring the Quints; Dr. Dafoe himself, and Reporter Sonia Lee, on location in Callander

What MOVIES to the

CALLANDER, Ontario, Canada, October, 1936.

For three weeks I have watched the Dionne Quintuplets before Hollywood's cameras!

And for three weeks I have hunted for the answer to the question are the movies helping the Quints?

Emilie, Yvonne, Cecile, Marie and Annette live in a world made-to-order for them. They are cloistered, guarded, watched more closely than royal children. They see only the familiar faces of their nurses, the Hospital staff and of Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe—the sturdy, stocky, remarkable Country Doctor who has achieved fame as saviour of the Quints.

What effect, then, would this intrusion of Hollywood into their privacy, would the intrusion of these strangers with their cameras and microphones have on these five babies?

Outside the grounds of the Dafoe Hospital for the Dionne Quintuplets, the world clamors. As this is written, fifteen thousand people, six abreast, are lined up for a mile and a half waiting for that brief sixty minutes during which the babies are on display in their playground. Thousands have been waiting since dawn—waiting for the clock to point to nine-thirty when the line begins to move forward!

Automobiles, heavy-laden with camping outfits, with the dust of unpaved roads, with the marks of thousands of miles of travel, are parked two and a half miles from the turnstiles through which the visitors pass.

It is not only today—nor yesterday—that such mobs have descended on this backwoods shrine for a momentary glimpse of the wonder five. They have come all the past year to this one-time wilderness in an ever-increasing caravan.

Science says that each little girl is a potential mother of quintuplets!

When the thermometer stood at twenty below zero they came! When the roads were awash with the heavy spring rains they continued coming, fighting their way through obstacles to pass before the windows behind which the Quints were playing!

Now that the woods are etched in startling reds and deep scarlets—there is no decrease in the descending hundreds.

Will acting in pictures help or hurt the famous Dionne babies? Here's the answer to a moot question, written by SCREEN BOOK'S on-the-spot reporter, Sonia Lee

IN A large measure Hollywood is responsible for the popular interest and almost hysterical curiosity about these babies. The Country Doctor, their first picture, brought vividly to the public mind the miracle of their birth and their living.

The excursion of the Quints into pictures has unquestionably nourished the world's wonder—and added to the many problems of their development and their future which even now faces the government-appointed Board of Guardians.

Dr. Dafoe currently is interested only in the babies' health and their normal growth. When he thinks of the years to come, he thinks of them in terms of privacy, of education, of intellectual advantages which he wants the children to have.

Paradoxically enough, while the screen in a measure has destroyed their privacy, it has yet made it possible for them to purchase isolation if necessary—to keep themselves separate from the curious prying eyes of the world.

At present the Quints have to their credit nearly half a million dollars. Part of that came from advertising contracts, from newspaper pictures, from the official story of their birth and their survival. The rest motion pictures have contributed. The Five Dionnes received fifty thousand dollars for their first picture. Their present three-picture contract, of which Reunion is the first, brought into their treasury an additional quarter million as a guarantee of their share of picture profit on a ten per cent basis.

Money will pour into the Quint coffers as fast or as slowly as the Guardians deem it wise. None of them consider great wealth desirable for the Quints—but they do want enough to buy freedom from care and the necessity of future exploitation for the little girls.

"THE only privacy the Quints will ever have is the privacy they buy," declares Dr. Dafoe. "They now have almost enough money to assure them of every advantage, of the proper sort of education, of the right sort of care. We don't want them to have too much money. It isn't necessary and it won't be good for them. Eventually we'll build a school adjoining the Nursery-Hospital. They'll have the finest education available, and each one of them will be given a chance to develop whatever talent or inclination is evidenced as she grows older.

"I want them to be happy children, fine young women. I want their lives to be as simple, as normal, as possible. They will always be a curiosity. That is inevitable. But at least they'll have the means to avoid it in a large measure if they want to do so as they grow older."

And so financially, Hollywood has served its purpose!

Honorable David A. Croll, Minister of Public [Continued on page 64]

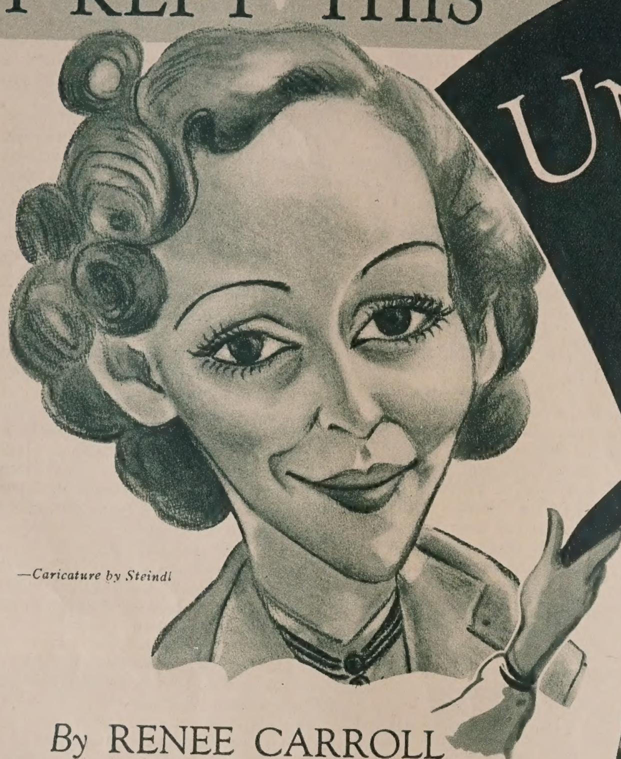
I KEPT THIS UNDER MY HAT!



—Caricature by Steindl

By RENEE CARROLL

America's most famous hat check girl, from Sardi's

As told to Dorothy Lubou

ACTORS are gregarious. They must have a favorite haunt where they can dine, wine, see and be seen. In Hollywood, it's the Brown Derby. In New York, it's Sardi's.

I've been checking hats and acting as unofficial greeter at Sardi's for ten years. It's been a unique experience. I've been kissed by the handsome heroes I sigh over on the screen—and wondered why those kisses look as though they should feel different!

Maybe the fact that their wives are at their elbows during their great big hello for Carroll has something to do with it. A kiss is a natural form of greeting in show business. Sharing a sandwich and a confidence with Gary Cooper or Leslie Howard hasn't made me less eager to see their latest pictures.

DON'T ever believe that your favorites are indifferent to your enthusiasm. They wouldn't be actors if applause wasn't more stimulating than champagne to them. Most of them are naively pleased over any form of flattery—if it's sincere.

Look what a fan letter did for Elaine Barrie! And Bob Armstrong married a girl who had seen him in a show and thought him simply wonderful—and couldn't she come backstage for just a teeny, weeny minute and meet him face to face . . .

Once my face got slightly pinkish while I was looking soulfully into Warner Baxter's eyes and assuring him that he was my supreme favorite. For Richard Dix was at my elbow snickering. The day before I had told him the very same thing.

Rich has a swell sense of humor. He pretended to be terribly hurt at my fickleness. But I explained that he was my pet actor

She knew all of today's most famous stars "When"— off screen, whereas Warner did things to me when I watched him in a picture. Dix was mollified. But he married his secretary soon after and I'm still single. So maybe it takes something else, too.

MARLENE DIETRICH ate her first meal on American soil under my curious stare. She had made an inauspicious entrance, alone, but not lonely. She concentrated her entire attention on her food. A heavy meal disappeared rapidly.

Her German-made film, The Blue Angel, had recently made a four-star appearance on Broadway. Stolid, broad-hipped, yet there was something about the foreign star that drew my interest. I addressed her before she left.

"Miss Dietrich, I've heard so many people remark that you look just like Jeanne Eagles . . . and Garbo . . ."

She withered me with a scornful glance.

"I do not care what they think I look like. I am Dietrich. I am alone." That was all.

I contrasted her manner with the shrinking timidity of Camilla Horn and Dorothea Wieck, her compatriots. They, too, had arrived with ballyhoo. But none too happily, they had stolen back to Germany . . .

TWO years later Dietrich made an Entrance. Fashionably slender, extravagantly furred, fresh from Hollywood's glamour factory. Every head turned. Every table buzzed. Every waiter stood at attention. Crowds had followed her all over town and were storming the doors. Autograph books were thrust wildly in her face, threatening the security of her incredible lashes.

Calmly she continued to her table, holding the hand of her flaxen-haired daughter. She removed little Maria's coat, hat and leggings herself. She kissed the child rapturously while she fed her, neglecting her own dinner. Never have I seen such genuine absorption in a child, such intense maternal solicitude.

She was altered in appearance in a way that was startling. I didn't believe she remembered me, but she approached me with an enigmatic smile before she left. She gestured toward the persistent fans.

"Well, was I right, what I told you two years ago? Look . . ."

She couldn't understand this frenzied adoration, she went on to say, but it was a symbol of American success. Every day she dropped in at noon and marvelled.

"IT IS not so in Europe, Renee," she mused. "There they see me on the screen, go home and forget my existence. I am nothing but an instrument through which they have been entertained. Here they ask am I a wife, a mother—like other women? See, I am hungry and must eat, and I am stared at like a freak."

I have watched her grow more beautiful with each succeeding visit, but never less friendly. I checked her mannish hat and overcoat when she first startled her friends and public with her masculine attire. Her favorite conversational topic was still little Maria, but she appeared to enjoy the furore created by her appearance.

ONE of these days I'm going in for a little heavy bookkeeping and figure up all the dimes Bob Montgomery owes me! Bob was a "regular" for years. Elizabeth Allen (not the movie star) was patiently waiting for Bob to propose and Bob was waiting for that Hollywood contract that is the dream of all stage juveniles. Bob's a confiding soul, and a "worrier."

Every time he came in looking like a lost soul, I wanted to put my arm on his shoulder and say "There, there, little boy." I knew he had just been turned down for a cherished rôle, or had had a discouraging screen test. Instead I would recall the most amusing occurrence of the day and get him to smiling again.

Since the day B. P. Schulberg had beckoned me to his table and inquired the identity of the wrenlike young girl across the room, and I had introduced him to Sylvia Sydney, appearing currently in Bad Girl, Bob had bobbed up every day, hoping to be discovered.

Sylvia had received a picture contract and was flourishing in Hollywood. Bill Gargan had collected Mary and the kiddie and wasn't doing so badly. Montgomery remained, watching producers gargle noodle soup. Like the gal in the song, Bob anticipated the moment when an important executive in an inspired moment, leaped to his feet, pointed a dramatic finger, and screamed, "I must have that man."

It had happened to Ricardo Cortez. And one or two others. But there was nothing outstanding about Bob. A nice looking boy, with an ingratiating smile that grew rather strained after a time.

"WHAT'S wrong with this face, Carroll?" Bob asked once, despairingly. He gave me a profile. He smote his chest resoundingly. "Anything wrong with that?"

I assured him that he had nice shoulders and a nice face. In fact, if it weren't for Elizabeth . . . In fact, I had to like a fellow pretty well to keep smiling after he continued to repeat, "On the cuff, Renee, my girl" . . . after I'd looked after his hat so nicely and tenderly . . .

Bob's still one of my old faithfuls whenever he's in the East. I can't ever believe the occasional rumors that seep our way as to domestic difficulties in the Montgomery menage.

They love to reminisce over that great day when they dashed in, breathless.

"Bob's passed a screen test . . . we're leaving for Hollywood . . . and oh, yes . . . we're married . . ." they had shouted in unison.

And I'm still on the cuff!

The MEN in Kay Francis' LIFE!

"What happened to Kay's marriages?" is an oft-asked question. Here is the answer—and the reason all men pay tribute to her

By Frances Kellum

—Rhodes

It is rumored that Kay is secretly married to writer Delmar Daves. She never is seen in the company of another man

SLOWLY he kissed her . . .

He had been kissing her for two hours. Each time more rapturously, until the fifteenth kiss stirred the cockles of your heart—and awakened old dreams . . .

Then the director called, "Cut. We'll print that one!"

Kay Francis slid out of George Brent's arms and they smiled at each other. How do stars feel after such a love scene that has lasted through fifteen "takes?" I wondered. And then I heard Kay say in that rich, throbby voice of hers, "D'you suppose we could send the prop boy out for some ice cream? I'd like vanilla."

Everybody laughed. And "props" trotted off. With a single gesture Kay had swung the tempo back to normal. She hasn't an ounce of the coquet in her. Just as George Brent told me later, "Kay is one of the few women I know who speaks a man's language. He gets from her the same firm, steady friendship he gets from other men—and yet she's so deeply feminine along with it."

Perhaps that is the secret of her fascination. Certainly men adore this Kay Francis. And she—

"Everything I have been or hope to be I owe to men," she said simply. "They have helped me in my life far more than women have. I've been fortunate in many things—and I'm grateful for them. But most of all I have been fortunate in the men I have known."

A REMARKABLE statement coming from a woman who has suffered so much through love and marriage! But Kay has no regrets. "I learned too much from them. To a great extent I think it's the men she comes in contact with who shape a woman's outlook and even her personality. There was Peter, for instance."

He was the first one who had a distinct bearing on Kay's life and, until now, he's remained [Continued on page 86]

CLEVER WOMEN Don't GROW OLD!

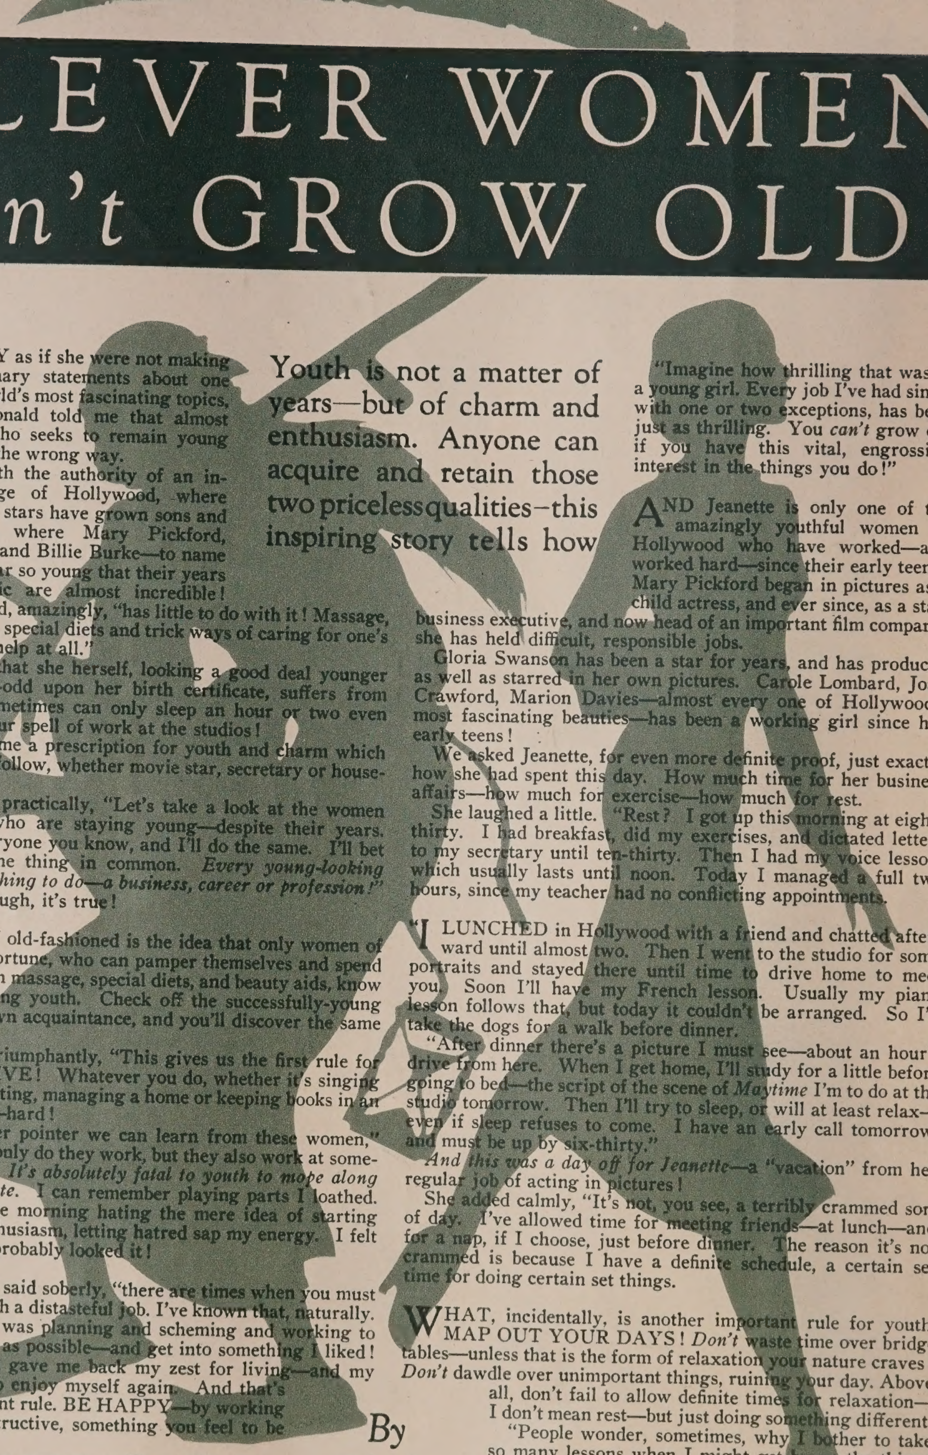
Youth is not a matter of years—but of charm and enthusiasm. Anyone can acquire and retain those two priceless qualities—this inspiring story tells how

By Mark Dowling



AS CALMLY as if she were not making revolutionary statements about one of the world's most fascinating topics, Jeanette MacDonald told me that almost every woman who seeks to remain young goes about it in the wrong way.

She spoke with the authority of an intimate knowledge of Hollywood, where many glamorous stars have grown sons and daughters, and where Mary Pickford, Gloria Swanson and Billie Burke—to name just three—appear so young that their years before the public are almost incredible!

"Rest," she said, amazingly, "has little to do with it! Massage, special exercises, special diets and trick ways of caring for one's skin can hardly help at all."

She admitted that she herself, looking a good deal younger than the twenty-odd upon her birth certificate, suffers from insomnia and sometimes can only sleep an hour or two even after a twelve-hour spell of work at the studios!

And she gave me a prescription for youth and charm which any woman may follow, whether movie star, secretary or housewife.

She said first, practically, "Let's take a look at the women we both know who are staying young—despite their years. You think of everyone you know, and I'll do the same. I'll bet our lists have one thing in common. Every young-looking woman has something to do—a business, career or profession!"

Amazingly enough, it's true!

DEFINITELY old-fashioned is the idea that only women of leisure and fortune, who can pamper themselves and spend time and money on massage, special diets, and beauty aids, know the secret of lasting youth. Check off the successfully-young women of your own acquaintance, and you'll discover the same startling fact!

Said Jeanette triumphantly, "This gives us the first rule for youth. BE ACTIVE! Whatever you do, whether it's singing for the screen, writing, managing a home or keeping books in an office, work at it—hard!

"There's another pointer we can learn from these women," she added. "Not only do they work, but they also work at something they enjoy. It's absolutely fatal to youth to mope along doing jobs you hate. I can remember playing parts I loathed. I'd wake up in the morning hating the mere idea of starting out, losing my enthusiasm, letting hatred sap my energy. I felt old as time—and probably looked it!

"I'LL grant," she said soberly, "there are times when you must go through with a distasteful job. I've known that, naturally. But all the time I was planning and scheming and working to finish it as quickly as possible—and get into something I liked!

"That very idea gave me back my zest for living—and my youth! I began to enjoy myself again. And that's the second important rule. BE HAPPY—by working at something constructive, something you feel to be good for you!"

She paused for a moment, smiling. "Don't you believe the secret of youth can be so simple? I've worked ever since I was fourteen years old. I had two jobs at first—one in school and the other dancing in a chorus.

"Imagine how thrilling that was to a young girl. Every job I've had since, with one or two exceptions, has been just as thrilling. You can't grow old if you have this vital, engrossing interest in the things you do!"

AND Jeanette is only one of the amazingly youthful women of Hollywood who have worked—and worked hard—since their early teens! Mary Pickford began in pictures as a child actress, and ever since, as a star, business executive, and now head of an important film company, she has held difficult, responsible jobs.

Gloria Swanson has been a star for years, and has produced as well as starred in her own pictures. Carole Lombard, Joan Crawford, Marion Davies—almost every one of Hollywood's most fascinating beauties—has been a working girl since her early teens!

We asked Jeanette, for even more definite proof, just exactly how she had spent this day. How much time for her business affairs—how much for exercise—how much for rest.

She laughed a little. "Rest? I got up this morning at eight-thirty. I had breakfast, did my exercises, and dictated letters to my secretary until ten-thirty. Then I had my voice lesson, which usually lasts until noon. Today I managed a full two hours, since my teacher had no conflicting appointments.

"I LUNCHED in Hollywood with a friend and chatted afterward until almost two. Then I went to the studio for some portraits and stayed there until time to drive home to meet you. Soon I'll have my French lesson. Usually my piano lesson follows that, but today it couldn't be arranged. So I'll take the dogs for a walk before dinner.

"After dinner there's a picture I must see—about an hour's drive from here. When I get home, I'll study for a little before going to bed—the script of the scene of Maytime I'm to do at the studio tomorrow. Then I'll try to sleep, or will at least relax—even if sleep refuses to come. I have an early call tomorrow, and must be up by six-thirty."

And this was a day off for Jeanette—a "vacation" from her regular job of acting in pictures!

She added calmly, "It's not, you see, a terribly crammed sort of day. I've allowed time for meeting friends—at lunch—and for a nap, if I choose, just before dinner. The reason it's not crammed is because I have a definite schedule, a certain set time for doing certain set things.

WHAT, incidentally, is another important rule for youth. MAP OUT YOUR DAYS! Don't waste time over bridge tables—unless that is the form of relaxation your nature craves! Don't dawdle over unimportant things, ruining your day. Above all, don't fail to allow definite times for relaxation—I don't mean rest—but just doing something different.

"People wonder, sometimes, why I bother to take so many lessons when I might get by on the things I know now. Without admitting that I would get by, I tell them that I enjoy learning new things. Sometimes the daily French lesson itself is tedious—but I'm amply repaid when I visit France and can do things and appreciate Gentle little Shirley was driven to tears, she stuck Kenneth with a fork, she pushed him into a barrel of water . . .

YOU couldn't imagine winning screen fame because Shirley Temple hated you, could you?

Yet that's exactly what happened to youthful Kenneth Howell.

Let's turn the clock back four years and peek behind the movie scenes when no motion picture studio would give Shirley Temple a screen contract, and blond Kenneth was a penniless lad with whom life had dealt not too kindly during his brief fifteen-year span.

Come with us behind the silver screen curtain and see how fate teamed this pair—see how little Miss Temple became America's sweetheart, the biggest drawing card in Filmtown—and Kenneth became a young man well on his way to fame.

A score of fine pictures has brought fame and fortune to Shirley, and pictures such as Every Saturday Night and Educating Father, in which Howell played a leading rôle, has brought screen renown to Kenneth in the years that have passed since these two children made their screen début in a two-reel comedy.

"I didn't know Shirley, hadn't ever heard her name before," said Kenneth as he sat in a camp chair on stage 19 at Universal Studios. He was there to work in Four Days Wonder with thirteen-year-old Jeanne Dante.

"That day I went to Educational Studios to beg them for a job—any kind of job. I was down to my last pair of socks. I had been in one picture before—Eagle and the Hawk at Paramount, but because I was made to look so young in my first screen effort, studios refused even to listen to me,

The Merry Life of TARZAN and HIS MATE!

WHAT the public has taken for a seething volcano is actually an idyllic romance. We speak of the Weissmuller-Velez merger which got off to a rollicking start four years ago.

In spite of what the world believes, these two are very happy. Easy-going Johnny, with his own firm beliefs—and Lupe, the fiery little Mexican madcap, live in harmony. It is not slow-paced, waltz time. They live in a broken, pulsating rhythm, a cross between jungle tom-toms and Mexican rhumbas.

"Sure, we have arguments," grins Johnny. "But we fight like brother and sister. Just because someone happens to be looking, we don't stop and save our anger until finding a quiet place to let it out. We get it over with, then forget it."

BUT these arguments are few and unimportant compared to the real understanding between the two. Each respects the other's interests. Professional jealousy has never entered their lives. Both are proud of what the other can do. In fact, each will boast about the other's achievements, before whispering about his own.

Johnny is particularly pleased with Lupe's proficiency as a housekeeper. "And what a cook!" he declares. "She can make anything. Mexican food, Chinese food, steaks, fish.

"When we go out on the boat, she does all the cooking. She learned her art first hand. During her travels she always calls on the chefs at hotels where she stops."

Both Tarzan and his mate have the wanderlust. They can't stay in one place very long. That's why they bought a boat. Whenever they have a chance, they go sailing up and down the coast on fishing trips. Often they take Bruce Cabot and Adrienne Ames along. Lupe is as good a fisherman as her husband, and won't hesitate when it comes to cleaning a fish. Johnny gleefully recounts how shocked a feminine guest aboardship became at the sight of Lupe's dressing a barracuda with her bare hands.

THEY have a delightful game, Johnny and Lupe. They are always getting each other surprises. If Johnny goes to the store to buy a sweater, he orders a small one exactly like it for Lupe. They have scarfs, slacks, coats, shoes and everything alike.

"I bought a yachting outfit the other day," confided Johnny recently. He was seated, an enormous bronzed figure on the sidelines of the Tarzan Escapes set, watching Maureen O'Sullivan rehearse a scene. He continued, "So I ordered one just like it for Lupe. It'll be a surprise when she gets back from London."

Asked why they tried to dress alike, Johnny answered simply, "To think of each other."

Lupe is forever getting Johnny something, too.

"She has an uncanny way of knowing the right sizes," says

Johnny Weissmuller's physique qualifies him to handle his weight in wildcats—even the Mexican variety

Johnny. "For instance, she'll shuffle around the house in a pair of my shoes, then go to a store and come back with a perfect fit for me just by trying them on!"

THE way Lupe determines Johnny's coat size is worth mentioning. She slips one of his great coats over her slim shoulders and bends her elbows out and upward. Where the elbows end the shoulders fit. So Lupe knows.

"Tailors think she's crazy, but the size is always perfect," beams Johnny.

Although their life is a merry one, the Weissmullers are fundamentally serious in their plans for future as well as present happiness. They are saving their earnings and have big plans.

"We have put ourselves on an allowance," Johnny confided. "Lupe gets twenty-five dollars a week and I get forty. And we make ourselves stay within that budget. We can't afford to go to the night clubs more than once a week. Twice a week we see the fights and the rest of the evenings take in a picture show. I make Lupe pay her half, too," said Johnny, his hazel eyes glinting gleefully.

"Once in a while, though, Lupe must have a bracelet or new car. This we call an 'extra occasion,' so allowances don't count then.

"We've had a lot of fun living on our little stipend," he continued, "and it gives me a fine excuse not to go dancing."

JOHNNY, we discovered, hates to go dancing, and here's why: "While I am working on Tarzan Escapes I have to keep my hair long. People think it's a gag and that I like to have it this way. I'm always getting fan mail about it. Some have even included a quarter in the letter, saying, 'Why don't you get your hair cut, you big gorilla?'

"So, knowing what they think, I'd rather stay home than go out. But Lupe loves to dance and I have to break down and go. But when I do, I won't get up and dance and Lupe gets mad. Can you blame me?" asks Tarzan. "When I'm always hearing cracks like 'put him back in the cage—we'd rather see him there.' Boy, it makes me burn!"

Because they are building for the future, the Weissmuller's live very simply. They have no checking or charge accounts. Most of the time they have only one maid to look after the house when they aren't there. Their boat, they run themselves.

"They look after one another like brother and sister," Bruce Cabot, who has been their friend and intimate for many years, remarked, when asked how they got along. "Lupe insists that Johnny keep his training rules and, above all, his appointments with his voice and diction teacher. On the other hand, if Lupe starts gaining too much weight Johnny teases her until she loses it. And he insists that she get places on time. Lupe would always be late if he didn't."

But Lupe has ways of getting around her famous husband's decisions. Here they are romancing at fashionable Playa Ensenada Hotel in Mexico

LUPE'S being late is the source of most of the friction in the Weissmuller family. "Say we're going to the fights," says Johnny. "Lupe takes hours to get ready. She loves to lounge around the house in old clothes, but when she goes out everything must be right. I get fidgety and start nagging, blame her for making me late. Pretty soon we have an argument. Then it's over in a couple of minutes and all is well."

If Lupe has to catch a plane, which is frequently the case, inasmuch as she's traveling the greater part of the time, it takes the combined efforts of Johnny and [Continued on page 67]

WOLF, Wolf!

By

Edward Arnold

As told to Richard Harding

When Edward Arnold was a boy in the Bowery, that spectral animal camped on his doorstep. But he was a wise child—he ate it! And look at him now!!

Arnold at a tender age, when he was getting his theatrical start

I REMEMBER, all too well, the lean years of my childhood, my youth and early manhood—and that is why I refuse to play the customary Hollywood game of spend-it-as-fast-as-you-get-it! Stalin is not the only one who has his Five Year Plan, for Mamma Arnold and I have one, too!

I still wake up in the night and hear the sounds of my childhood, in a dreary old Houston Street tenement, on the lower East Side in New York! I can still hear the screams of women and the drunken, brutal curses of men! Those are sounds which the ears of my three children will never hear, if any effort of mine can prevent it! That is why I live according to the rules of our Five Year Plan.

My real name, as you probably know by this time, is Guenther Schneider. I am not ashamed of my age so I will reveal my birth date, February 18, 1890. I played my first stage rôle at the age of twelve, in an amateur performance of The Merchant of Venice. I have been of the stage and picture world, ever since, with two or three brief interludes which are unimportant.

I suppose you will put me down as a penny-snatcher or a nickel-grabber—a man who is earning more than $100,000 a year, yet refuses to pay more than $125 a month house rent! I suppose you can't imagine a Hollywood movie star who refuses to buy a car costing more than $1,600 and who doesn't play polo, golf, tennis, bridge and who cannot ride a horse, swim or even catch fish! And who does not even try to learn. You see, the Hollywood game is not the only one I do not know how to play!

Some day, when my Five Year Plan is finished, I shall play! I shall do my playing in places of which I have so far only read. I shall learn to hit a golf ball on my own private golf course, and to ride a horse on my private bridle path, so that no loafers can laugh when I make a slice or fall off the horse! But that time hasn't come and I shall not begin my playing until I know for certain that there is money enough safely invested to keep the wolf from my door forever and that the old, dreary, weary lean years are gone, never to return!

I find it difficult to talk about myself. When I started on my picture, Come and Get It, for Samuel Goldwyn, a publicity man came out to my house to get what he calls copy! I'm afraid I am anything but copy. I seldom drink anything stronger than beer but to make the publicity man feel at home, I sent out for a quart of Scotch. He took a drink, smiled and said to me:

"And now, Mr. Arnold, we'll get some pictures of you in polo costume! After that, we'll shoot

GLORIA STUART

CHANT

You are gone now. But I am here.
Saying goodbye you caressed my face
That I should feel the warm strength
Of your hands, trembling wonder of them.

Saying goodbye, they covered my ears
That I should not hear the slow moan
In your throat, throbbing stillness of it.

Saying goodbye, they blinded my eyes
That I should not see the dark deeps
In your eyes, haunting shadows of them.

Saying goodbye, you kissed me close
That I should know the near truth
Of your lips, trembling wonder of them.
You are gone now. But I am here.

ALL AROUND THE TOWN

San Francisco street cars are white-faced goats.
Their bright eyes pierce the sodden fog.
Their noses smell out food; their mouths devour it; their sides disgorge it.
They eat up hats and furs and gloves, spats and flowers, canes and bundles.

San Francisco street cars are white-faced goats.
Their hooves grate and spark.
They leap along the narrow tracks and climb high hills.
They play tag and hiding games; they poke white faces over tops of hills, and run around corners squealing.

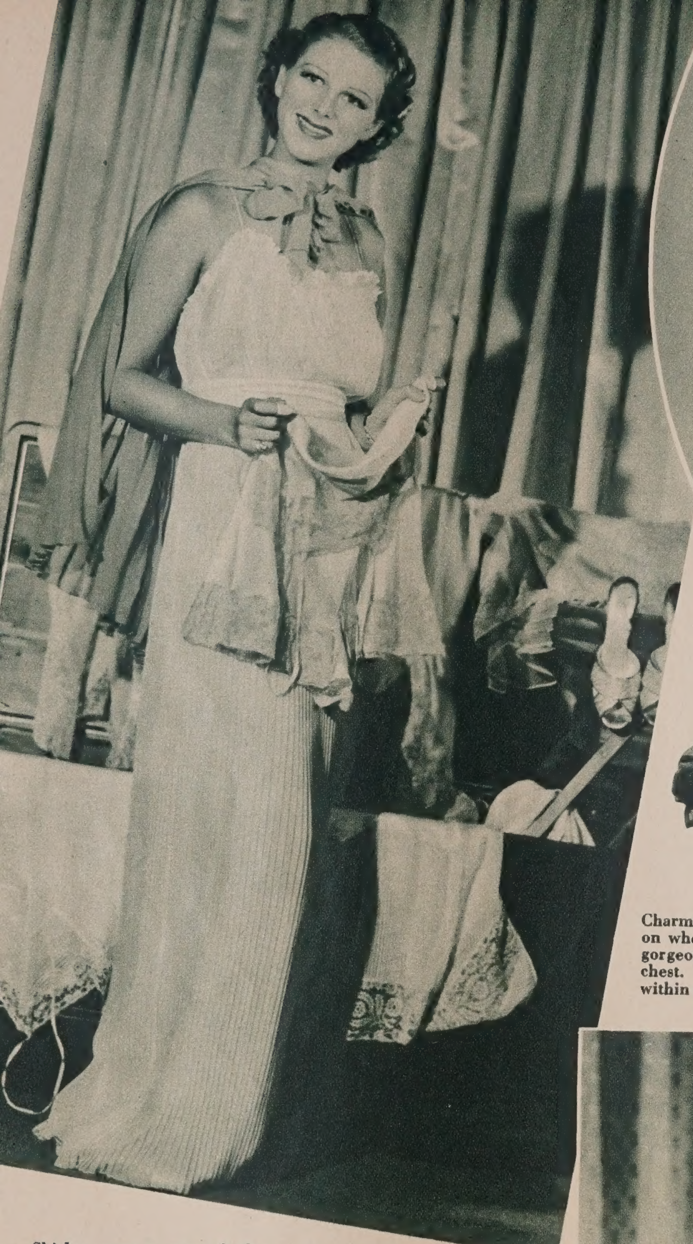
Charming 20th Century-Fox player, Shirley Deane, meditates on whether or no to destroy all evidence. She is attired in a gorgeous silver lame hostess gown seated before her hope chest. Her beautiful trousseau has been tenderly confined within this mahogany finished, solid cedar lined chest designed by Lane Co., Inc.



Shirley wears a smart finely pleated pink chiffon negligee made with square neck held in place by tiny silver straps. A brief pleated cape in a contrasting shade of pink ties in a soft bow at the neckline. Shirley is carefully folding and putting away dainty lingerie of all kinds

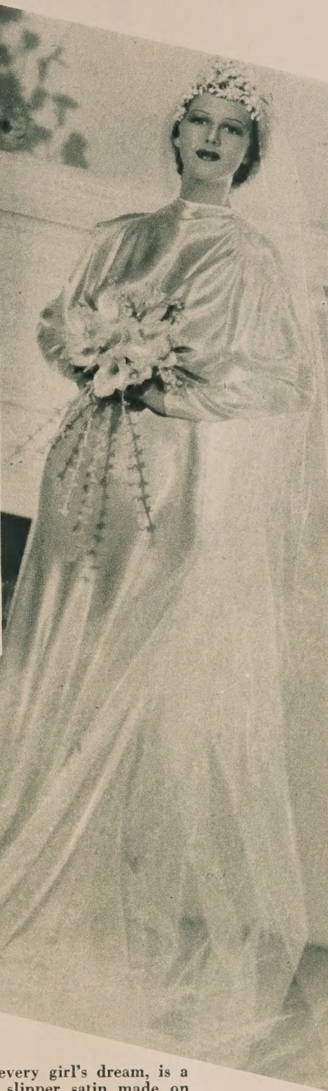
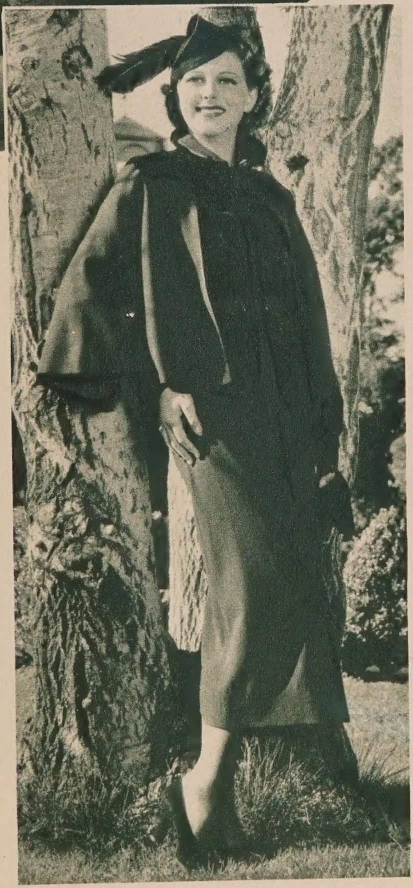
For street wear and the smart luncheon date Shirley chooses a henna wool cape ensemble with vest effect and collar of brown lapin. A hat in the same shade sports a jaunty brown quill and brown suede accessories complete her outfit



The wedding gown, the ultimate to every girl's dream, is a gorgeous affair in a heavenly blush slipper satin made on medieval lines with dolman sleeves. The head-dress is an old-fashion cluster of orange blossoms that hold the tulle veil in place. Shirley's wedding bouquet is fashioned of white gladioli blossoms, lily of the valley and showers of stephenotis



The travel costume, just the thing for so many occasions, is a novelty rough surface woolen in the popular aubergine shade. A one-piece dress is complemented by a short box jacket fur trimmed. A round bunch of double Gerberia is placed at the left shoulder. Shirley wears a brown velour hat with a bird perched on top

He's Not A Villain At Home!

Unusual for the beauty of complete understanding is the marriage of Ouida Bergere and Basil Rathbone, who this year celebrated their tenth wedding anniversary. Here they are in their home, with three of the five household dogs

By Mrs. Basil Rathbone

As told to Grace Mack

NEEDLESS to say, the Basil Rathbone I know resembles the man who played Murdstone and the lecherous butler in Private Number just about as much as Bluebeard resembled Little Lord Fauntleroy. The fact that he was able to make those rôles so realistic is of course a tribute to his ability as an actor. That they are foreign to everything he is and everything that he stands for can best be illustrated by his own reaction to the playing of them.

For example: During the making of David Copperfield he came home from the studio one night looking white as a sheet.

"Whatever has happened?" I asked. "You look positively ill."

He sank down in a chair and put his head in his hands. "I have been through the most awful experience I ever had in my life," he said. "I spent the entire day whipping a little boy! And I'm going to tell you something Ouida. No amount of money in the world is enough to ever make me do a thing like that again."

And that is typical of the Basil Rathbone I know. To hurt a human being or an animal deliberately is, to him, unthinkable.

We have five dogs of our own. And his idea of a per- [Continued on page 88]

SINCE the first Christmas when frankincense and myrrh were the world's most precious offerings, men of all centuries have borrowed from the wisdom of the Magi in selecting gifts of rare fragrance.

What better place then than the cosmetic department of I. Magnin's for Jimmy Blakeley, Paul Kelly and Earl Blackwell to do their early Christmas shopping! That's where I discovered them recently, sniffing appreciatively and choosing lavishly from the glitter-

THANKSGIVING or CHRISTMAS—Here's the Salad to Serve!

When gelatin is slightly firm, Marian adds a layer of fruit

by Joan Davis

"If you could only cook" will never be said to Marian Marsh. Wait until you've tried her holiday salad!

ONCE more we marvel about the wonders worked by that funny thing called love! Of course, we all know it makes the world go 'round and sends its victims about in a daze until they shouldn't be allowed to cross the streets alone.

But Marian Marsh has proven love can do even more. It can make dainty little film stars brave the dangers of burned fingers, flushed complexions over dismal failures on the stove, and a few minor cuts. All to reach an important goal—proof that they will make almost perfect wives—through the medium of a delicious cake, original salad or whatever is triumphantly carried forth from the kitchen.

If you don't believe it works, you other brides-to-be should see the light of appreciation that shines in Al Scott's eyes (he's the lucky fellow who recently was chosen by Marian to place one of the most beautiful diamonds I have ever seen on that finger). It's the same glow that leaps into being when Marian makes an exceptional tennis serve or a thrilling horse jump, two accomplishments the actress already has to her credit.

Marian gave me a delicious recipe she had worked out for a salad chock full of the holiday spirit—even to the extent of tiny cranberry bouquets for decorations. Busy as a bee taking final scenes for Come Closer, Folks, Marian managed to give me the details.

"It has always seemed to me salads were rather [Continued on page 58]

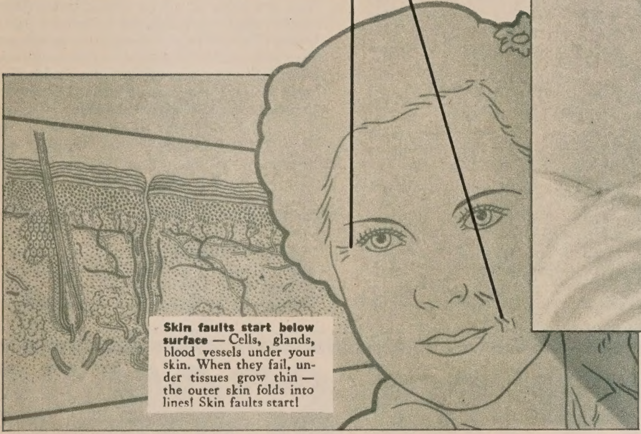
LINES SAY "over 30!"



Skin faults start below surface — Cells, glands, blood vessels under your skin. When they fail, under tissues grow thin — the outer skin folds into lines! Skin faults start!

Miss Esther Brooks, much admired in New York this past winter, says: "Pond's Cold Cream takes every speck of dirt out of my pores, keeps my skin clear of blackheads."

A Sign that UNDER TISSUES are Shrinking!

THOSE mean little lines that creep in around your eyes, your mouth . . . You are only 25. But people see them—"She's every bit of thirty!"

Or, you are over thirty . . . but not a sign of a line. And everybody takes you for years younger than you are—"Not a day over 20!"

Do you know what those same little lines say to a dermatologist? He sees right through them to the under layers of your skin, and says: "It's the under tissues at fault!"

Keep away Blackheads, Blemishes —with Under Skin treatment

Skin faults are not always a matter of years. Look at the skin diagram above. Those hundreds of tiny cells, glands, fibres under your skin are what really make it clear and satiny—or full of faults! Once they fail, skin faults begin. But keep them active—you can, with Pond's rousing "deep-skin" treatment—and your skin blooms fresh, line-free, as in your teens.

Pond's Cold Cream contains specially processed oils which reach deep into the pores. It floats out all the dirt, make-up, skin secretions that are starting to clog. Already, your skin looks fresher!

More . . . You pat this perfectly balanced cream briskly into your skin . . . Start the circulation pulsing, oil glands working freely.

Do this regularly—day after day. Before long, cloggings cease. Pores grow finer. Blackheads, blemishes go . . . And those myriads of little fibres strengthen! Your skin grows firm underneath—smooth, line-free outside, where it shows.

Mrs. Eugene du Pont III whose fresh, glowing skin just radiates youth and beauty, says: "Pond's Cold Cream freshens me up right away . . . It takes away that tired look and makes 'late-hour' lines fade completely."

Here's the simple Pond's way to win the clear, glowing skin that never tells of birthdays. Follow this treatment day and night.

Two things to remember

Every night, cleanse with Pond's Cold Cream. Watch it bring out all the dirt, make-up, secretions. Wipe it all off! . . . Now pat in more cream briskly. Rouse that failing underskin. Set it to work again—for that smooth, line-free skin you want.

Every morning, and during the day, repeat this treatment with Pond's Cold Cream. Your skin becomes softer, finer every time. Powder goes on beautifully.

Start in at once. The coupon below brings you a special 9-treatment tube of Pond's Cold Cream.

Today's Gossip

new contract at M-G-M and a grand part in Maytime. Of course we knew that digging down into her jeans didn't exactly break Joan, but it seems nice to know there is one star who isn't busy just looking out for herself.

Incidentally, and more along the humor line, Joan is being some sort of a problem to the flatfoots at her studio these days. Her beautiful black limousine has been put in the background for a snazzy chromium bicycle with so many gadgets that it makes you think of the new Cords. There are six different species of horns on the handlebars and the traffic officer on duty always has difficulty in deciding whether he is to make way for a Mack truck, an ice cream wagon or Miss Crawford. However, she conscientiously uses the correct traffic signals when she peddles around corners.

IT SEEMS the main barrier between the long-promised Merle Oberon-David Niven marriage is the fact that David is worried about being known as Mr. Merle Oberon and wants to wait until he has firmly established himself as an actor on his own. But Merle Oberon has confided to intimate friends that she and David Niven plan to wed and make their honeymoon a trip to the coronation of King Edward. It's rather sad that they cut his part so much in The Charge of the Light Brigade, but that's the custom in Hollywood, where there can be only one leading man in a picture and Captain Blood Flynn was to be that in that one. David is really one of the most ambitious boys in Hollywood—he decided in the middle of an army career that he wanted to be an actor and considering the late start he got, he's doing very well, and he'll keep on and let nothing stand in his way.

WHICH REMINDS US that Brian Aherne, working in the same picture, Love Under Fire—(title to be changed)—with Merle and David has done a complete turnabout in his attitude toward publicity. When he was at Metro several years ago he was "unapproachable." Writers visiting on the set were warned not even to speak to him, and today he is gaining a reputation as one of the most affable actors in town. He talks vivaciously, wittily and earnestly. The answer is, not that he has suddenly decided to cultivate Hollywood, for he has no intention of continuing his career here as a picture actor entirely. It's just that he is feeling a little more sure of himself and can at last take time off from learning picture technique, in which to be a little more sociable. A number of studios have tried to sign him on a contract but Brian is sincere in his wish to go back to the theatre for most of each year. Even the persuasive Mr. Thalberg could not win him over. During one of the sessions in which Irving was pointing out all the advantages of a contract, the Little Napoleon of Metro suddenly picked up the phone and called his wife, Norma Shearer. "Norma, I have exhausted all reasons why Brian should sign with us. He says he doesn't want picture fame. He wants only to work in the theatre. He says he doesn't need money. Now I want you to help me out by doing a little match-making. I want you to find an expensive wife for him, then maybe he'll have to stay in pictures to support her." Brian is still unmarried—he still refuses to sign more than one-picture contracts.

MYRNA LOY, who at one time spelled all the glamour of the Orient and then by portraying Bill Powell's Thin Man wife, became the wife-model for all men, is known to her fond husband as "Minnie." Sounds like the cook in a domestic comedy. Incidentally it's hard to realize that Myrna has any time at all in which to be domestic what with Libeled Lady and another Thin Man shooting, but she does run two homes at present—one in Beverly Hills and another at the fashionable Palos Verdes—and the Hornblow parties are the delight and envy of all.

MARLENE DIETRICH, during her tour abroad, has done right well by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

At her various ports of call she unfailingly signs the hotel registers: LA DIETRICH.

It is just possible that, before this picture is made Ginger may do a solo starring picture.

Her studio has bought Vivacious Lady, and, believe it or not, Ginger will not dance in the picture, not even one little toe spin.

GARBO SEEMS to have taken quite an interest in the primitive these days. Recently she requested a cameraman who had been with Murnau in the South Seas when Tabu was made, to show her photographs of that famous but plagued house which Murnau built on one of the small islands near Tahiti. She asked innumerable questions—the state of the house, and the price for which it might be purchased. This, on top of her purchase of a large estate in Sweden several months ago, suggests that Garbo is wavering. Retirement in the bleak coldness of the north, or in the torrid heat of the south seas. Seems that Garbo's ice is destined to melt.

And by the way, Garbo is the one woman who doesn't allow Bob Taylor to turn her head—no, not even to watch him admiringly as he moves about on the set of Camille. She hasn't paid the slightest bit of attention to him between scenes. She's polite to him, of course, but in that well-known aloof Garbo manner. Of all her leading men, John Gilbert and George Brent remain the only two with whom she ever talked.

WHEN WARREN HULL first came to Hollywood he was advised for his career's sake to keep his wife and three little boys in the background. He did this so successfully that Liberty recently mentioned him as one of the most eligible of Hollywood's bachelors. Whereupon Warren said, "That's enough of that!" and sent an SOS for a photographer to take home-and-fireside pictures of the wife and kiddies.

Other young movie idols whom people seem to assume are unmarried, but who are very much engaged matrimonially, are Kent Taylor, Ray Milland, Robert Cummings, Don Ameche. The wedded state of Don Ameche, incidentally, was a sad, sad blow to the girls at the Twentieth Century-Fox studio when they learned of it after he had been on the lot about two weeks. Mr. Ameche had them all completely ga-ga and flat on their faces, as we say so delicately, when the blow came.

HOLLYWOOD TRUE STORY:

SOME MONTHS AGO a pretty girl came to Hollywood and was given a six months stock contract at Columbia.

Her name was Beatrice Blinn and she claimed to be of the family of the late Holbrook Blinn.

Playing a minor rôle in a picture at Columbia Mary Astor, star of the picture, sensed the girl was ideal for the rôle of her maid in the picture, quite an important rôle, too.

So Miss Astor went to the front office and demanded the girl be given the rôle but she did not get it.

Miss Astor told the girl not to worry she would do something for her.

Recently the girl received a message to come to New York and take a test for a Broadway stage play called Stage Door.

She went. She got the part. She's in the play.

The man who sent for her was George Kaufman, the author and producer of the play.

Think it over!

IF YOU HEARD Norma Shearer give excerpts from Romeo and Juliet over the air you might be interested to learn that Miss Shearer and her little company actually rehearsed that radio broadcast for three full weeks.

ELAINE BARRIE, the "Ariel" to John Barrymore's "Caliban" of recent memory, is leaving Hollywood to try the New York stage again.

Elaine, just before Irving Thalberg died, was told by the young producer that there was no place for her at Metro despite she had a term contract.

Her contract has been adjusted.

Her romance with Barrymore is as cold as an Eskimo's frigidaire.

Goodbye, Elaine. You were good copy at that.

MARY ASTOR wept unrestrainedly, in her loge seat in the rear of Warner Brothers theatre in Hollywood when Dodsworth was shown for the first time on any screen.

A packed house greeted her first appearance on the screen, in the picture, with applause such as has been seldom heard in any theatre, prolonged to the extent of making the ensuing dialog unheard for two minutes.

Incidentally, in a sympathetic rôle, Miss Astor gave the best dramatic performance of her long career.

PIMPLES spoil many a "date"—for boys as well as girls—after the start of adolescence, from about 13 to 25 years of age, or even longer.

At this time, important glands develop and final growth takes place. The entire system is disturbed. The skin gets extra sensitive. Waste poisons in the blood irritate this sensitive skin. Then, unsightly pimples pop out.

Fleischmann's Yeast clears these skin irritants out of the blood. Then, pimples go! Eat 3 cakes each day, one before meals—plain, or in a little water—until skin clears.

After serving Marian's salad, I realized there was something in what she said. They can be made very important to your holiday dinners.

MOLDED HOLIDAY SALAD

2 pkg. lime flavored gelatin
1 No. 2 size can Fruit Salad
1 cup grapefruit sections
Water
3 tbls. Tarragon vinegar
2 drops oil of cloves
Pinch of salt

Drain all juices from fruits, and add enough water to make 3¼ cups of liquid. Heat to boiling point and pour over gelatin. Add vinegar, oil of cloves and salt. Pour portion of mixture in bottom of mold and allow to set until slightly firm. Place layer of fruit on top of gelatin. When balance of gelatin is slightly firm pour small amount on top of fruits. Continue until all fruits and gelatin have been used. Set away to become firm. Turn out on large chop plate and garnish with spiced figs, romaine, and cranberry bouquets.

The cranberry bouquets will make quite an impression and yet Marian says they are quite simple to make.

Place cranberries on tooth picks and insert into a bouquet made up of sprigs of parsley. Tie with a piece of thread and tuck between romaine leaves that surround the salad.

Clever Women Don't Grow Old!

things that would be impossible if I didn't speak French!

"In this way you can AVOID BOREDOM—which is certainly another highly important rule for youth. For a bored woman cannot possibly be a young woman, no matter how old she is in years!"

AND the glamorous stars of Hollywood prove Jeanette's words by constantly seeking new fields of endeavor in addition to their own highly demanding profession!

Carole Lombard is at this moment supervising the decoration of her new home, studying color-schemes and materials and measurements and prices.

Joan Crawford is working with her own "little theater," planning to embark upon a stage career eventually.

Mary Pickford's radio broadcasts are highly successful.

Others—Norma Shearer is a perfect example—made a "secondary" career of managing their homes and raising their children.

Jeanette told me, "I have used my own daily regime of living to illustrate what I mean, but the same ideas could be applied by any woman, whatever her occupation. The managing of a home can be a profession in itself. Housewives needn't feel that this scheme for youth is harder for them. In a way, it's easier.

"I know girls back East who are married and still keeping young—in spite of the demands of their homes, their growing children and husbands. I don't mean women who have servants. These girls do their own work, and still find time for their club and social activities.

"And they're staying young because they're clever—smart enough to schedule their lives, do the things they enjoy, and keep on being the girls their husbands fell in love with!

"That's why I say that clever women don't grow old—not in this modern world! Clever women are happy, busy women. And you don't grow old—there isn't time!—if you're working!"

Victor Moore and Lee Dixon take nothing seriously—not even their rôles in Gold Diggers of 1937. There's a cute story about Lee on Page 83

Most Bad Breath Begins with the Teeth!

WHY let bad breath interfere with success — with happiness? It's so easy to be safe when you realize that by far the most common cause of bad breath is . . . improperly cleaned teeth!

Authorities say decaying food and acid deposits, in hidden crevices between the teeth, are the source of most unpleasant mouth odors—of dull, dingy teeth—and of much tooth decay.

Use Colgate Dental Cream. Its special penetrating foam removes these odor-breeding deposits that ordinary cleaning methods fail to reach. And at the same time, Colgate's soft, safe polishing agent cleans and brightens the enamel—makes your teeth sparkle.

Be safe—be sure! Brush your teeth . . . your gums . . . your tongue . . . with Colgate Dental Cream at least twice daily and have cleaner, brighter teeth and a sweeter, purer breath. Get a tube today!

ARE YOU ONE OF THE MANY VICTIMS?

Do you suffer from Piles? If so, you know what they can take out of you. They wear you down physically and mentally. They make you look drawn and haggard, no matter how you try to conceal the suffering. They handicap your every activity in life.

But the suffering, bad as it is, is not the only thing about Piles. They can turn into something very serious. This is always a possibility because of the delicacy of the trouble. Many people hesitate to seek medical treatment for Piles, when, as a matter of fact, no trouble is more in need of attention.

Three Effects in One

Today, you have medication for Piles that is of extraordinary merit. It consists of Pazo Ointment. Pazo does more than merely "kid" Piles. It actually placates them. Pazo is unusually effective because it is threefold in effect.

First, it is soothing, which tends to relieve inflammation, soreness and itching. Second, it is lubricating, which tends to soften hard parts and make passage easy. Third, it is astringent, which tends to reduce swollen parts and check bleeding.

Pazo comes in tubes fitted with a special Pile Pipe which permits application high up in the rectum. It also now comes in suppository form. Those who prefer suppositories will find Pazo Suppositories the most satisfactory. All drug stores sell Pazo, but a trial tube (with Pile Pipe) will be sent on request. Mail coupon and enclose 10c (coin or stamps) to help cover cost of packing and postage.

Spanky Writes to the Editor!

His new film was titled Colonel Spanky. But he demanded to know why he couldn't be a general. So they retitled the picture!

DEAR Editor:

When you came to our school room, you told me I was a pretty good penman. Now I want to see what you think about my writing.

I didn't know what penman meant when you said that. I asked our teacher, Mrs. Carter, and she said it meant my handwriting was good. She said that writing meant the way you put words together to make good reading.

A lot of kids write to me and ask the funniest questions about motion pictures. I think this is a good time to answer them by telling just what we do.

Before we ever start in a picture, we go to the wardrobe department for clothes. In General Spanky, the long picture we just finished, we had to be fitted in clothes that kids wore way back in 1860. The shoes aren't like our own. They were high-top, laced shoes. Boys in those days wore long pants, but they were tight. Girls wore hoop skirts that were awfully long. Their hats were bonnets. The people in the wardrobe are very nice and explained all this to us.

Then when the picture starts, our director gets all us kids together and tells us about the whole story. Then when the big lights and the camera are just about set for the first scene, he tells us what we are to say and do. We rehearse it once, then the camera takes it. Sometimes, the director, Gordon Douglas, takes it several times. As soon as he gets what he wants, he lets us go play or go study our school lessons until they're ready for another scene.

In General Spanky, we had a scene in the big cave where Alfalfa was supposed to say "General in Chief of the Royal Society for the Protection of Women and Children Regiment Club of the World and the Mississippi River, no!" and then sit down. But he couldn't get all the words in the right order the first time, so the director hollered "Cut!" That meant the camera should stop and let us start the scene over again.

Alfalfa got awful disgusted because he muffed his lines until Gordon told him that he couldn't say all that right himself. So when Alfalfa said them right the next time, Gordon was very proud of him and so were we.

When they were ready for the next scene, they called us. We had to have Mary Barnard, the wardrobe lady, look at us before we went back to the set to make sure our clothes were all right. Then we went back and did the next part of the scene.

It takes us about a week to make an "Our Gang" short, but it takes about six or seven weeks to make a long picture like General Spanky.

When we're through with the picture, then the film cutters put it all together and you can't tell when you see it that we stopped at all in between times.

AND in those places where it looks like we're going to be hurt, they take very good care of us to see that we won't. Why, when we were on our personal appearance tour, a boy asked me if it hurt much to die in The Trail of the Lonesome Pine. Was I surprised!

Another place, a little girl said she bet I wasn't going to be there in person because she had seen me die in that picture so I couldn't be there. At first I laughed a lot, but then I guess kids that don't live in Hollywood don't understand how we do those things here.

I like being an actor now, but when I grow up I want to be a flying G-man. I think that would be the most thrilling job a person could have. I'm a pretty good shot with a gun. I have eighteen trophies at home now. (Editor's note: The trophies consist of plaster of Paris dolls Spanky has won at the amusement piers on the beaches)

I haven't been up in an airplane yet, but I sure want to. Mama and Daddy take my brother Tommy and me out to the airports real often to watch the planes. That's exciting. I've met lots of pilots, but none of them have ever been actors. They say that won't stand against me, though.

Mr. Roach, who owns the studio, told me I could have a real dressing room all for myself now that he had made me a star. But I said, nix we kids wanted a club house instead. And he's going to let us have it.

Well, Buckwheat, Porky, Baby Patsy, Darla and Alfalfa are waiting for me to go play with them, so I guess I'll close now.

Goodbye.

General Spanky

And here is Spanky in the schoolroom with Mrs. Carter, his teacher, and another Our Gang-ster

The Man Shirley Temple Hated

believing I was either too young or too old for child parts. I was caught in a vicious web of circumstance, and couldn't get work on the screen.

"The casting director looked at me and said, 'We're making a series of pictures called Frolics of Youth, and we've got to have a kid that's mean.'

"I told him I could be mean. I told him I had reason to be mean. It would be second nature to strike out at anyone at that moment, I was so despondent. I just wanted a chance to show him how cussed mean I could be!"

Something about Kenneth's fanatical zeal and his rising voice that suggested temper, made the casting director stop telling the boy he wouldn't do for the villain part in Frolics of Youth.

"We've just hired a little girl who's to be featured in this series," he said. "Her name is . . . say," he called to an assistant, "what is the name of that kid we signed yesterday?"

"Temple," came back the answer after minutes of search through files, "Shirley Temple!"

"Yes, that's the one. Okay, Howell, you get the part. But remember, no contracts. It's straight week to week work. If you don't cut the buck—out you go. That goes for all the kids in our series."

HOWELL stopped speaking. He looked at his shoe. It wasn't much of a shoe because the scene he was to enact required him to wear a pair of brogans little better than a tramp's. "I was wearing a pair of shoes just like this that day," he said slowly.

"Did you eat that night?" we asked.

"No," said Kenneth. "I studied the script I was given by the casting director until I fell asleep. Even though I hadn't eaten in a day and a half, I wasn't hungry . . . too excited.

"I came to the studio ready for work at six in the morning. The call for me wasn't until nine o'clock, but I wasn't taking any chance of somebody getting there before me. At eight o'clock I was in the make-up department. At eight-thirty I was being fitted in wardrobe and at nine I was on the set.

"While I waited on the sound stage I noticed a little girl with long, blonde curls and a serious, thoughtful face, standing quietly with her mother at the sound stage door. There were a number of other children standing about, but this one seemed to attract my notice. I wondered who she could be. Probably some cute kid without ability. Hope I don't have to act opposite her, I thought!"

Howell laughed. "Know who that child was?

"Yes, you're right. She was Shirley Temple, and she was ready to make her screen début.

"Kleig lights burned brightly on the set. Prop men, grips, electricians, assistants of various sorts moved about in a constant whirl. Most of the children hired to take rôles in Frolics of Youth were nervous, and they showed it.

"When I looked for the little girl with the blonde curls and dimpled cheeks, I saw her standing quietly by her mother's side—composed, quiet, thoughtful.

"Director Charles La Mont began with a few words of advice. 'Be natural,' he told us, 'don't try to act. Just be kids.'"

HOWELL'S "fears" were confirmed. Shirley was to play opposite him. She was to enact the part of the sweet sister of the fat boy hero, and Kenneth was the villain who was always getting into fights with the fat boy and consequently quarrelling with Shirley.

"Director La Mont spoke to Shirley—bruskly, quickly, as he would to a grown-up. She looked at him, all attention until he finished speaking. Then she skipped before the cameras, ready for action.

"The first scene was between Shirley and me. Shirley was to poke me with a fork after she had thrown black ink in my face.

"We were given our instructions and the scene began. Shirley took the fork in her hand, looked at me (still with that serious expression) and when La Mont said 'Go,' she started after me. I ran slowly, and finally Shirley got near enough to poke me with the fork. I was ready for any mistake the child might make.

Three clowns: Emmet Kelly, Bobby Breen and Otto Griebling. But Bobby is the little boy who made such a hit on Eddie Cantor's radio programs—and now he's filming Rainbow On the River

"Suddenly Shirley started to cry. La Mont asked her what the trouble was.

" 'He's too nice to stick with a fork,' she said between her tears. 'I can't do it.'

"La Mont explained to her that she really didn't have to hurt me. Then she did the scene with the eclat of a veteran. She didn't miss a cue, she never stumbled over a line of dialogue, and never backed away from the camera—which is a fault almost all new players make in an effort to keep their faces in the camera line.

"This was Shirley's first day on a movie set and her first day's work before a camera. I'm convinced that she was born with the histrionic talent that she possesses today to such a marked degree.

"She had too much polish, so to speak, for anybody to have inculcated that talent into her by means of study—it was just there and it came out when she stepped before the cameras, like a spring breaking through a rock.

WITH each passing day Shirley and Kenneth became firmer pals. "Mentally she was a girl of ten years," Kenneth continued. "Unlike the other children, you could talk to her and get sensible answers.

"I remember one day in particular when Shirley was to push me into a barrel of water. She came to me an hour before the scene was to be filmed and said:

" 'We'd better figure this thing out now. I wouldn't want you to go into that barrel head first; that's awful dangerous. But, if we're running and I push you, you've just got to go in head first.'

"So we sat down and figured the thing out, as a result I stood with my back to the barrel and let Shirley push me in.

"But all our well-laid plans didn't turn out so well, because when Shirley pushed me, she tried to hold me for a second to break the force of my fall. Before either of us knew what was happening, we both tumbled into the water!

"Shirley proved herself a trouper then and there. She came up, snorting and blowing, but without a trace of anger. It was all in a day's work. Director La Mont told us the scene was much better the way we had done it.

" 'Maybe we'd better not try to plan things in advance,' Shirley said to me that night as we were leaving the studio.

"Shirley Temple never forgets her lines. She has an uncanny sense of camera angles, never forcing a cameraman to shoot a poor sequence because she gets out of focus as do so many child actors."

It seems everybody knew how good little Miss Temple was but Educational Studios. They somehow forgot to have Shirley sign on the dotted line.

Shirley told Kenneth she was going to leave Educational and go to work for Fox Studios.

"The little girl sat perched on the edge of a chair, alternately looking at her hands and her toes. She told me she loved to act, and that she was determined to get what she wanted! Remember, Shirley was just four years old then—and she knew what she wanted."

"You're wanted on the set now, Mr. Howell," an assistant director said. Kenneth got to his feet and started to move toward little thirteen-year-old Jeanne Dante, another child star who is making her screen debut in Hollywood, just as Shirley did four years ago.

"I'm going to be in a picture with Shirley again, some day, because we both promised ourselves that the day we said 'goodby,'" Howell said as he walked before the Universal cameras.

What Movies Have Done to the Quints!

welfare for the Province of Ontario—the brilliant man who guides and guards the financial destinies of the Quints—presents yet another phase, another view-point of the Quints vs. the Movies.

"Aside from the money," I asked him, "are the movies helping the Quints?"

"Yes, definitely," he replied crisply, positively. "The making of motion pictures is probably the only career the Quints will have when they grow up. It is the logical career for them. There will be no need for them to face strange crowds in strange places to present their talents—to be active, to be creative. Here's a career ready for them. They can follow it in comparative privacy and yet with great satisfaction. It will be a source not only of interest, of stimulation, of challenge, but it will help to fill their lives—to give them a purpose in living.

"But more than that—their development as normal human beings demands a certain relationship with others, a certain adjustment to changing conditions and new faces. The movies even now are helping on that score!"

The adjustment of which Mr. Croll speaks goes on before my eyes!

The babies were shy, puzzled during the first days of production. They came hesitantly to Jean Hersholt and Dorothy Peterson. Director Norman Taurog had to bring into play all his genius with children to win a smile, a friendly look.

But as the days went on they no longer ran to their nurses, to survey from the sanctuary of familiar arms the maneuvers of the motion picture company.

In twenty days of work the Quints have assumed almost new personalities. Their curiosity, their interest, their understanding and friendliness developed amazingly.

Picture-making became a new and delightful game—with friendly, charming strangers. The Quints scrambled around cameras, and lights; shook them, jabbered at each other incessantly—perhaps saying: "What is all this? Something new! We've never seen this sort of thing in our nursery or in our play-ground before. Let's find out the meaning of this!"

As I watch, Cecile notes the dog and bunny perched on Taurog's knees—and comes rushing over to inspect them. She cuddles close to him, climbs into his arms, and is content. A week ago, two weeks ago, she would have grabbed them and run away. Not afraid exactly—but certainly suspicious!

As we leave the hospital grounds, Yvonne stands at the window of the nursery—in her birthday clothes, by the way—and waves and throws kisses to crew and cast. In a few short hours she had learned to adjust herself to strangers—to new faces, and to new conditions.

PERHAPS nothing illustrates the change in these babies more aptly than the experience with the nursery sequence. In the picture you will see the children at bedtime, hiding from Hersholt, the screen Dr. Dafoe—teasing him, winking at him.

Director Taurog tried to get that scene when the company first arrived—but the babies were unresponsive, not quite at ease.

Toward the end of location time, the cameras moved into the nursery again. The Director sought to capture in celluloid an intimate, cunning, heart-warming scene between Hersholt and a Quint.

Perhaps Emilie sensed what was required of her; certain it is that when the cameras were aligned and the lights ready, she did an exquisite scene.

"Where's my nose, Emilie," Hersholt asked. She poked at his glasses.

"Oh, no, that's not my nose!" he chided gently. "This is my nose"—and he pointed—"and this is your nose!"

Emilie crowed her delight, put her fingers into his mouth for a kiss, threw her arms around his neck.

Not one of the babies at the beginning, living in her limited world, would have had the alertness to go through this bit of action.

Hollywood transplanted has been good for the Quints! For consolation or sympathy they come to the cameraman Dan Clark, or the scrip clerk, or Taurog, or Peterson or Hersholt as frequently as they do to their nurses.

WHEN Marie was naughty and snatched the tam Annette wore from her head and ran away, came to Taurog, looked at him quizzically, as if to ask—"What do you think of such behaviour?"

"Bring it back—give it back to Annette!" Nurse Noel directed. Marie's eyes travelled around the circle of faces surrounding her. Disapproving faces. Then she stuck out her lip walked slowly to Annette and jammed the tam down on her head.

"Babies, like grown people, learn what is right and what is wrong, from the behaviour of those about them," Taurog points out.

"The Quints are learning, quickly, amazingly, because suddenly there are new faces to watch—the approval of new people to be earned."

At long range, the movies are helping the Quints—not only financially, but to a life-long career!

But immediately, in the present, they are being helped, because the movies have introduced into their baby lives a new world—new things to poke and probe and discover!

Rochelle and Robert Kent spent their spare time fishing, while they were on location with the Dionne Quints

On Location With the Quints!

in which the babies were put has long ago been destroyed. So the fight might be much-to-do-about-nothing — since clothes-hampers are 79c in any good reliable store.

• •

Marie, Yvonne, Cecile, Annette and Emilie are probably the only ladies of their weight and age, who have their own personal wardrobe designer. Jesse Herff, originator of the Quintuplet Fashions, arrives every three months to size up the babies and decide what their next season's wardrobe should be. Dr. Dafoe lends a hand in selecting fashions for them.

• •

Two white leghorns, who've been star-boarders at the Hospital since the Quints moved in there, almost disorganized the third day's shooting schedule when they invaded the set for a good-morning to the little girls. Yvonne went racing for one of them, caught it and hugged it tight. Both chicks were finally banished—much to the chagrin of chickens and children both.

The cook and the kitchen maid on the staff of the Hospital donned Nurse's uniforms for picture-purposes. "Mr. Taurog," piped up the cook, early of an afternoon, "if you want to take a close-up of me, you'll have to hurry. I have to put the soup on for the babies' supper."

Which brings up the matter of make-up. The three regular nurses, who appear in most of the shots with the Quints, suggested to Dr. Dafoe they would photograph better if they could have regular movie make-up applied. "You're not in the movies yet!" was the good Doctor's shattering reply.

The Quints are proving a big help to Verne Simmins, of the crew. The little girls are at his heels quick as a flash whenever he starts to move light reflectors into position. They want to help too—and tug, and tug, and tug! Dr. Dafoe says it's good exercise for them!

Robert Kent, who plays the young Doctor in Reunion, took a hand at hoeing potatoes in a big field near Callander. No serious casualties—but he's been moving around very cautiously.

• •

The keeper of the gate to the Hospital grounds has heard so many fantastic excuses for getting in to the spot where the Company is working with the Quints,

READ HOW SKINNY GIRLS GAIN 10 TO 25 LBS. NEW QUICK WAY

Posed by professional models

Thousands gaining normal attractive curves —in just a few weeks!

SKINNY, friendless girls who never could gain an ounce can take new hope from the experience of thousands of others with this new scientific treatment that is sweeping the country. These others have gained 10 to 25 pounds of solid, naturally attractive flesh this new easy way —in just a few weeks!

What is more, this new discovery has given them naturally clear skin, freedom from indigestion and constipation, new pep.

Why it builds up so quickly

Scientists recently discovered that great numbers of people are thin and rundown for the single reason that they do not get enough digestion-strengthening Vitamin B and blood-enriching iron in their daily food. Now the richest known source of this marvelous body-building Vitamin B is cultured ale yeast. By a new process the finest imported cultured ale yeast is now concentrated 7 times—made 7 times more powerful. Then it is combined with 3 kinds of iron, pasteurized whole yeast and other valuable ingredients in little tablets known as Ironized Yeast tablets.

If you, too, need these vital elements to build you up, get these new "7-power" Ironized Yeast tablets from your druggist today. Then, day after day, watch flat chest develop and skinny limbs round out to natural attractiveness. Constipation and indigestion from the same cause vanish, skin clears to normal beauty—you're a new person.

Money-back guarantee

No matter how skinny and rundown you may be from lack of sufficient Vitamin B and iron, try these new Ironized Yeast tablets just a short time, and note the marvelous change. See if they don't build you up in a few weeks, as they have thousands. If not delighted with the benefits of the very first package, your money back instantly.

Special FREE offer!

To start thousands building up their health right away, we make this FREE offer. Purchase a package of Ironized Yeast tablets at once, cut out seal on box and mail it to us with a clipping of this paragraph. We will send you a fascinating new book on health, "New Facts About Your Body." Remember, results with very first package—or money refunded. At all druggists. Ironized Yeast Co., Inc., Dept. 2812, Atlanta, Ga.

On Location With the Quints!

that when Jean Hersholt identified himself for admission, the police-officer gave him a fishy stare—and the suggestion that he ought to think of a better one than that. "I've never seen you before. Now keep moving." Only when the crowds recognized the motion picture star and mobbed him for autographs, did the conscientious guardian check up on Jean's identity with those in authority. Then he sheepishly asked for an autograph too.

• •

Dr. Dafoe fills his arms with Quints when they're through with their picture stint. The rest tag along and pull at him to be carried too!

With a million tourists to the Quints shrine so far recorded here this summer, it isn't at all unlikely that Doctor Dafoe is by now the most photographed man in the world—excluding important political figures. Cameras to the right of him, to the left, behind and before, the moment he is sighted. Whole battalions romp at his heels—and snap-snap go the camera shutters.

The Quints are wild about nice, furry, woolly toys. So the enormous teddy-bear brought up here by the prop department quickly became a bone of contention. Marie would snatch it—then Yvonne—then Cecile—then they'd all scramble for it. Norman Taurog sent a quick wire to New York for four additional and identical teddy-bears. And now all is peace.

• •

Papa Dionne pulled a good one on Jean Hersholt. Last year when the screen Dr. Dafoe was here, the two were very friendly. But this year—what with big-business and all—Papa is somewhat independent. He spied Jean browsing in his refreshment stand, and thinking Jean came to call on him, sent out word by one of his assistants that he couldn't see him. As if anybody cared!

• •

The same prolific Papa was fit to be tied when the plump lady from Alabama informed him that the laborious inscription "To little Button-nose, with love Oliva Dionne" for which she had just paid the customary fee, was for her adored and only pooch. "And isn't he cute," she gurgled holding the Peke out for admiration. Papa didn't coo back!

The Quints are held in high esteem in these parts, particularly by the business houses. Local records show that since the miracle birth, there isn't one family left on dole. Thanks to the Quints—and their far-reaching charm for tourists.

A toast to the Quints—to the weather! It's a small, semi-serious, semi-comic ritual each night as the thirty-one members of the Reunion company, gathered here to make the sequences in which the five little miracle girls figure, sit down to dinner. If the weather is good—the company works. And fortune smiling, the five will do their cute best.

Only a skeleton crew works with the Quints—and the others watch from behind bushes and vantage points. Jack Mintz, the scenario writer, mystified the entire company with the small, green parcel he carried everywhere with him. The mystery was finally solved. The package contained a pair of powerful binoculars, so that even at a distance, not one move of the five would escape his watchful eye. It proved profitable in giving his ideas, which at night he transformed into whole sequences for the picture.

Doris Drought, the script clerk, and Ollie Hughes, whose responsibility is the Quint's very impressive Hollywood wardrobe, have had a friendly feud on for days. Ollie's favorite is Marie, Doris' is Yvonne. They've argued the merits of their pets each evening. The nurses however, have been holding out on them. They've been mixing up the little sisters —so that confidentially, neither Doris nor Ollie, have been picking the right ones.

Joe Behm, head of the property department, is a man the Quints go for. He's the guy who gives them nice, new toys out of his magic, and inexhaustible box each working day.

• •

"I can pick out Cecile every time," Don Flick, the sound man, rashly promised. Before he knew it Dan Clark, the cameraman, had made it a bet. They would both try to pick her out three times a day. Their percentage of error was about the same.

The local prints made Frank Powolny the still cameraman with the company, a very popular social figure indeed. An item stated that he earned $250 a week—and was a bachelor. He hasn't had an idle moment since.

The Private Life of Henry Fonda—is something worth knowing about. Do you want to know, for one thing, about his society-girl marriage? Read the interesting story in January SCREEN BOOK.

his friends to try to get her there on time.

"We aren't going to keep on going like this, though," says Johnny. "This being at opposite ends of the earth most of the time is all right for now. But not for long. We are both working hard now, until we save enough. Then you watch us build our home together."

So while Lupe is hopping from South America to London, and back again, Tarzan is working harder at home than ever before. He likes being Tarzan, but also wants to do other characterizations. "Things like 'Hiawatha', and the type of picture Doug Fairbanks used to make. I don't want to be Tarzan forever," he declares.

When he has accomplished all he can on the screen, Tarzan and his mate will start traveling. They are planning with that end in view now. And from what one knows of this pair the future is rose-tinted, with the guarantee of never a dull moment.

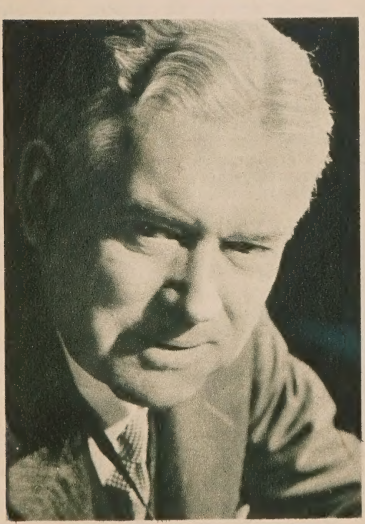
Let the doctor's judgment guide you in your choice of a laxative



THE SELECTION of a laxative is no problem for your doctor. He has a definite set of standards to guide him in his choice. And he knows that a good laxative is one that measures up to all of these standards. Here they are:

The doctor says that a laxative should be: Dependable . . . Mild . . . Thorough . . . Time-tested.

The doctor says that a laxative should not: Over-act . . . Form a habit . . . Cause stomach pains . . . Nauseate, or upset the digestion.

And Ex-Lax is a laxative that meets these various specifications . . . Ex-Lax checks on every point.

Be as wise as your doctor about the laxative you use. Don't punish your system with harsh cathartics. Give Ex-Lax a trial. Find out how mild, how effective, how comfortable Ex-Lax is. Discover for yourself the advantages that have made Ex-Lax the world's largest-selling laxative. Get the reasons why doctors use it themselves . . . why mothers have given it to their children with perfect confidence for over 30 years.

Ex-Lax tastes just like delicious chocolate. It's an ideal laxative for children as well as for adults. At all drug stores in 10c and 25c sizes. Or write for free sample to Ex-Lax, Dept. F.G.126, Box 170, Times-Plaza Station, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Willful daughter (Arline Judge) and her foster-mother (Gladys George) have a before-putting-out-lights chat

Valiant Is The Word For Carrie
★★½

THE book from which this picture is adapted is literally, without any attempt at dramatization, transposed to the screen . . . line for line, incident for incident. Gladys George, as the lady of easy morals and heart of gold, is turned from her life of shame by her love for two waifs, Jackie Moran and Charlene Wyatt and goes into the dry cleaning business in the city. She becomes wealthy, puts waif one (John Howard after he grows up) through college, guides waif two (Arline Judge) through a turbulent but apparently unrequited love for her adopted brother. John is accidentally instrumental in causing the death of a stranger in a subway crush . . . feels duty bound to dedicate his life to the dead man's unscrupulous sister (Isabel Jewell). His thoroughly idiotic-appearing conscience succeeds in plunging Arline into a loveless marriage with an animated vegetable (Grady Sutton) and his adopted mother, Miss George, into jail . . . because she, heroically, aids in a jailbreak intended to get Isabel Jewell's real lover out where he can marry her and so save John from her toils. Gladys George's performance is excellent and establishes her as a screen find. Grady Sutton, too, deserves a pat on the back for his cleverly played bit that brought down the house with laughter. Arline Judge and John Howard are adequate.—Produced by Paramount.

Jewel thief Cesar Romero falls into the clinches of Claire Trevor, who is out to stop jewel thefting. That's Lester Matthews on the right. They're all in 15 Maiden Lane

Dimples
For Temple Fans

SHIRLEY TEMPLE'S doing her stuff again, and doing it as catchily as ever. She plays a scene from Little Eva in this one, which is guaranteed to bring any house down. She taps, she sings, she wins her grandfather (Frank Morgan) from a life of crime, she captures the heart of a rich old lady (Helen Westley), she foils the villainess (Astrid Allwyn), she succeeds in reuniting the two lovers (Robert Kent and Delma Byron), and through it all she holds the audience engrossed by her baby charm which hasn't diminished an iota. Frank Morgan turns in a fine bit of characterization as the old gentleman who sometimes forgets the difference between his property and other people's. But, as usual, Shirley's millions of admirers will hand her the accolade for the finest performance. She deserves it.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Three comedians in Polo Joe: Skeets Gallagher, an obstreperous mule and Joe E. Brown

Thank You Jeeves

THIS is cockeyed comedy, in the best Wodehouse tradition. David Niven is cast as a romantic, but not too bright, English gentleman in search of the great love. Arthur Treacher is Jeeves, his butler-keeper. There is a beautiful woman with "papers" played by Virginia Field, who is apparently a fugitive from justice; and men on her trail, apparently detectives. When the supposed fugitive seeks refuge with the romance-hunting Englishman, she precipitates a series of events that include a dizzy chase in motor cars, and an exciting climax when it is discovered that the fugitive isn't a fugitive and the detectives aren't detectives and in fact, nothing is as it seems except Mr. Treacher's inimitable ability to provoke laughter, and the excellent support of the rest of the cast. And, as if all that weren't enough to roll 'em in the aisles, they had to go and add Stepin Fetchit. Not heavy filmfare, but funny in any man's language.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Ladies in Love

LADIES IN LOVE combines the talents of Constance Bennett, Loretta Young, Janet Gaynor and Simone Simon in a meager story of continental flavor. The scene is Budapest, the characters three working girls whose love affairs are told in a series of thinly cemented episodes. Constance, the play-girl of the group, loses her heart to Paul Lukas, who in turn is lost to the blandishments of Simone Simon. Loretta Young, in love with a young count, Tyrone Power, Jr., also meets defeat in love at the hands of Countess Virginia Field. Janet Gaynor is the only one to get her man, Don Ameche, who plays admirably the rôle of an impoverished doctor. A recurrently amusing story is Janet's infatuation for Alan Mowbray, a pompously dramatic magician, for whom she acts as housekeeper. Mowbray's comedy performance highlights the picture. Divided to a nicety are the acting honors between Constance, Janet and Loretta. Each is given a chance to score in one scene, and each takes full advantage of the opportunity.—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

Polo Joe

A NIFTY comedy which will make Joe E. Brown fans hysterical. Joe is a polo player who knows nothing about polo. He's a wealthy young man who sneezes at horses, but the lady of his heart (Carol Hughes) is mad about polo and madder about polo players. Can't you easily imagine un-horsey Joe bungling his way through the important game? Skeets Gallagher plays "straight man" as Joe's valet. Fay Holden, a new face to us, did an hysterically-giggling—in high C!—auntie rôle very effectively. It's the usual Joe E. Brown story, with our hero dishing up the laughs in his best manners.—Produced by Warner Bros.

15 Maiden Lane

GET the rat poison! Such nasty people we never saw. Cesar Romero, wickeder-looking than ever is a jewel thief, aided and abetted by Douglas Fowley and Chick Chandler. These gentlemen have absolutely no regard for property rights, or for the rights of other people (jewel owners, particularly) to live. However, when Cesar, in order to escape arrest, slips a diamond into the bag of Claire Trevor in an elevator, he strikes a snag. How was he to know that she is the niece of Robert McWade, the insurance agency president who will have to make good the loss of that diamond if it is not recovered? Claire decides to play detective, and the picture takes off at a rapid pace to a thrilling climax. Mr. Romero, as usual, turns in a fine performance and succeeds in making the audience want to rend the villain!—Produced by 20th Century-Fox.

HOLLYWOOD TIPS for HOME MAKERS

Earl Blackwell, popular young player shows a decided preference when it comes to polishing the shoes. It is an actor's stock in trade to keep in top shape as far as appearances go, and there's nothing like good old Shinola to keep the feet looking well. Note the high polish on Mr. Blackwell's shoes!

HERE are four valuable tips that come to us from Bigelow's Folio of Room Recipes: A wall to wall carpet makes your room seem larger. Wall to wall carpeting makes furniture arrangement much easier. Always select your colors in floor covering slightly more intense than you want them to be eventually, because daily exposure and soil will dull them. A well covered floor lessons the noise and confusion of heels clicking and of the moving of furniture.

Now that "flu" season is on, here is something you should know about keeping your rooms healthful . . . even temperature and humidity in your rooms are the best remedy for colds . . . Remember, if the air in your home is too dry, you have to burn more fuel to keep it warm. If it is too moist, you and your guests will suffer discomfort and are apt to catch cold as a result. For your protection, the Rochester Manufacturing Company have developed their Humiditherm that not only tells you the temperature and the humidity, but the little hand on the dial points to the most healthful room condition. Some company is always coming forth with new ideas to save the housewife trouble and expense . . . The latest developments along this line is the new electric iron made by the Proctor & Schwartz people. Imagine an iron with a cork handle; this means coolness as well as lightness. Then too, the handle is set at an angle that relieves wrist strain and arm fatigue. This is just one development to say nothing of their "dial of fabrics" heat control. The control will save many a scorch, because you may regulate the heat of the iron to the type of fabric you are ironing.

And now for something along the line of gifts. Did you ever see what the Kensington Company has to offer along the line of aluminum alloy table ware? Their new metal will not tarnish or finger print and at the same time, it is hard enough to stand normal wear and scuffing. . . You should really drop in at your local furnishings store and see what they have to offer in the line of coffee services, cigarette boxes, ash trays and a thousand and one other delightful pieces that make excellent gifts.

Adrienne Ames has a remarkable new roaster—one of the electric variety known as a Nesco Automatic Electric Roaster, "The Royal Line." Really, it is an electric oven, and in it you can cook whole dinners. Of heavy insulation, it confines heat to the food instead of allowing it to escape into the room. Of course, you can use one of these in any part of the house where there is an electric socket. Four sizes are available.

That problem of breaking ice up when someone in the crowd calls for a highball! Attractive Tala Birell has solved the problem with the lightning kitchen gadget. That pyrex ice bowl will fit nicely into the ice box and keep the chipped ice from melting!

Storm Over Lee Tracy

slow recovery to keel. His sense were instantly alert.

"How's the weather?" he asked of Marsh Duffield who had just come down to be relieved.

"A good wind from the starboard quarter but we don't seem to be making much headway."

Lee heard the snap of sails and the protesting creaks and groans as the Adoree rolled heavily to port. He lurched from the cabin to wake the skipper.

"Do you feel it?" he asked hurriedly as the captain swung his legs to the floor. "What's the trouble?"

The skipper steadied himself as the Adoree heaved to starboard and stayed there. Then it rolled slowly back. "Must be a cross current from Molokai," the skipper pronounced with a puzzled expression. "These islands are full of funny currents."

Another figure swayed toward them down the companionway. Jeff Harris, an old friend of Lee's who had sailed his own yacht for years. "How long since you looked at the bilges, skipper?"

The captain stared at him, his leathery face suddenly pale. Then he spun around and ran for the galley, the other two after him. They tore up the hatch. There, before their astonished eyes, oily water lapped sluggishly just an inch below the flooring. The bilges were full.

"The pumps!" bellowed the skipper. "Man the pumps!"

AS LEE stumbled back along the companionway he realized that if the leak was big the pumps would be useless. He also realized, with sickening clarity, that it was impossible to send an S. O. S. The radio was dead, heaven bless it! They could flounder and nobody be the wiser. So his stumbling progress was made articulate with those choice expletives which woke the rest of the crew. Then all hands set frantically to work.

But here we are in the middle of the story. We must start at the beginning.

The race from the mainland to Honolulu is an annual event which has attracted the most zealous yachtsmen for the last thirty years. There is but one longer race—the one from New York to Norway. But that, for some reason, has never excited the interest of the Honolulu classic. Last July 4th, for example, more than thirty yachts were assembled in Santa Monica harbor to wait for the starter's gun. Lee Tracy and Buck Jones represented the movie colony. And it was Lee's Adorée which competitors regarded with alarm.

A sleek craft, the Adorée. Not one of those feminine racers—but a staunch sixty-five footer that would do well if the weather was rough. So all the way over Lee and his amateur sailors prayed for storms! But the capricious elements didn't show their teeth until the return voyage. Then, of course, it was useless but exciting. "It was the best part of the trip," as Lee expressed it. "You never knew which ear you'd land on next."

Now we come to the radio. The former owner of the Adorée was a San Francisco banker who was willing to close the deal with one exception—the radio. It was a special $2,000 job which he wanted to install in the larger yacht he was buying. Lee agreed. But when they tried to remove the radio they found it couldn't be done without taking the Adorée almost apart. So it was offered to Lee for $180. Lee grins at the recollection. "It was the most expensive bargain I ever made."

The darn thing got a fit of temperament a week before the race and even while a tug hauled the Adorée to the starting line two experts were working on it frantically—to no avail. The starter's gun boomed across the foggy water, and the experts leaped off as Lee and his crew hauled furiously on spinaker and mainsail. "I'm bettin' on Tracy to win," one of the radiomen remarked. "He swears like he knows his business."

The day was calm, the following days were calm. Some of the yachts tacked north to get a favorable wind, others tacked south. In a short while they were scattered all over the face of the ocean.

WHEN eight men are cooped up on a small boat for more than a month they get to know each other well. Only the skipper and cook were professional seamen, the others were Lee's friends who gladly went along for the ride. They were fourteen days to Honolulu, twenty-one days sailing back. And despite storms and canned chow nobody fed the fishes.

"I guess we were the only boat that made the trip," one member of the crew told me, "which didn't return with most of the fellas hating each other. We got along swell. Lee never gave up the feeling that it was his boat and I guess he pitched in more than anyone else. We were just a bunch of guys trying to win a race and have a good time."

That simple tribute is about the greatest a man could have.

The trip was uneventful until that night off Molokai. "There was always plenty to do. But we just seemed to eat and sleep and take our turn at watch. That's what I liked, my watch at night. It gave me a chance to think. Sort of look at my life fore and aft."

Storm Over Lee Tracy

At such a time a man can wax poetic, and then he discovers that it isn't poetry at all, but the way things are. Lee would sit at the wheel while the Adorée slept and listen to the whine of wind through the riggings, the murmur of canvas, and the ceaseless lapping of water against the hull. The billowing sails looked ghostly under a moonless sky, and all around him, as far as the eye could carry, was nothing but restless ocean and a starry sky. He was alone. He tried to think dispassionately of the mistakes he had made and to plan a more worthy future, but he couldn't for long. His troubles, his own importance seemed too insignificant. He was just a mite, one of two billion mites which fretted the earth. There were more stars in the heavens. And they were more grand.

At such a time a man doesn't make good resolutions; he absorbs them. So Lee, who entered the race for sport and health, found himself imbued with a priceless health of mind. It made small difference what you did or accomplished, it was only "how" that mattered.

BUT whatever his good resolutions were, they evidently didn't include profanity. That's a sailor's prerogative.

His friends, of course, wouldn't let him forget his white elephant. The usual meal would start like this: someone would wonder how they stood in the race. "But that's easy," another would pipe, glancing slyly at Lee, "just radio and find out." They kidded him unmercifully all the way over.

And then they crossed Lonely Nellie. Lonely Nellie is that line midway between Hawaii and the mainland which is the furthest from land it is possible to get on any ocean. The event, like crossing the equator, calls for a celebration. So they broke out extra bottles of Cocoa-cola and dashed each other with fresh water to wash off some of the brine that had caked their skin.

Here, it might be said, that there was no liquor aboard. Lee had sworn off a month before and to this day, despite the temptations of Honolulu, he hasn't smelled a cork. Lee swore off for five years. Just why five years is something he'll have to tell you.

Molokai was sighted on the thirteenth morning and they all turned in that night with the prayerful hope that they were first. But during the night, as already related, they were rudely awakened by ringing curses that shamed the sound of the elements. And for once, when the situation was made known, the radio wasn't considered a joke.

When Lee stumbled back to the pumps he realized that the leak, somehow, must be found and plugged. Grabbed a hurrican lantern, he yelled for someone to follow him and clambered up to deck. White caps were whipping up from the stern, and off to lee he could see the dim outline of Molokai. In that instant the wind shifted and the canvas complained with a fusilade of sound. Lee tied a rope around his waist and under his seat and, hurricane lantern in hand, had Harold Austin lower him over the side. Drenching wet, only to work when the Adorée rolled to the other side, Lee painfully made his way along the heaving hull. At last, he found the leak. The pipe from the galley, due to corrosion perhaps, has snapped where it emptied into the sea. Instead of a pipe leading upward, there was now a yawning hole through which the sea flooded at every dip. That hole was bigger than the one that emptied from the pumps. They had to work fast.

One man held a plank over the leak while others whittled furiously on a plug. At last they had one that would fit and the crew, gradually, flopped down for a little shut-eye while the pumps clanged a rhythmic song. Lee, in dry clothes now, settled down at the wheel to take his turn at watch.

THEY crossed the finish line off Diamond Head the next afternoon and as soon as they dropped anchor in Honolulu harbor they learned that they finished seventh. Disappointed? A little, of course. But the colorful throng that waved greetings from the dock dispeled their gloom, and they went ashore to receive a welcome that only Hawaii can give.

For weeks they lolled about Waikiki and dashed madly from one reception to the next. All that time, just to prove that everything wasn't huilali and okoulihow, Lee had friends of his in the navy working on the radio. And a private engineer labored at it continuously for the last thirty-six hours. But neither money nor the choicest language would elicit so much as a feeble dot or dash.

Leaving the plaintive notes of Aloha to die on the evening breeze, the Adorée sailed around Oahu and headed due north for eight hundred miles. They wanted to catch the trade wind that would bring them whistling down to the California coast. That, too, was the region of storms.

The Adorée was soon to learn what a capricious lover the winds can be. For three days she idly wallowed in a calm. And then, suddenly, the aspect changed.

"WE DIDN'T think anything of it at first," Lee explained. "You can always see a storm at sea. Sometimes you can see several of them in different parts of the ocean. We kept our course through the first and took it in stride. It was wonderful to see how the Adorée took it, and somehow it made us feel part of the boat, as if we were all one."

To understand the constant excitement of the next ten days it must be remembered that this was the region of swift, unreasonable squalls. Hoarse high seas tossed their combers over the decks. On many nights and days nobody slept at all.

There was one day when the barometer kept falling and during the night the wind rose. Lee was at the wheel. Turning, he saw a huge white bird soar across the glare of the stern light, pause for an instant in the trembling wedge reflecting rain, then veer off into the gale, screeching in the inpenetrable dark. All hands were working frantically to haul in sail, but the Lee crew parted in the blast, and the spinaker whipped down the wind like another white bird searching for its mate. While masts and yards strained and groaned, Lee kept the Adorée headed into the howling gale, sometimes looking at the black heavens as combers tossed the Adorée high, other times looking at the fearful cascade of water that broke on the forward deck.

They were happy next morning that canvas was down because, out of a sudden calm, a white squall struck. A white squall is one of those rare occurrences when the wind is so strong that it blows the ocean smooth. Not even a ripple can raise its head. But that ferocious blast of air whips water from the ocean so that up to a height of thirty feet the air is a hurtling mass of spindrift. Not even a necktie could live in such a blow.

They saw it coming. Lee and the skipper gripped the wheel and crouched below the stanchions as they headed the Adorée into that charging mass of water. The Adorée trembled like one in the paroxysm of death. Sea and sky were blotted out and the sound was like a train rushing through a tunnel. Then, in seconds that seemed like years, it was over.

WAS that their greatest thrill? Lee has to think for several minutes before he answers that one. "No," he finally grins, "I guess it was the time the radio worked."

Lee was having a cup of coffee with Shorty just before he took his morning watch. Shorty, their amateur operator, had been tinkering with the darn thing all the way over and back. As they sat there, trying to figure out how long it would take them to cover the seven hundred miles to Santa Monica, Lee told him to give the thing a whirl. They were close to shore now. Might be able to pick up some broadcast.

Shorty fooled with the dial. Then they heard a voice, faint at first but unmistakable: "Western Union calling Lee Tracy. Western Union calling Lee Tracy. Stand by."

In the silence that followed Lee and Shorty stared at each other like they'd heard the bugle of Gabriel.

Then the voice resumed a clear sharp speech. It was a message from his agents. RKO wanted him for the lead in Criminal Lawyer. Would he take it? The voice finished with those ominous words: "Please acknowledge."

When they recovered from the shock, Lee and Shorty manipulated feverishly to get a message back. Lee, to be honest, wanted work badly. He wanted them to know he'd be available. But as each frantic call failed to get an acknowledgement, Lee, liberally voicing those lusty expressions of which he was now master, kept raising his price. He was going to make up for the fortune he'd spent on the radio, or else. Finally, after hours of sweating, they got a message through. Sometime later, while the whole crew hovered anxiously about, they got another brief word from his agents: Price stiff but RKO finally agreed. Why didn't you answer before? Regards.

In the jubilation that followed they tried to send greetings to friends ashore. But the radio, its duty done, had lapsed into the profound silence. It never peeped again.

They made land three days later and eight grinning stalwarts came ashore excitedly discussing their next voyage to Tahiti. And now that they're back to the old groove it is said, on good authority, that Lee's speech is quite civilized. Perhaps that was one of his good resolutions after all.

And this is Joan Blondell and Dick Powell's wedding cake, which was cut on board their wedding boat, the S. S. Santa Paula. The skipper, Captain Nielsen, looks on approvingly. He did not perform the ceremony; that was done by Reverend Tweedle

WHO ELSE WANTS HUSKY NEW STRENGTH, CALM NERVES - RICH RED BLOOD AND THE EXTRA LBS. THAT MAKE YOU LOOK SO WELL!

Thousands of Weak, Sickly, Nervous SKINNY Folks Once Discouraged Say Kelpamalt Brought These Results Where All Else Failed!

Accept This Startling No Risk Offer!

Your Money Back If Kelpamalt Does Not

1. Improve Appetite.
2. Add at least 5 lbs. of Good Solid Flesh.
3. Strengthen Nerves.
4. Banish Ordinary Stomach Distress.
5. Make You Sleep Sounder.
6. Give You New Strength, Energy and Endurance.
7. Clear Up Skin.

If you are weak, skinny and run down—if you go around always tired, nervous, irritable, easily upset, the chances are your blood is thin, pale and watery and lacks the nourishment needed to build up your strength, endurance and the solid pounds of new flesh you need to feel right. Science has at last got right down to one of the real causes of these conditions and explains a new, quick way to correct them.

Food and medicines can't help you much. The average person usually eats enough of the right kind of food to sustain the body. The real trouble is assimilation, the body's process of converting digested food into firm flesh, pep and energy. Tiny hidden glands control this body building process—glands which require a regular ration of NATURAL IODINE (not the ordinary toxic chemical iodine, but the iodine that is found in tiny quantities in spinach, lettuce, etc.). The simplest and quickest way to get this precious needed substance is Seedol Kelpamalt, the astonishing new mineral concentrate from the sea. Seedol Kelpamalt is 1,300 times richer in iodine than oysters, hitherto considered the best source. With Seedol Kelpamalt's iodine you quickly normalize your weight and strength-building glands, promote assimilation, enrich the blood and build up a source of enduring strength. Seedol Kelpamalt, too, contains twelve other precious, vitally needed body minerals without which good digestion is impossible.

Try Seedol Kelpamalt for a single week. Notice how much better you feel, how well you sleep, how your appetite improves, color comes back into your cheeks. And if it doesn't add 5 lbs. of good solid flesh the first week, if it doesn't relieve ordinary stomach distress, and give you calm nerves the trial is free. Your own doctor will approve this way. 100 Jumbo size Seedol Kelpamalt Tablets—four to five times the size of ordinary tablets—cost but a few cents a day to use. Get Seedol Kelpamalt today. Seedol Kelpamalt is sold at all good drug stores. If your dealer has not yet received his supply, send $1.00 for special introductory size bottle of 65 tablets to the address below.

brief as possible. And of course you need not send in a fancy or elaborately decorated entry. It's the idea that counts! Write your idea on anything that's handy.

Here are the rules:

1. Contest closes December 20th, 1936. All entries must be in the mail not later than midnight, December 20th, 1936.

2. Any reader is entitled to enter except employees and relatives of employees of Fawcett Publications, Inc., Motion Picture Publications, Inc., or A Mervyn LeRoy Production.

3. It is not necessary to submit a drawing of the trademark—you can outline your idea in words.

4. Do not submit fanciful or decorated entries.

5. Judges will be Mervyn LeRoy, S. Charles Einfeld, Director of Advertising and Publicity for Warner Bros., and Edward Selzer, Publicity Director for Warner Bros.

6. Contest closes at midnight, December 20th, 1936.

7. In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded.

8. Submit your entry (or entries) to Contest Editor, SCREEN BOOK Magazine, Hollywood, Calif.

9. Prize winners agree to sign over all right and title to winning designs and to accept the prize money as full compensation for the same. No entries will be returned.

From now on it's all up to you. Here's hoping your entry wins a prize.

Now you're ready. So let's go! First of all, what sort of trademarks do other studios use? You'll want to steer clear of any so familiar as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's lion, Old Leo, who roars at you from the screen at the start of everv Metro picture. That was Sam Goldwyn's idea (he now has his own studio, though) because the lion was the symbol of Columbia University, where he was a student.

You've often seen the cloud-hooded mountains used by Paramount Pictures. The man who conceived that was—you're right!—he was from the Rocky Mountain district.

The stuttering, sparking radio tower used by RKO-Radio Pictures is a striking and not-easily-forgotten trademark. Perfectly appropriate to the studio's name, too. This studio has another trademark—as you can see from the sketch under the title.

The emblem for 20th Century-Fox is as modern as the Twentieth Century—with skyscraper letters and up-pointed searchlights.

Columbia Studio uses the Statue of Liberty—which suggests the gem of the ocean.

Mervyn wants a trademark that is distinctive, indicates high quality—one that will be easily remembered and easily pictured. This is your chance! The prizes are worth working for.

You have until December 20 to get your entry in. Mail your ideas to Contest Editor, SCREEN BOOK, Hollywood, Calif.

AMERICAN producers can and should take tips from the English producers when it comes to filming history. Despite the rich resources at command of our American producers they have yet to capture the authenticity, impressiveness and dramatic value for which English historical films are famous. What historical films have we to match those two superb portraits of royalty, Henry VIII and more recently Nine Days A Queen—both British made pictures.

Perhaps the fault lies in our own studios passing up American history for the history of other countries. Perhaps it is the tendency producers have of distorting, changing and even creating new episodes when filming history. In all other respects American producers are superior but when it comes to filming history they must take a back seat. May it not be for long.—Floyd Miller, Box 367, Harmarville, Pa.

A Second Will Rogers

WHEN Will Rogers passed on we sighed, "There will never be a second Will Rogers" and we thought we spoke the truth, but the other night we saw Stormy featuring Noah Beery, Jr. We were struck by his likeness to and by his little mannerisms so like the immortal Will.

He has personality and naturalness, two qualities a successful actor should have. He is still very young but if that naturalness is not schooled out of him, I am sure the next generation will have the pleasure of seeing him portray many of the rôles that endeared Will to this generation.—C. E. Merriam, 980 Gramercy Drive, Los Angeles, Calif.

The Fight Continues

DON'T let the producers pay any attention to the first prize letter in the October issue of SCREEN BOOK. We don't want realism! We see enough of the sordid, the ugly, the commonplace, in everyday life. Give us beauty and glamour and grace in the actors and actresses. Let them approach as nearly as possible to our ideals.

Nature herself is beautiful, and even she likes to fool herself. Have you ever seen a mirage on an arid, burning desert? The Divine principle that governs the universe always works toward perfection. Can we do less?

Did you ever see a pretty girl with glasses, without thinking "What a shame she has to wear them? Or a fat woman, that you didn't mentally exclaim, "Why doesn't she reduce?" Or a frumpy person, that you didn't cry aloud, "A beauty parlor in every block and she looks like that!"

So tell them to keep right on giving us glamour. When I see Garbo, or Dietrich, or Ginger Rogers floating in the perfect rhythm of her dance, I forget about my 160 pounds, my gray hair and my glasses. For a couple of hours, life is lovely and beautiful as it should be. More power to the beautiful ladies of the screen!—Hazel Pickett, 226 Cheyenne Ave., Colorado Springs, Colo.

Horses In Mid Stream

I AM a dyed-in-the-wool western picture fan. I never tire of the wide-open spaces, the gun fights, the thrilling hand-to-hand fist fight at the end of the picture between the hero and the villain.

But one thing puzzles me. Why does the hero change horses from one scene to another? I am very interested in horses, so I can't help noticing them in westerns. (To be truthful, that is the real reason I like westerns). In one scene there will be a gray horse, yet, in the next scene, the animal has miraculously turned a snowy white!

Ken Maynard's horse "Tarzan" is a palomino (a cream-colored horse with white mane and tail). In one scene in a western where this horse jumps a fence, he has changed into a white horse. How come? In a Tom Mix western I noticed that he changed horses often. In one scene he would use a young horse, in the next scene an older, more sedate, horse was used. Was this for the purpose of resting the horses? I wish some reader would enlighten me.—Mary Goryup, 1737 So. First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Conversation Piece

THE party is nothing if not dull. The guests are duller. Your host, you decide, has managed to gather together the most uncongenial and boring company on the face o' the wide, wide globe. Everyone talks shop or sulks, and no one cares in the least about anyone else's profession. Suddenly you can bear it no longer. You say abruptly to your neighbor: "Have you seen Romeo and Juliet (or Swing Time or Suzy as the case may be)?"

The atmosphere changes. Boredom and silence vanish. Gone are the sulks, gone are fret and pique, gone self-consciousness and the feeling of neglect! Electric quality fills the air. Tongues clack. Movies—that's the rub! That's what everyone knows about! There's where all opinions lie! For the rest of the evening one hears "Franchot this" and "Joan that" and "Bette who"—and great good humor envelopes all.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead that he hasn't a favorite whom he is willing to defend at sword's point? Of course not! That's what movies are—a common tie, a common bond of conversation, a lifesaver at the dullest gatherings. Hasn't this happened—time and again—to you?—Timothy Tone, Care of Mrs. Holmes, Marshfield Hills, Mass.

Poor English!

How much is it costing you in wasted opportunity?

Every day your associates are judging you—by what you say and how you say it! Hazy ideas, ill-chosen words, halting sentences, crude, slovenly speech—these mark a man as loose in thinking. Thoughts clear-cut, words that give true shape and color, sentences aflame with power and originality—these are the things that proclaim ability, that win for their users swift advancement. Stop apologizing for poor English—it's inexcusable! In the quiet of your home—with LaSalle's help—you can learn to speak and write with real distinction, learn to make the words you utter and the letters you compose stamp you as educated, cultured, a power to reckon with in the business world. GRAY HAIR!

The Best Remedy is Made at Home

YOU can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy, by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, makes it soft and glossy and takes years off your looks. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off. Do not be handicapped by gray hair when it is so easy to get rid of it in your own home.

I Kept This Under My Hat!

NORMAN FOSTER was an important leading man when he and Claudette Colbert were appearing together in The Barker and disappearing together after the show from the watchful and disapproving eye of Mama Chauchoin. It was first love with Claudette and even parental opposition to their romance did not dim her radiance.

One afternoon Claudette attended a charitable benefit held in a private dining room. She was stationed at the door, soliciting donations. Norman, the ever-faithful, sent her wistful glances from a far corner of the room. After a while of this, Claudette came to a decision. She reached into her purse, crammed a handful of paper money into the collection box and thrust it at me.

"Please take my place," she whispered furtively, and dashed off to the only arms that interested her. I remained to collect alms for the love of sweet charity.

Love happens to stars, just as it happens to stenographers. They suffer the same heartaches and thrill to the same words of endearment. I've given my handkerchief to dry the tears of many a famous name who had just quarreled publicly with her new romance. So used to parading emotions before an audience are they, that they show little reticence in discussing their personal problems.

GINGER ROGERS was never so concerned with a romance as she was with her career. She was making personal appearances a few years ago and had been run ragged all day being interviewed on the radio and meeting the many fans she corresponds with regularly. In the midst of her dinner one night she jumped up with a dismayed shriek.

"Renee, I'm late for my show! And the theatre is way out in Brooklyn and whatever will I do and you know what the traffic is . . ."

She stood there wringing her hands, while Carroll set to thinking. There would be too much delay arranging a motorcycle escort. Even if she were to tell a cab driver to disregard all traffic rules, she'd still be many precious minutes late.

I rushed to the telephone and ordered an ambulance. I told a nearby hospital that it was an emergency case and not a moment was to be lost. Ginger got the biggest kick out of the situation after that first amazed moment. She invited me to hop in with her but duty called and my job was checking hats.

A goodly crowd had collected by the time the ambulance had stopped in front of the restaurant. Waving cheerily, away Ginger went, a clamour of sirens clearing the traffic lanes. Ginger made the show, and I made myself a reputation for ingenuity.

I'VE had my moments that weren't quite so hilarious, though none-the-less full of excitement. Nancy Carroll checked a very beautiful mink wrap one evening. Nancy had been in quite often. We both had red hair and the same name. Maybe I became a little confused . . .

Anyway, I tried on the coat! I shouldn't have, of course. It's against all rules. But furs are my weakness, and there couldn't be any harm in admiring myself in the seclusion of the cloakroom while Nancy dined. You know how a girl can get to dreaming . . . when—whew!—a powerful scream petrified me.

Nancy was glaring with blazing eyes.

"Take off that coat! How dare you do such a thing! I'll have you fired for this!"

She snatched the coat from my back. I've never seen her to this day. Mr. Sardi looked at me in agony. The entire restaurant had taken in the scene. Surely everyone must think I had been caught rifling someone's pocket.

I wasn't fired, but my embarrassment was acute.

THE next afternoon Miriam Hopkins staggered in lugging a ten pound box of chocolates.

"I'm dieting, Renee," she said carelessly. "A boy friend sent this over. You take it."

It was Miriam's way of letting me know that we were still friends. She had been present the night before.

Miriam has a reputation for being "snippy." Of all the stars I have seen gain fame almost overnight, Miriam has changed the least. She has no diplomacy and a complete disregard for public opinion. So she doesn't bother to pretend to like you if she doesn't.

If you're the butcher, the baker, or the chambermaid, and she takes a fancy to you, you're her pal. She is without pose, and frequently makes a jest of her "funny face." I must candidly admit she isn't at all pretty. Yet men have always adored her.

Perhaps that's because she seems so indifferent to them when in their company! She is always more interested in the people around her, than her escort. A shiny nose or the wrong hat with her newest dress doesn't bother her in the least. And next to Dietrich, she is the most adoring mother to her adopted son.

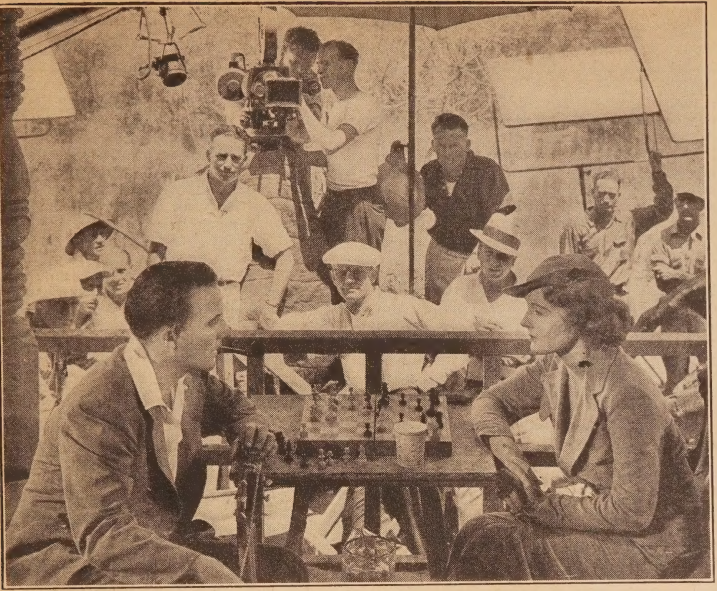
PAT O'BRIEN enjoys nothing so much as a few convivial souls about him while he relates an endless number of Pat and Mike stories in an inimitable brogue. It wasn't until Pat solemnly went "on the wagon," after a lengthy courtship, that Eloise Taylor became Mrs. O'Brien.

I lent him cab fare once when he lost track of the time while bending the elbow fraternally with a few cronies. He was late for an appointment with Eloise—and her apartment was in the vast regions of Brooklyn. I think that was the time he had to take the pledge or else. And I've never seen a happier couple since their marriage.

Mavourneen, Pat's little daughter, is his special pride. You'd never know from him that he is one of the highest salaried stars in pictures; that he has the most luxurious dressing-room on the Warner lot; and is the most popular star with studio employees.

CHESTER and Sue Morris are another couple who have changed little since they first started romancing over their favorite table. They still like to occupy the same booth and they're still romantically in love.

Chester likes to excuse himself from his sweet Sue, and phone her table from the telephone booth in the restaurant.



—Jones

What will appear on the screen as a quiet little duet of chess for Bing Crosby and Madge Evans is actually played in front of more than a score of cameramen, directors and technicians. The picture is Pennies from Heaven, the director is Norman McLeod

"It might interest you to know, Mrs. Morris," he'll inform her in a disguised voice, "that a certain unrecognized genius of the theatre world is madly in love with a certain beautiful blonde. Darling, I love you . . ."

Chester is full of such whimsy, and the most married man I know. No other woman exists for him.

NOT so long ago an interesting young man with thinning hair lunched daily with Judith Wood. The young man was an enthusiastic member of the newly organized Group Theatre. Judith was a struggling young actress. They never even looked up when a famous couple, just arrived from a European vacation, took the next table.

Young Doug Fairbanks and Joan Crawford had been absorbed in each other like the pair at the next table, only a few months before.

"Doug's too thin," she had confided then, asking for extra helpings of butter. Now they sat in polite silence. Joan looked anything but happy. She had enjoyed her first European trip, she replied to a query, but it was so nice to be back.

Doug was no longer too thin and his smile wasn't quite so boyish. On Joan's most recent visit in the East, which turned out to be a honeymoon, she lunched almost daily in Sardi's with her new husband. The interesting young man with the thinning hair.

FRANCHOT TONE asked for the same booth he had once shared with the blonde young actress and Joan never suspected that a few short years before, the young actor had been too absorbed in his companion to notice her glamourous presence.

There can be no doubt that Joan and Franchot are very happy. Joan has acquired a new dignity in keeping with her husband's innate reserve. There is no public hand holding, but when their eyes meet you sense that there is something real and lasting between them.

There are several stars I might name who are regular fussbudgets, and believe in a minimum tip at the same time. Joan is genuinely embarrassed if she notices that the waiters or the cooks are going to any particular trouble for her.

She'll thank me extravagantly for some trivial service. I've made it a rule never to accept tips from a woman. I removed a cinder from Jeanette MacDonald's eye one windy day and she tried so hard to press a tip on me. With the men . . . well . . . yoo-hoo, Bob, I'm still on the cuff. . . .

I CHECKED the same hat for Lee Tracy after a five year absence in Hollywood, during which he bought a yacht, a car, and a home. But no new chapeau. It was as familiar to me as Maurice Chevalier's straw hat. I've listened to Lionel Stander orate on politics, playwrights and producers, with brilliance, and then listened to him wonder where he could borrow carfare. He hasn't changed at all.

They tell me they don't wear hats in Hollywood. Maybe that's why some of the stars permit their heads to swell and have to get a new size hat band when they return to Sardi's. But when I give one of them a check to identify his hat, he catches on. I've never given a check to a familiar face and I've never made a mistake.

When I "check-up" on them, they know they've been chastened for going Hollywood.

If you like this story—just remember it's the kind of frank, behind-the-scenes tale you always find in SCREEN BOOK.

Hollywood's Greatest Romance!

a nasty crack about that wedding—and believe me, in Hollywood, that's extraordinary. Why, even Sam Briskin, business-headed boss at RKO, to whom romance is usually a thing to sell in celluloid and not a thing to interfere with production schedules, simply turned those very schedules inside-out at his lot, just to give Ann Sothern a month's vacation for her honeymoon . . . ! !

They're off on that honeymoon, now, back east. I saw them soar into the skies on the beginning of it—by airplane from Hollywood. Let me tell you, those kids were so gloriously happy and so far away in their dreams that they didn't know whether they were in an airplane or a submarine—and didn't care, either.

AND now let me tell you the story of their romance, from its beginning. I'll probably surprise you, right at the beginning, by telling you they've been head-over-heels in love for four years! Even in Hollywood, where everybody knows everything about everybody else, a lot of people thought Ann and Roger were just another of those passing twosomes—dinner at the Brown Derby, a dance at the Troc and poof, who's next?

They didn't know that four years ago, in Chicago, Li'l Danny Cupid sat on the sidelines at an after-the-theater-party, and sent one of his notoriously effective arrows zipping through a couple of hearts at once, which is the neat trick he has.

It seems that in Chicago two shows were running, among others—Of Thee I Sing, and There's Always Juliet. Heart-faced, lush-lipped Ann Sothern was the lead in the former; tall, good-looking Roger Pryor was knocking the matinee gals dead in the other.

Now, this was a Saturday night. There'd been two shows that day—and Ann and Roger were both tired, and a bit grouchy that night. They went to the party out of deference to their host, but neither of them felt like it. They met there. Roger, to whom gals were something that clustered around for autographs and smiles, lifted an eyebrow when he saw Ann. She seemed different.

Ann, who'd been in love before and learned about men from them, thought Roger was nice-looking, but "kind of grouchy." Anyway, that's what she told a girl-friend that very night, after she'd met him. She didn't realize that he was just tired. However, "grouchy" as he may have seemed, she did fall for him enough to say yes when he asked if he couldn't drive around to her hotel next afternoon and take her for a Sunday ride and dinner.

Well, after the party, Ann went to her hotel, dead-exhausted. She left word at the desk that no matter who called, she didn't want to be disturbed until she rang the next day. She went to sleep—and slept so long that when Roger Pryor appeared to keep his Sunday date, she hadn't called the desk yet.

"Sorry, sir," was all he got out of the clerks, "but she left word that she couldn't be disturbed—under any circumstances."

Nine men out of ten would have said a short word or two, and stepped out of the picture. Roger was the tenth man. He planted himself in the lobby to wait her out. At long last, Ann awoke, refreshed. Finally when he could get through to her—by now it was late afternoon—Roger reminded her of their date.

Ann flushed to the roots of her hair. Tired she was, but never rude. This time, she'd been rude. That it happened unintentionally didn't matter. Ann was chagrined. Roger knew it. And he was a man of the world enough to know that when a man is in that spot with a gal, he has an advantage—if he knows how to play it.

Roger knew how. He didn't bawl Ann out. He didn't chide her. He smoothed over the embarrassment of her faux pas without even leaving her conscious that she had had to apologize. That makes women mad, usually—to apologize.

And so, Roger got what he wanted—a date with Ann. That led to many dates. They discovered that they shared between them one great love—music. Of course, lots of people love music, but for some reason or other, they don't talk much about it. It's considered sissy for a man to rave about music, too often; and gals feel, on the other hand, they have to talk man's talk to interest men.

Neither Ann nor Roger suffered from these ideas. Ann's mother is Annette Yde Lake, noted concert singer. Roger's dad is Arthur Pryor, one of America's greatest bandmasters. They'd both lived music all their lives—and when they discovered it, they talked and lived music together, through the hours of their dates.

And before either of them ever even thought about it, they were in love.

To many couples, that would have been entry into heaven. To Ann Sothern and Roger Pryor, it seemed akin to tragedy. They'd been living a beautiful friendship, unobstacled. Love was different. For, automatically, it raised a barrier which was not there for friendship. You see, Roger Pryor was a married man.

True, he and his wife were separated—had been separated for some time. But there'd been no divorce. Ann, who'd been in love before, but never seriously, suddenly found herself in that horrid position—her first deep, real love was with a married man. I needn't dwell on the heart-aches that brought; many of you who read this may have had a similar experience; certainly all of you have had close contact with one.

ANN and Roger, being pretty darned swell, decent people, tried to fight. But when you start fighting that little hellster called Cupid, you're licked at the start. They knew that technically they had no right to be in love; they knew actually that they couldn't help it. Roger's wife was disinclined toward divorce. It looked gloomy for Ann.

So, when a Hollywood contract gleamed before her, and she went west, it was with a heavy heart that she bade Pryor good-bye. She thought maybe she'd never see him again—and maybe she'd get over it. She cried all the way out to the Coast.

And when she got there, she picked up a film news sheet and read that Roger Pryor had been signed by Universal, and was coming to the Coast at once! Li'l Danny Cupid was doing his stuff, despite the most conscientiously-laid plans and hopes of two youngsters named Ann and Roger. . . .

Naturally, on the Coast, Ann and Roger saw a great deal of each other.

But Ann, fighting, went out with other boys, too. There was Norman Krasna, the office boy who turned playwright; Cesar Romero, suave and grand fun—and enough to turn many a girl's head; an executive or two with perhaps not so much charm but certainly plenty of money. Roger, too, went out with other girls. But all this was just so much nonsense—they couldn't get away from the fact that they wanted to fulfill that destiny in the way lovers must—marriage. And yet, there was apparently little hope for that.

And then, suddenly, came the unlooked-for break. Suddenly, Mrs. Roger Pryor was in Reno, and on file in the Reno courts was her action for divorce. Nobody knows exactly why the step was taken after those long months, years. But if you want a certain guess, I'll tell you about Lillian, who's Ann's personal maid.

Lillian is a movie-fan. She's head-over-heels cuh-razy about her mistress. She's heartily in favor of Roger Pryor, too. Lillian went several times to see Columbia's recent film, The Girl Friend—which co-starred Ann and Roger. That picture was released not long before Mrs. Pryor began her divorce move. And here's Lillian's diagnosis—and you simply can't change her mind:

"It 'pears to me," says Lillian, "dat maybe Mistuh Pryor's wife done went an' see dat moom pitcha. An' if'n she did, an' if'n she seen in Mistuh Pryor's eyes an' Miss Sothern's eyes what dat film showed, why, it seems to me she jus' couldn't do nothin' else but go to Reno, if'n she was any kind of person a-tall!"

BE THAT as it may, there was the early summer day when one of Nevada's divorce-mill judges scrawled his signature across a decree—and Roger Pryor was a free man.

It was only hours between that and the moment he stepped off a United Airliner at Hollywood. He'd been back east, during those weeks. But at the notice of the divorce, he flew to the Coast to pop the question. He did it with a characteristic 1936 gesture—he stepped blithely off the plane and smack up against a welcome kiss from Ann, and then he said:

"Now, sweetheart—when are you gonna marry me?"

Ann's answer knocked the wind out of him.

"Not," she said, "for a long time, yet . . .!!!"

"Mrs. Pryor," he pointed out, "married that army captain two days after she divorced me."

"I know," said Ann, "but we're not playing that way. I know I love you; I know you love me. But Roger—you've been tied in marriage for so long, now, that I want you to be free for many months, to be able to make up your mind rationally, calmly, away from the sudden feeling of release that's on you now. I don't want you 'on the rebound;' I want you to know, for sure, that you want me."

It took bravery on Ann's part. She hungered beyond words for her man. She knew that he was attractive to women; that they besieged him. She knew that they would be apart for months, now—for she was on contract in Hollywood, while he was on an eastern tour with his orchestra. She faced all that, and she made him face it, despite his unrelenting arguments. She faced, too, the inevitable criticisms and gossip in Hollywood over the Pryor divorce; she had the strength to face it because she knew she and Roger had played fair, and that no one could say otherwise.

"Thank God," Roger has since said to friends, "that the former Mrs. Pryor and I were separated before this came. Never can they say: 'Look what Hollywood did to another perfect marriage.'"

Li'l Dan Cupid must have gotten impatient at Ann's conscience, or caution, or whatever it was. He went to work. He pulled some strings—and suddenly, Ann and Roger found that they were both signed up to do a broadcast from Hollywood on the same night over a national hook-up. And they were to play the lover rôles in There's Always Juliet.

Roger had to fly from Denver to make the Hollywood radio studio appearance. He arrived in time to have dinner with Ann—the plane landed at 4:30 and off they went.

That dinner—well, I'll bet that neither Ann nor Roger can tell you what they ate. But they'll never forget the dinner! Paradox?—not exactly, for you see, it was right at the beginning of it that Ann broke down at last, as Roger's million-and-one-th asking of "When'll you marry me, darling?"

"Right away," she said.

They went through their broadcast that night. Maybe you heard it! Maybe you commented that Ann and Roger were putting a grand lot of conviction and force and just plain "oomph" into their love-scene. They sure were; they meant it.

The next day, they got their marriage license. Ann was so excited that she forgot where her father was born. Incidentally, Ann is twenty-seven, Roger is thirty-three.

They chafed at California's three-day marriage law—three days must elapse between filing notice of intention to wed, and the ceremony. They got their license on a Wednesday. That meant that Thursday, Friday and Saturday would have to pass. Sunday was a holiday, and they'd have to wait until Monday to get their license. By that time, to fill engagements, Roger had to be in the air, headed back east. What to do?

Officials are sometimes kind. In the marriage license bureau, they have to be both kind and wise. So they fixed it like this: They gave Ann and Roger a license to marry—but only in exchange for their affidavit that they would not use it until Sunday. That way, the lovers saved a day.

They found Hollywood's Reverend Dr. Lash anxious to help. He told them that of course, he'd be waiting for them at the altar of his church, at one minute past twelve, Sunday morning. That's what they did. And the next day, they climbed into a plane and flew off to Chicago, on their honeymoon.

Ann's boy friends were at the wedding—the boys she'd been going out with in Hollywood. Roger insisted they be invited. Ann carried a bouquet, too. Roger kidded her about it at first. "But it's the first time I've ever been married," she nearly wept, "and I want a church wedding and a bouquet!"

Joan Bennett, Ann's closest friend, jumped all over Roger. "Let her have her bouquet, you big bully," she stormed, in mock rage; "you'd better make this wedding as lovely as you can—because it's going to be the last one in both of your lives!"

So Ann had her bouquet, and her veil, and it was a church wedding. And now she's the happiest Mrs. in the world. She ought to be. Four years of that sort of waiting is worth its reward in happiness.

Our Hollywood Frivolities

—Charles Rhodes

The horse took one look—and laughed a loud horse laugh!—at John Bryan, Pat O'Brien, Paula Stone, Mrs. Pat O'Brien, Dennis Moore and Fred Stone in their new party clothes

"Special Bus"—but the rider hadn't seen the sign on the front. Frantically, the b.p. tapped on the door, looked anxiously at his watch, and waved his arms in the general direction of downtown Los Angeles.

Pinky's birthday party went into a huddle. "Let him in!" they chorused. The door slid open and their unexpected guest clambered aboard. Reaching into his pocket, he produced a dime. "Free ride," came the cry of thirty voices.

"Free . . . er . . . huh?? the man backed up and sat down, a dazed expression on his face. And the fun began. Wandering off the beaten path, the bus turned down all the side streets. The occupants passed candy and Coca-Cola to the more bewildered passenger. He grinned a silly grin—sort of as if to say, "Oh, yes—this IS fun . . ." but he still didn't know what went on. To top it, the gang invited him to join the party at the theatre. Gus accepted! "Gus on a bus." Some fun!

INNOCENT bystanders were looking around for a Mandrake, the Magician, on the Winterset stage at RKO the other day.

After going through their scene in a synthetic downpour, Margo and Burgess Meredith, drenched to the skin, dashed to their respective dressing rooms and, in less than five minutes, returned to the set, bone dry and wearing the identical clothes that had been soaked through a moment before!

They repeated the stunt half a dozen times and then Meredith explained to the pop-eyed press that the secret was three duplicating sets of costume and two industrious wardrobe ladies who dried and pressed the wet garments as fast as they were discarded.

ON THE same set, an extra girl standing on the sidelines, turned to the girl who stood next to her and, indicating Meredith, sighed: "Gee, he's swell! I could care for that guy!"

The other girl smiled and nodded. And, when lunch was called, she walked off the set on the arm of Mr. Meredith!

Back on the set again, the first extra took her aside and said: "Look . . . this

"Burgess Meredith and Margo must be quick-change artists and wardrobe magicians," thought those who watched them make in-the-rain scenes is Hollywood and all that, but you gotta be careful about fooling around with married men. His wife could shoot you and get away with it in this country."

"She could," the other agreed, "but it would be suicide. You see, I'm his wife."

And she wasn't fooling, either. Because Meredith's most active superstition is that his wife must appear, at least once, in any of his productions, either stage or screen, to insure the success of his performance.

AND, before we get off Winterset, we think you ought to know that Margo is the recipient of a barrage of bouquets from Francis Lederer, who seems to have changed his mind again. In fact, Francis' floral offerings are a daily event and, to date, he hasn't missed a day in three weeks. Which makes it practically permanent. As Hollywood goes, at least.

ON LOCATION with the God's Country and the Woman company, Beverly Roberts adopted a faun that had been coaxed out of the tall timber by her leading man, George Brent. By the time the company was ready to leave for home, "Fannie" (short for "faunie") had become so affectionately docile that Beverly couldn't bear to leave it behind, and bundled the gangly animal into her car with the idea of taking it along as sort of a house pet.

But the Game Warden, who hadn't missed a trick since the company pulled into his private Elysia, had other plans for the beastie.

"No, ma'am!" he said firmly. "That there animal is state property an' she stays right here!"

"But," Beverly pouted prettily, "couldn't I adopt it? I'd give it a nice home and good food. . . ."

"Look, ma'am," the fellow said, "I was put here to see that you movie folks didn't get away with any fish outa the lake. Fish, now, is pretty small stuff. An' where'd I be if I let you walk off with a 200-pound animal? No, MA'AM!"

And, as far as we know, "Fannie" is still tearing through the underbrush, nibbling at the shrubbery and remembering the time she almost got adopted.

IT IS no fable that the picture industry is really in earnest about promoting new talent for the screen.

Republic Studios, the most up-and-coming independent enterprise in the business, has developed a search-for-talent department, devoted to the discovery and development of youthful ability that has until now, been wasted on the desert air (?)

Ned Dodson, Republic's talent scout, has organized a drama school on the lot in which any youngster displaying a certain amount of talent is given the benefit of studying under some of the biggest directors in the industry.

Incidentally, out of the first class, Grace Durkin was given a nice contract with Republic.

LEE DIXON, whose hot hoofing with Rudy Vallée's orchestra led to a break in pictures has been trying futilely to meet June Travis ever since he landed in town. It's one of those "the-first-time-I-looked-at-you-one-two-three-kick!" things, with poor Lee wandering around hopefully searching for a mutual friend who'll be big enough to introduce them.

After a bit of plain and fancy sleuthing, young Dixon did discover the apartment house where June lives, moved into it, bag and baggage, and now walks down three flights of stairs to take the elevator on June's floor in the hope of running into her, accidental like, one of these lucky days!

It's too bad for Lee, however, because, at the moment, Craig Reynolds has the inside track in the current race for the Travis Affections. When the Warners' younger crowd, who have organized a riding club, go for their regular Friday night canter, Craig's horse just naturally hooves alongside June's mount, without even being told. Just a creature of habit.

This Friday night "horsing around" is quite the thing, at the moment. It started out in a small way, with only half a dozen of the Warner folks—June Travis, Ann Sheridan, Louise Stanley, Craig Reynolds, Wayne Morris and Russ Saunders, in attendance. But now, the group has attained such proportions that Vic MacLaglen's Light Horse Troop is beginning to look silly.

After a brisk trot along the bridle path, the kids wind up at somebody's house for eats, with the new recruits standing up to it! And, so far, they declare it beats dancing, roller skating or the fights all hollow.

WAYNE MORRIS, a new comer recruited from the Pasadena Community Playhouse, has been thoroughly initiated by the younger crowd and survived the ordeal beautifully.

For a gag, Ross Alexander brought his colored helps' two pickaninnies on the set where Wayne was giving his all before the cameras. After the shot was finished, the two cute youngsters went up to Wayne, hand in hand, and piped: "Hello, papa!" But Wayne was equal to the situation. Pointing to Anne Nagel, Alexander's bride of a few weeks, who was in on the joke, he said: "Run along and tell mama I'll be late for dinner tonight!"

JACK DUNN, the young, handsome and internationally known ice-skater, who rates a top spot in Universal's big production Hippodrome, has a snow white, super-charged Auburn that is about as inconspicuous as Hitler at a kosher picnic.

For a while, Ketti Gallian shared the front seat with him. Then, Jean Rogers, Janice Jarrett and, finally, Mary Alice Rice, who, to date, has held it down longer than any of them.

Of course, it's problematical, but we've figured that a blonde sets off a white Auburn more effectively than a brunette. And it might have occurred to Jack that it's cheaper to change girls than invest in a new paint job?

Bob Taylor's Battle for Self-Respect!

second prize, on his arm, to present her to Bob. The introduction was made, Bob reached out to shake her hand. The girl fainted. He grabbed her to keep her from falling. The rangers were quickly suspicious. "Here, we'll take care of her. She's only trying to attract attention." But Bob knew differently. "Wait a minute, she's really ill. Get back, everybody. Give her air." With the rangers making way for him, Bob carried her to a bench, set her down gently, shook her, patted her wrists, tried to revive circulation. At the same time out of the corner of his eye he could see the photographers closing in. In a flash he could see the headlines, the newsreels, "GIRL MEETS BOB TAYLOR, FAINTS!" The whole thing ridiculous, sob-sister stuff, smacking of ballyhoo.

"You keep the cameras off, I'll take care of the girl," Bob begged the rangers. But behind the appeal there was also the undeniable earnestness which also made it a demand. At that instant the girl came to, took another look at Bob, fainted again. The heat, the excitement, the fact that she had come so close to winning the crown, and losing . . . and Bob Taylor: the total was too much. Whereupon Bob saw that she really needed a doctor, allowed the rangers to take her away, and he faced the photographers. Several shot the scoop picture. It was to them that he turned his attention. What he said was brief but definite. The plates were destroyed.

IT WAS the next day that the second thing happened. It was raining. Bob was scheduled to make another appearance, but because of the rain it was called off. Centennial officials were anxious to plan something else for him instead, to fill in the time until the evening appearance, but "Thank you, gentlemen, but I've already planned my day. I have something I've wanted to do for a long time. A little sight-seeing on my own . . ." he added in answer to their puzzled stares.

For a half hour the photographers stood ready and waiting at the entrance to the hotel. Where Bob would go, so would they go too, to do honor to their fair city. "BOB TAYLOR SEES DALLAS" . . . it would make a nice full-page layout of pictures.

Inside Bob waited too. He had no intention of being escorted by cameras on this particular trip. This was a little mission of his own. A visit he had long looked forward to—a visit to the children's ward at the Orthopedic Hospital. And there was to be no publicity about it whatsoever. Sure, it would be a nice tie-up with all his doctor rôles and all that—as one of the Metro publicity men who was there with Bob pointed out. No publicity, or he wouldn't go. He had made all the arrangements that were necessary. He had called the head nurse. She would arrange for him to go through.

It made publicity tongues water, but in the end Bob had his way. They slipped him out the back way, stopped at a wholesale confectioners to pick up two hundred boxes of candy, and Bob made his visit to the children's ward. His father had been a doctor. Bob had wanted to be one. He wanted the smell of a hospital again. He wanted to say hello to those kids.

A whole ward of them, strung up on wires. Grinning, twisted, tortured faces. Bob smiled at every one. Shook the hands of those who could shake hands. Presented each box of candy personally. Gave autographs. To him it was the most important thing about that whole triumphant Dallas trip. Thirty-six thousand people gave him applause; he gave candy and a brief moment of joy to two hundred kids. And, at the time, not a word of it reached the world.

"Getting fussy about publicity," say some of the scribes. But "getting fussy about remaining a real person" say those who know.

RECENTLY again, Bob put his foot down when it came to "talking about Garbo." Since interviews with Garbo can't be obtained, it has been the custom during recent Garbo pictures for her leading men to tell what they observed about Garbo. When this proposition was put up to Bob, a few days after the picture had gone into production, he kindly declined the honor.

"How can I say anything about her? I don't really know her. So far we've had a few scenes together, yes, but wouldn't it sound silly for me to pretend I know her . . . that we're bosom friends? She doesn't reveal herself to me any more than she does to anyone else on the set. It's all very business like. I doubt if I know her very well even by the time the picture is finished." That from Bob Taylor when most any other actor in the world would jump at the chance of hitching his publicity wagon to the Swedish star.

All this warring for individuality—this fighting off the Hollywood mould—naturally has its dangers. There is, as a prime example, the risk he runs of starting that old time-worn Hollywood rumor, "Fame has turned his head . . . he's going high-hat . . . getting uppish in the world."

As a matter of fact there are those who already say that Bob has begun to put on the airs . . . that he no longer mingles with the masses. You used to see him around at the night clubs. In restaurants, theatres. Where is he now? Hiding out. Not deigning to be seen by the crowds. Refusing invitations to appear at benefits. Seeking seclusion, like Garbo.

True, Bob does not frequent the Hollywood spots as much as he used to. But what the accusers don't realize is that neither, in the past did he make pictures like he does now. Just look at his schedule for the past few months: Small Town Girl, Private Number, The Gorgeous Hussy, His Brother's Wife, and Camille—with never more than a few days in between, and those days spent in testing and costume fitting. Even the week he spent in New York last spring was more play than work, what with interviews, personal appearances, and autograph signing. For almost two years, not one little vacation.

Then, in addition to the terrific claim that the work itself makes on him, there are the thousand and one other little things that scream at him for attention. An average of fifty writers a week beg for interviews. Nor are they satisfied with a few brief words. Recently a New York newspaper sent a man specially to Hollywood to get Bob's life story for a

Gloria Swanson and Herbert Marshall attend the tennis matches together. With them in their box are Elizabeth Allan and Brian Aherne. Herb rides an electrical horse for exercise. It recently went berserk and broke a lot of expensive china. It's the same piece of machinery that got out of control and threw Herb on his head once before serial, in thirty installments. Then there are the photographers who want him to pose, the artists who want to paint him, the advertisers who want to get his testimonials. To say nothing of the important visitors who want to meet him, and who must be met, to keep diplomatic peace in the movie world. Naturally Bob can't fill all these requests, but he does force himself to find time for most of them.

QUITE apart from all this Bob can't get around as he did once for still another reason; the actual threat that getting out in the world is to his physical being. Bob used to haunt the shooting galleries at the Venice Amusement Park. The fans love that. That was democratic, foolish, gay. But Bob doesn't go there anymore. It is not, as you expect, that Bob's taste has outgrown such simple pleasures. It is, rather, that his fame has grown too much for him to handle.

Not so many months ago when he and Barbara Stanwyck stepped up at a Venice shooting concession to take a few shots at a couple of cardboard rabbits, they were recognized, mobbed, and pushed into a corner and held there for two hours till four policemen could rescue them. Such frenzy is hard to imagine unless you have been in one of those mobs yourself. It all starts jovially. Excitedly, a few fans gather around for autographs. Then more come running, pushing, struggling to get to the fore. The stars keep backing away, trying to get out gracefully, smiling, begging "another time, another time!" Those close to them are willing to take their autographs and "git" but already they, too, are hemmed in. The air grows close, no longer can arms move freely. They are held powerless in one spot, tied by a human rope. On that particular occasion Bob had to yell to the concessioner to get someone, to send for someone to help them out. It took four policemen.

The amazing thing is that Bob goes through it all smiling. Studio officials who have been with him on such occasions, have marveled at his ability to handle himself in a crowd. His nerves never snap, he never grows panicky or angry. And it is also this calmness and affability which keeps the crowd from turning angry and sullen, as crowds have been known to turn, even on their favorites, when those favorites beg leave not to sign autographs or shake hands or give souvenirs. Studio officials marvel because this poise is something that is seldom found in even seasoned troopers, and because Bob is so new to the madness.

This poise is something which Bob has forced himself to develop. He admits that as a college boy he had none of it—that even such a mild thing as a sorority dance filled him with foreboding. But when he had the good sense to see the landslide of his fame, this was one of the things he developed so that he himself might not be caught in it. His intelligence has stood him in good stead here. For a long time Bob refused to believe what critics printed about him: "The most promising actor on the screen, destined to be the most popular male of 1936." He refused to believe it because it all seemed too good to be true, and because his natural modesty forbade him to anticipate it. Then, suddenly, it was there all around him, and he had to face it. And facing it did not mean giving in to it. Fame will never make a celluloid monkey out of him.

AGAIN, Bob realizes that anyone sitting on a movie skyrocket as he is must not only develop poise, but a story sense too, as far as his work is concerned. And lately he has begun to think that maybe he has been having too many of those dressed-up, playboy rôles.

He isn't a dandy, and the thing that he is looking forward to most these days is an opportunity to do a western type rôle.

Bob's an expert horseman and at present he's also taking lessons in trick riding, just in case. He also knows that Metro owns the right to The Girl of the Golden West. So, put one and one together, and you can see where this might lead to.

No star has ever had a more level head about his stardom. No star has ever clutched the rudder of his own boat more firmly. No star has ever fought more admirably for self-respect. It's not egotism, not temperament, not even false modesty. It's that innate ability to face success successfully.

And success, not defeat, believe it or not, is the worst menace in the world when it comes to breaking down a man's being.

The Men in Kay Francis' Life

unknown. She doesn't indulge much in self-revelations, especially those of her childhood. The story came out only because it was a case in point—and because she wanted to pay tribute to this man she knew as "Peter."

Kay was about twelve at the time. He was a neighbor. One of those old-young people of indefinite age. He was clipping a hedge when she saw him first. She was such a grave little thing, with widely serious gray eyes watching him intently.

"Good morning," he said. "And who might you be?"

"Katherine Gibbs. Who are you?"

"Peter," he answered quietly. And "Peter" he remained. They had long talks, those two. They used to call them "hedge talks" because they usually met by the neat row of boxberry between the two houses. The child listened to him eagerly, to his tales of travel and his straight-from-the-shoulder philosophy that he might have given a boy. "Play square, Kay. Always," he told her once, his eyes remembering something she couldn't fathom. "Then you'll have no regrets. You know how glad you were that you told the grocer about those two extra apples he put in the bag accidentally—because then he gave you three for being honest. Life's pretty much like that. In the end it gives you something extra for being honest. For playing the game fairly . . ."

Unconsciously, it was from Peter that Kay learned how to speak a man's language and to think with a man's directness, cutting through all the little feminine tricks and foibles.

She has never used tears to gain a point; she has never led any man on merely for a whim. Such things do not exist in Kay's strict little code. The code that Peter so ably helped to formulate . . .

She adored him. But soon it was time for her to go off to Miss Fuller's school in Ossining, New York, and her actress mother, Katherine Clinton moved to another city. Years slipped by swiftly. Kay went to the Cathedral School in Garden City to graduate. From there she took a six months' course in a business college—and a three months' vacation in Europe.

It was by no means a "de luxe" tour. But Kay had the time of her life—and on the boat coming back she fell in love. He was almost as young and as much of a romanticist as she was. This J. Dwight Francis. He had innate charm, innate feeling for things. For example—instead of buying her the usual kind of engagement ring, he gave her a ring that had been in his family for generations. An exquisitely cut diamond flanked by two sapphires, in an old-gold setting.

TWO weeks after they met they were married. At St. Thomas' church in New York with eighty friends present and Kay coming down the aisle in luscious gray satin and their families fuming. They were too young! Such a hasty youthful marriage would never work out!

It didn't. But it gave Kay something infinitely precious to remember. For today she says a shade wistfully, "It's a rather wonderful thing to be married very young and know that ecstatic happiness that belongs to the 'teens. I suppose I'd do it all over again."

She and Dwight, who was in the woollen business, went to Pittsfield, Mass., to live. In a six-room house. He followed tradition by carrying her over the threshold. Each month on the date of their wedding he sent her a magnificent white gardenia. That sweet young sentiment of early marriage did something to Kay. It changed her from a gawky, long-legged schoolgirl into a poised young woman. Love can do amazing things.

It made her cook, for instance. She had to learn how. She learned to keep house and try to find joy in being a seventeen-year-old matron in a small town. Her wings folded before they'd been tried.

At that it might have worked out if they hadn't fought as fervently as they loved! During one of their quarrels Kay walked out. She never went back. Instead, she went to New York and got herself a secretarial job.

But Dwight Francis gave her far more than the name she has made so famous. He taught Kay to think of someone else besides herself. Seventeen can have the egotism of a rajah, but not when it's trying to make someone else happy. He taught her to adjust herself to life. Dwight was definitely the second great influence in her life.

THE third came unexpectedly.

She walked onto a barren, cold stage and there he was, trying out talent. After a while he said, "Miss Francis, supposing you read this part." Kay shivered. Then she glanced at John Meehan and suddenly she forgot to be frightened. "Now," he said when she had finished, "read it over like this." She did. And he gave her the part. Meehan was the first person to give her a real chance in the theater. He worked long hours with her. He was the man who made Kay Francis an actress. But he was never her husband as some of the columnists have inferred. There was no romance. Only a deep, still-lasting bond of friendship.

Kay had been so desperately in need of assistance when she met him. She had just returned from a quiet Paris divorce and she had no mad urge to go back to the typewriter. Did she have enough ability to follow in her mother's footsteps on the stage? It was Meehan who gave her the assurance. Meehan who started her on her career.

She had become a "name" on Broadway by the time she met William Gaston.

A Harvard half-back whose father had been the late governor of Massachusetts, who was himself getting up in the world of politics—starting as Assistant District Attorney of Suffolk County. That was Gaston. He had been introduced to Kay at a fashionable penthouse party. And five minutes after the introduction she was saying to an intimate friend, "There's a man I would like to Marry!" That statement surprised Kay far more than it did the friend. She doesn't say such things lightly. She didn't want to fall in love at that time. But a couple of months later on a blustery winter morning she found herself standing in front of a minister with William Gaston in her own apartment with his colored chauffeur and a maid as witnesses.

To understand this so-called "mystery" marriage of Kay's, put yourself in her place. You're twenty. An impulsive romanticist for all your poised appearance. You've worked hard to get a foothold in your career and fifty people (including his campaign manager) are telling the man you're madly in love with that it will ruin him politically to marry an actress, a divorcée. You've tried to explain to him. He doesn't care about anything but you. He arrived one morning at your place with a license and a minister. In an ecstatic mad moment you become his wife. A secret marriage. And immediately after the ceremony he has to leave on an important business trip and you spend the four days of your honeymoon alone!

It was to be like that all through the eighteen months of their marriage—which only five people knew about. Their hours together were stolen. Once while she was travelling with a stock company he flew to join her. Ten minutes after his arrival she was due to give a performance. He had to leave at six in the morning. They had five hours together.

IT WAS a broken and bewildered Kay who sailed for Paris a second time for a divorce. Why had love failed her so completely?

But it hadn't quite—

Not long after she had become Mrs. Gaston a New York critic wrote, "There is a new assurance in Kay Francis' acting these days and a rich quality that augers well for her future. She has a fresh poise, a depth of feeling that is surprising in so young a woman. What has been happening to this girl?"

Happening? She had fallen in love with a polished sophisticate who, even in their brief moments with each other, had helped her more to develop mentally and emotionally than a younger, less sophisticated man could have in years.

"Health, work and love are the three most important things in life," she said to me once. And during the next seven years of her life, work came first. When she attended the first rehearsal of Elmer the Great (the play that brought her the greatest success) she saw a tall, gaunt man pacing up and down. "Excellent!" he said, observing her. "If you act as well as you look, the rôle is yours!" That was her introduction to the most wonderful man friend she was ever to know. Walter Huston.

"He has helped hundreds of people and I'm happy to say I was one of them," she said. "Frankly, I owe my entire career in pictures to Walter. I didn't want to sign with any studio. I was, believe it or not, afraid of the movies and of Hollywood! But after we finished the run of Elmer the Great. Walter went to Paramount's Long Island studio to make Gentlemen of the Press. He persuaded them to give me a part, then talked me into playing it!

"I had $1.75 in the bank and $1.50 in my purse when I received my first movie contract. But broke as I almost was, I would not have signed it if Walter hadn't advised me to. He has been the most remarkable and kindest friend a person could have."

It was after she had come to Hollywood that she made a second picture with Huston. The Virtuous Sin. And the young leading man cast opposite Kay was Kenneth MacKenna. She had known him casually in the east. Now began one of those swift, tumultuous romances that ended with MacKenna practically kidnaping her! On her way home in an ambulance from the hospital after a minor operation she stopped with him at the courthouse long enough to apply for a marriage license! And over at Catalina Island a few days later he swept her into matrimony—with a cook from the hotel as witness.

That was in 1931. Kay's star began to rise as his began to sink. She had been featured player at the time of her marriage. Less than a year afterwards she became one of the biggest celebrities in Hollywood. Undoubtedly MacKenna assisted her. He'd had much more experience in the theater than Kay, knew much more of screen technique. But finally the very work he'd done turned Frankenstein against their happiness. One-sided success can be knife-sharp in pricking romance. MacKenna left for New York. Kay made two futile trips there in an attempt to save the marriage. She did the bravest thing a woman can do. She offered to give up the career that meant so much to her. MacKenna wouldn't permit it. And in the end a Los Angeles court severed their ties.

"WHY can't Kay Francis stay married?" people ask.

She faced handicaps no woman would be obliged to face in ordinary circumstances. She has known heartbreak few women experience. It's in her eyes if you care to see it. But she can say steadily, fervently, "I have been most fortunate in the men I have known."

Today the most important man in her life is Delmar Daves. He is the one who persuaded her to do White Angel. A writer of unusual ability.

There isn't a man she knows who wouldn't fight at the drop of a hat for her. And occasionally she fights for them. Such as the other day when she stormed into the "front office" of the studio and demanded that a certain electrician be put back on her new picture, Another Dawn. He had a family to support. And Kay was adamant.

She's a gallant person, this Francis. If she owes much to the men in her life, they owe her something. For she has the sort of courageous spirit that inspires a man, a spirit that he can't forget.

You'll never guess what celebrity this white-coated gentleman is. It's Charles Correll, Andy of Amos 'n' Andy, with his wife. They're going to see Swing Time

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, lumbago, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

He's Not a Villain at Home!

fect evening is a quiet dinner at home, some music, and then a romp with the dogs. Part of the ritual is to assemble all five of them in our room, comb them, brush them, and put them through their tricks.

His love of children is just as great as his love for dogs. Not having been blessed with any of our own, we are planning to adopt two—a boy and a girl. We have had our application in for several months.

It's a custom of his to stop and chat on the street with a child. They seldom, if ever, recognize him out of character, a fact which delights him. He queries them on every conceivable subject. About their pets, dogs especially, their vacation plans and the current sports. He can tell you correctly about the marble season, the opening of the top-spinning and kite days and all the rest. He will listen eagerly to their discourses and join their enthusiasms with his own.

It was this insight and interest in boy-lore which resulted in his close friendship with little David Bartholomew. Their acting association in David Copperfield was so brutally unpleasant that he did everything he could possibly think of to make up for it between scenes. He wanted so much to have little David like him. They were together every possible moment between scenes, Basil doing tricks for him, surprising him with a toy or mechanical something he would buy for him, entertaining him, laughing—getting away as far as possible from the horror of the next scene.

I am not exaggerating when I say that Basil would have promptly adopted him had such a thing been possible. They are close friends. He often comes to dinner at our home and he and Basil spend hours in the den discussing books and pictures, designing miniature airplanes and boats.

TO ME, Basil's most outstanding characteristics are his enthusiasm, his idealism and his ambition. He can become enthusiastic about practically anything—a new sport, a new book, a new car, a radio, a new rôle, his own picture and anyone else's. It is stimulating not only in his work but in our marriage, because it is not a selfish enthusiasm. It embraces everything he knows I like.

He knows how conscientious I am about parties. We do not entertain often, but when we do, we aim for the perfect party. He planned with me for weeks for our Christmas party last year. He applauded my ideas for everything from decorations to hors d'oeuvres. The night of the party he didn't even wait for the door-bell to ring. He stood outside and greeted his guests at the gate! Never in the ten years of our marriage has he appeared disinterested in any of the things I like. I should believe that the honeymoon was over if I ever discover him less than enthusiastic about any of my varied interests.

He is a devotee of all kinds of sports. But when he participates it is never with the idea of relaxing or just having fun. It is always with grim determination to become as nearly expert as possible. He has a fencing lesson every morning of his life, not so much from the pleasure he derives from the sport but because he hopes one day to win a championship. It is the same with golf. And with swimming. He will spend hours doing a certain dive over and over again until he is confident that he can do it perfectly.

HIS idealism embraces many things—his work, his friends, business associates, women . . . The ideals he held for the stage he has brought to pictures. "If a part is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well," is his creed. He never plays a part just as a part—something to be dispelled from his mind as soon as possible. He lives and breathes his every character. A well known director who has watched his work gave him a great compliment. "Basil Rathbone has given much more to his parts than his parts have given him." That is true. Most of his rôles have not been important to begin with. But he has made them so with hard work, sincerity and ability. Only when the picture is finished does it leave his consciousness—and even then, if its been a noble character he thinks and speaks of it long afterwards as a person, someone whom he knew and liked.

Sophisticated as he is—or perhaps because he is so sophisticated—he dares to admit that he is an idealist where women are concerned. He admires, with a heartfelt appreciation, a lady.

While his ambition does not ride him to desperate precipices, it never sleeps. He has tempered his determination of purpose with an appreciation of patience. His is a tireless enthusiasm which stimulates rather than fatigues him because he directs it in so many different and interesting channels.

His ability to concentrate never ceases to amaze me. He can sit in a room with dogs barking, a radio going, a maid running a vacuum cleaner and work on a play or a poem, utterly unaware of anything that is going on about him. All of which may be well and good unless I have a plaint to speak, and then I fear his powers of concentration slightly overwhelm me!

He is the neatest, most orderly person I have ever known. Though he has a valet to look after him, he insists upon doing everything himself. His suits must be hung in the closet just so; and his shirts, socks, collars and ties each have a place and they are always in that place. He could go into a closet in the dark and immediately put his hand on any article he happened to want.

ON THE stage he has a reputation for being a particularly well dressed man and he spends considerable time and thought selecting his professional wardrobe. But he takes no interest whatever in his private wardrobe. If I don't watch him he is just as likely as not to go out wearing a green suit and a pink tie! For golf he wears a most disreputable looking sweater that is out at the elbows, and sags fore and aft. When I try to persuade him to wear something a bit more respectable he always insists that any other sweater would put him off his game.

He refuses to wear a hat and more than once he has embarrassed me by going to a theater or to the opera in stormy zero weather, wearing white tie and tails—and no hat!

For years I have tried to get him to carry a cigarette case. His excuse is that they are too thick or too thin or too large. I have bought him dozens of cigarette cases of all shapes and sizes but they are all neatly put away in a drawer and he still carries his cigarettes in the package in which they come. He has the generous habit of leaving them all "along the line." He can start out from home at any hour of the day, his pockets well supplied with cigarettes, but let him make more than three stops and he's all "out." He has the cordiality of proffering a smoke and then asking the party to "keep the pack."

He never carries a watch but he is always on time. When he goes to the theater or to a concert he likes to arrive early so that he can get comfortably settled in his seat and digest his program before the curtain goes up. I happen to be one of those persons who likes to arrive just at the curtain, so we compromise by going in separate cars and joining each other at the theater.

We do the same thing on motor trips. I like to drive fast and he prefers a more conservative speed. So we each drive our own car and arrange to meet at specified places.

HIS greatest passion is music. He doesn't care for modern music. But he will sit by the victrola for hours, listening to Wagner and Bach. His best friend is Fritz Kreisler who insists that even though he doesn't play, Basil has the soul of a true musician.

He loathes parties and really suffers when he has to attend them. It isn't that he dislikes people. But he loves to know them well. He adores conversation. If he meets people who interest him, he likes to talk to them at length, compare their viewpoints about innumerable subjects with him . . . a pleasure denied him at large parties. He hates evening clothes and thinks they are instruments of torture. With a little encouragement I think he would probably start a movement to persuade men to defy tradition and wear clothes of a more comfortable design.

His personality is a complete contradiction to his wants. Though he is the friendliest person I have ever known, he doesn't make friends easily. That is because he refuses to take friendship lightly; to him, it is a deep and serious thing which must stand the test of years before it can be said to be truly friendship.

THOUGH we have been married ten years, he still remembers to do all the tender, thoughtful, charming things which every woman adores. Never a day passes that he doesn't ring me up several times—just to tell me what he's doing and when he will be home. He is always bringing me "surprise" gifts. Sometimes it is simply a little bunch of wildflowers that he has picked while walking in the hills near our home; sometimes it is a book which he has heard me say I wanted to read; but always it is something.

He is never critical, though I must confess that I often do things which might irritate the average man. For example: I happen to be a night owl and I love to read in bed till all hours. Since we are old-fashioned enough to occupy the same room this means that the light shines in his face when he's trying to sleep. If I say "Wouldn't you like me to turn out the light?" his reply invariably is: "No, you go ahead and read as long as you want to. The light doesn't bother me."

If I hear strange sounds in the middle of the night and wake him up to tell him that I think there are prowlers in the garden he never says: "Oh, forget it and go to sleep" as many men would do. Instead he hops right out of bed and goes out to investigate the noises. While many married couples speak of being friends, we really and sincerely are just that. One of the nicest compliments he has ever paid me was when I chanced to overhear him say of me, "she is my dearest friend."

He is and probably always will be a romanticist. For instance, he still has flowers that he gathered during his walks around Stratford-on-Avon, pressed between the leaves of a favorite book. One of his most prized possessions is a little silken bag made from his mother's wedding gown in which he keeps the packet of letters which she wrote him when he was a boy at school. And he has the same fitted case which I gave him the first year we were married. It is scuffed and worn but faithfully he carries it on every trip or location.

And there you have a picture of the Basil Rathbone I know. Do you wonder that I say he is as unlike the man who played Murdstone as Bluebeard was unlike Little Lord Fauntleroy?

The girl on the cover, Rochelle Hudson, is in her early twenties, an only child, and has a subdued manner. Not long ago she vacationed in Honolulu, and rumors came to Hollywood that she and a young Lieutenant McCauley were romancing. A month or so after she returned to the Film City, he came to call on her, and they seemed to be having a lot of fun together. Right now, the ocean is again between them

What Do You Do with Your Little Finger?

—when you pick up a glass or cup? . . . You know from watching others that charm and poise can be destroyed instantly by the misuse of hands. And by the same token, the correct use of your hands can become a tremendous social and business asset. Great actresses accomplish much of their poise by proper hand action.

The makers of Frostilla—the famous skin lotion that keeps hands, face and body smooth and lovely—asked Margery Wilson, the international authority on charm and poise, to tell

- how to hold a cigarette
- how to pick up cards
- how to shake hands
- and how to make hands behave to the best advantage on all occasions

Margery Wilson gives the authoritative answers to these and other questions in an illustrated booklet on How to Use Your Hands Correctly. Although this booklet is priced at 50c, we have arranged to present it without charge to Frostilla users in the United States and Canada until May 30th, 1937.

Just mail coupon with the front of a 35c, 50c or $1.00 Frostilla Fragrant Lotion box (or two fronts from 10c sizes) and your copy will be sent FREE.

tually, the parts I wanted and success.

A few days before I had accepted a small rôle in a picture being made out on Long Island. But that hunch was so strong I promptly resigned from this assignment so I would be free to leave for Hollywood on a moment's notice. All this before Two Seconds had even opened. Crazy? Sure! But the day after Two Seconds did open, three film companies asked me to make tests and come to Hollywood. I accepted the best offer and I've been here ever since.

"TWO weeks ago I followed another hunch," he went on. "I went out on the boat (his 58-foot power cruiser, ZOA III, apple of his eye and darling of his heart). We were out of the harbor in open sea. Suddenly I knew I should turn back. The sea was rough and getting rougher, but I'd weathered many worse storms in my day. For quite a while I argued with that hunch—I really wanted to go sailing—but the hunch won. I turned back. Just as we left the rough waters and entered the harbor the steering cable broke, fouled and shorted some of the wiring and fire broke out. That would have meant real fun and games in the open sea in that storm. As it was I manned the fire gun, the boatman straightened the cable and we steered in by the motors right side up with care."

Foster also admits to hunches about the parts he plays. Let him read the script of a picture slated for him and he has an uncanny ability to foretell its fate at the box office. An outstanding example of this occurred about a year ago. He had just accepted a contract with RKO Radio—on a hunch—and happened to read the script of that studio's problem child, an unpretentious little story entitled, The Informer. Many people had turned thumbs down on the yarn but a half dozen pioneers—notably Producer Cliff Reid and Director John Ford—were pretty enthusiastic about it. Preston promptly joined their ranks.

Though he was important enough, as Hollywood rates its stars, to play leads—was even then slated for the top spot in the studio's super-special, The Last Days of Pompeii—he went to the powers-that-be and begged them for a part in The Informer. He said he'd accept any rôle no matter how small, even a bit. He got a part and took third billing.

"GREAT thing, hunches," Foster added solemnly. "Back in my stage days, when I was just another kid hoping for a job, I could always tell when I was going to get the part I was fighting for. Right palm would itch," he explained, dead pan.

"The whole game is luck—just getting the breaks. You hang on, and eventually your luck changes. Over and over I've failed to get parts and been terribly disappointed. But many times these plays would flop and in the meantime I'd have landed a job in a hit. Sure I've been lucky."

Well, maybe. What Mr. Foster—being a modest man—seems to forget is that little phrase, "You hang on." Hanging on isn't luck. Hanging on takes intestinal fortitude. Foster also seems to forget that managers aren't in the business for fun. Luck may, on occasion, have landed him jobs. But you can bet that luck didn't keep him in 'em!

It's Jane Withers, made up for Can This Be Dixie? One day on the set she was describing her new home to some chocolate cherubs. All of them were impressed except one little fellow, who eyed her hands, which had not been blacked up because she wears gloves a la Jolson. He sniffed with scorn. "Huh, yuh di'n' get yoah han's polished, did yuh?"

"Piffle," said he in embarrassment when this was called to his attention. Then he saw a way out. "It's because I was born on Friday and there are 13 letters in my name," he announced in the tone of one who explains all.

To his relief—he wriggles like a school boy when you pay him a compliment—he saw an assistant director headed his way to call him back to the set.

"Here come the British," he said with a grin. "But I'm getting used to it. As an Irish rebel leader in this new picture, The Plough and the Stars, I've been chased by Tommies for weeks. They're shooting at me this afternoon over on Stage 10," he explained casually. "With machine guns," he added.

"Do they hit you?" inquired an interested bystander breathlessly.

"Not intentionally," he grinned and went out to face the guns.

But as he went an observer noticed that all of his fingers were crossed.

Three Wise Men of the West!

decision. He wanted to see everything! Manicure kits, atomizers, powder jars, make-up boxes. But I was confident his final choice would please a certain lucky girl. No one can go wrong in selecting beauty aids of high quality for Christmas gifts.

Never have the shops offered a greater variety of enticingly packaged cosmetics than this season. Best of all, the price range is so great that one can find anything from "just a little remembrance" to a truly magnificent gift.

For the girl who is motion picture conscious (and find me one who isn't!) Max Factor has created a Christmas ensemble bearing the provocative inscription "A Gift from Hollywood." The smart box with red and gold decor contains a complete set of the Max Factor cosmetics used by many famous stars—face powder, rouge, lipstick, eye shadow, eyebrow pencil and mascara. The price is $4.50 and the ensemble can be had in scientifically harmonized colors for brunettes, brownettes, redheads and blondes. Delightfully "gifty," too, is the Factor box set of powder, rouge and lipstick, priced at $2.50. This smaller box is labelled "My Make-up Secret" and is autographed by a star of the color type you select.

In a stunning pink and ivory box Colonial Dames have assembled a special holiday offering of their All-Purpose Cream, Beautifier and Face Powder. The All-Purpose Cream is an excellent cleanser and emollient; the Beautifier is a powder foundation which gives the skin a velvety no-shine finish. Colonial Dames face powder can be had in seven shades ranging from Flesh to Ochre. The set complete is $3—a grand gift to give or to receive!

Leone Sousa has been called "most perfect" by such artists as Flagg and Christy. They saw her when she was in the Follies. She has just completed a rôle in Everyman, staged as a local outdoor spectacle in Hollywood

The new Glazo "Bandbox Kit" was designed with magical insight into the demand for a gift that is enduring as well as alluring. It is completely equipped with every manicure essential, even to two shades of polish, and the smart luggage lines of the little case make it an attractive piece of travelling equipment as well as a gem of convenience for home use. The "Bandbox Kit" may be had in blue, brown or black simulated leather and the price is $2.

The Cashmere Bouquet gift box carries in the cover its own greeting of Merry Christmas. Housed in this attractive holiday package are three popular items—a bottle of lotion, a box of face powder, and a bar of the fragrant toilet soap. The fresh floral scent of Cashmere Bouquet is a perennial favorite and will be a happy choice if you are in any doubt about the fragrance preferred by the recipient of your gift. The box assortment sells for $1.

Christmas stocking note! I have never yet heard a girl say she had too many compacts — or, for that matter, even enough. A compact is always a surefire gift success and can be counted on to bring forth exclamations of delight. A find among compacts is the "Little Miracle" which contains Tangee Lipstick and Rouge Refill in either Natural or Theatrical (a vivid shade for evening wear). The "Little Miracle" with its chromium case is both neat and petite—just the thing to fit into the toe of a Christmas stocking. The price is $1.50.

Don't think you must stick to special packages in selecting your Christmas gifts. An individual jar of cream or box of powder will make an infallible gift choice. Lady Esther fans, for instance, will be delighted with a box of the face powder in its gayly polka-dotted dress. The Lady Esther Face Cream makes an ideal companion gift, or will be welcomed alone. Large size box of powder is $1.10 and the cream is $1.38.

For the "something different" gift to fit a limited budget, Campana's Dreskin in the new deluxe bottle will win you smiles of appreciation. Dreskin is a crystal-clear cleanser with tonic qualities, both refreshing and efficient for use at any moment of the day to prepare the skin for fresh make-up. The charming faceted bottle makes a dainty addition to a girl's dressing table and will supply facial pickups for many weeks.

Chamberlain's Lotion is another inexpensive gift that will be appreciated and used to the last drop in the bottle. It makes an ideal family present for mother, dad, sister or brother. They'll probably all use it no matter which one receives it because dad will find it a soothing after-shaving lotion, mother will discover that it restores loveliness to chapped hands, and sister will praise it as a powder base. Chamberlain's Lotion is fifty cents for a generous bottle.

If you would like more details on the gifts described above or if you want information on additional gift sets, please feel free to write me. Address Janet Lynn, SCREEN BOOK, 1501 Broadway, New York City, and enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

A Jolly Good Fellows!

my very best performance because Mr. Crosby has put some of his own money in the picture. It simply must be grand! I wish, though, I weren't so worried about things."

That so talented a child should be embroiled in so sordid a legal brawl is indeed a tragedy. She is too young, perhaps, to view it with the disapproval of a mature world, but she is old enough to resent having her private affairs—the maelstrom of warring affections—revealed for others to frown upon.

She is young enough, we hope, to forget quickly. The unspoken, understanding sympathy of the grown-ups with whom she spends her days should help to erase the event from her impressionable mind. New parts, new pictures, new acclaim—all this will help.

WHICH brings forth the question of what the enterprising Miss Fellows intends to do with her future.

"I'd like to continue being a screen actress," she says seriously. "It would be fun to work straight through until I'm grown up. But if I can't, I'm going to try to become an opera singer—like Grace Moore."

Edith studies voice constantly. Hers is a cultivated soprano, rich and carefully trained. Already she can sing in Italian, French and Spanish. She plays the piano and the ukelele and hopes soon to learn to play the harp.

Dancing is another of Edith's interests. Even as a baby, her "Nana" told us, Edith improvised little routines of her own. She liked to pretend that she was a butterfly flitting about a garden, while imaginative melodies supplied her with rhythmic inspiration.

It amuses the effervescent Edith to talk of the "good old days" of picture-making. She actually remembers back a full decade. At thirteen, she is the veteran of more than one hundred pictures, even though you may remember her in less than a dozen.

"I was only an extra in the others," she explains. "The only important parts I played as a child were in comedy shorts."

Edith came to Hollywood in 1929. Before that—"I sang over the radio and danced and did imitations at society benefits. It was because everyone clapped when I stood up to entertain"—we both chuckled at the apt phrase—"that Nana brought me to Hollywood.

"Not that anyone in Hollywood seemed to care about our being here. It was months before I had a chance to do anything—and it might have been longer if I hadn't been able to hiccup. Yes, hiccup! Silly, isn't it, but that's the way things are in Hollywood." The shrug of her shoulders would have done credit to a much older actress.

Accompanied by her grandmother, Edith had gone to a casting office. A neighbor woman and her son who occasionally played in pictures were with them. The boy couldn't hiccup, Edith could—and thus began her career.

A good many years elapsed between hiccups and stardom. Years of privation, years of struggle, years of disappointment and disaster.

Yet they remained in Hollywood, waiting—as thousands of others have done and are doing—for the break which may or may not come. To them it did.

It was Richard Dix who turned the tide for them. He selected Edith to play his daughter in His Greatest Gamble. During the weeks of production, Dix learned of his screen daughter's bitter struggles. He arranged for her to have an agent, someone who would fight for parts for her, someone better equipped to make Hollywood sit up and take notice. He made "Nana" promise to come to him if ever an emergency arose. Never again would Edith go to bed without her supper because the cupboard was bare.

Other important pictures followed. Critics and fans became aware of the talented youngster. Most of the time she played sympathetic parts, dainty little damsels whom audiences wanted to cuddle and caress.

She Married Her Boss changed all that. And Edith secured the rôle of Claudette Colbert's obstreperous stepdaughter entirely by her own efforts. Director Gregory La Cava hadn't even given her a thought, for he wanted the world's nastiest brat and Edith wasn't the type!

Edith marched into his office on her way home from school one afternoon. Her dainty little dress, her long brown curls, her perky hair-ribbon all made her look demure and delectable.

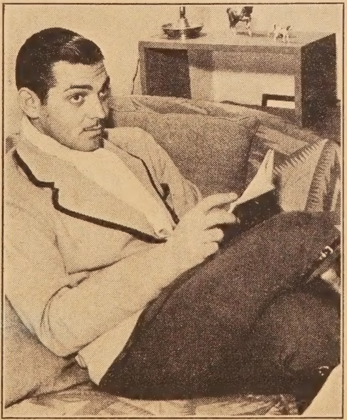
"I may look sweet," she scowled, "but I'm a good enough actress to be horribly nasty. It's all the fault of these curls anyway. I'll cut them off!"

The part was hers.

OUR favorite story about the youngster, oft told but worth repeating, springs from a critic's comment on her work in She Married Her Boss. Edith Fellows isn't a pretty child," wrote the reviewer, "but she's as smart an actress as the screen has been privileged to present."

And Edith, reading the review, looked up at her "Nana." "He says I'm not pretty," she remarked. "I guess he's right, but it's more important to be smart, isn't it?"

Yes, Edith, it is. In the battle of Wit vs. It, Wit has always won. Yet Edith has more than either prettiness or smartness.



Clark Gable, in his dressing room, looks as if he had just heard a "Knock, knock!" He and Joan Crawford are now busy filming Parnell

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c at all drug stores. © 1935, C. M. Co.

some stills of you playing golf, riding, swimming and at tennis. Ok?"

"I'm afraid not," I told him, "for I don't play polo, golf or tennis. And neither do I ride or swim!"

"WHAT?" He was astounded, and looked at me as if to say that I must be a little daft. Then he smiled again and took another drink. "Ah ha, I have it! We will take some stills of you digging in your garden! That's it, in your garden. A son of the soil and all that sort of thing and then . . ."

"But I don't dig and I have no garden!" I told him. He shook his head sadly! He bit his finger nails and asked,

"Then what do you do, to while away your time?"

"What time?" I asked him, for I now have five pictures scheduled ahead, "and must I do something with my time?"

"Well, you like music, of course? All the stars do. Don't you play the violin, the piano or something? What is your favorite opera and what do you eat, caviar, terrapin, pheasant and snipe, as you did in Diamond Jim?"

When I told him that my favorite composer was Wagner, because his music was loud and I could tell what it was all about—and that I only played the jews-harp and ate none of the things he had mentioned, he gave a deep sigh, drank the rest of the Scotch and went back to the office and wrote a piece about me spending my spare time working on a device for third dimensional photography, in the work shop in my basement. All of which was very nice, only I do not know anything about the third dimension and have no basement!

FOUR years ago, my income tax was but $21.00 and this year it will reach $6,000. I was, four years ago, on the outside of the studios, looking in and planning what I'd do if the break ever came. Today I'm on the inside, looking out. And I know what I am doing with my money. I'm putting it in the bank! When the first big check came, I saw those lean years marching past me like starved men in a bread line. I looked again at the figures on the check and handed it to Mamma Arnold.

"Go put it in the bank," I told her, "and then come back and pinch me to see if I'm dreaming!"

Today, my only pastimes are a game of what I call poor man's poker one night a week with old friends, a picture show another night. The other nights I stay at home and listen to my wife sing, or I read. You see, the only games I know how to play are those of my childhood. One was called Fogel Shiessen and then we went on picnics and had egg rolling contests and played baseball. That and pinochle I learned by watching my father, my Uncle Hilmer and Otto Schwenk play in Joe Opp's saloon on the Bowery, when I was about seven, are all the games I know how to play. And just try to get someone in Hollywood to play them! Merle Oberon, maybe or Samuel Goldwyn or Clark Gable!

IT HAS taken me more than thirty years to get from the dismal tenement on Houston Street, to the house I now live in. I could have let life lick me, like it did most of the tenement kids I was raised with. There are reasons why I did not. My mother was an invalid and there were six of us kids. My father was a furrier and I had to leave school after the sixth grade. At ten, I was soldering gimcrack jewelry in a basement, for $3.00 a week. Next I was a bell-hop at a German club, running so many errands that the bones of my feet gave way and I had to spend six months in casts! I sold papers and delivered meat, after my paper route was covered. I think the theatre was always in my blood for I used to save my pennies to go to the Star Theatre, at 107th Street and Lexington, and loved to listen to my Uncle Hilmer play the bull fiddle at Tony Pastor's place.

My mother died and my father's health failed. He had to go to a home for incurables. My Uncle Emil took me in and I tried a job in a lawyer's office, tried to learn the upholstering trade and then got a place at Columbia University, as an oiler in the engine room—which is as close as I ever came to college. I decided to become an engineer, but when I spent six months trying to figure out how many times a clock would tick in a week, if it ticked once every second, the teacher told me I had better try something else.

In the meanwhile, I had joined the amateur theatrical group in a settlement house at 76th and East River and studied my parts while tending the engines at night. Once when learning the lines of Pygmalion and Galetea, I let an engine run hot. And that was that!

A critic, John D. Barry, got me a place with the Ben Greet Players and I lasted until one night when Greet and I were doing a scene from Romeo and Juliet. He never learned his lines, but kept a bit of my paper under his long cape, to remind him of his cues. He did not like my deadpan method of delivering my lines and whispering aside to me, to get some action into them. I swung the curtain pole which served as my staff and it hit him under the chin. He went out like a light—and I left the Greet Players!

At the age of sixteen, I weighed 170 pounds and could play a man's rôles. I went with Maxine Elliott for a season and a half at $50.00 a week and was in the dough! I next played with Ethel Barrymore at the Empire in Midchannel and spoke two lines, "Brandy or kummel?" I used to flick the ash from my cigar and say, condescendingly, ". . . with Ethel Barrymore, you know, at the Empire!"

IT WOULD take a volume to relate all my experiences so I'll skip through the high spots briefly. Ten very lean years in stock followed. In St. Paul, in 1912, I had to jump a hotel bill. Seven years later, I returned to that city as a guest star at the same theatre. I was invited to the governor's mansion for tea, and you can imagine my embarrassment when his aide-de-camp proved to be the hotel manager I had beat out of a bill!

I had done some movie work at the old Essanay studios in Chicago, during those seven lean years, and pictures were beckoning to me. I succeeded Francis X. Bushman, at the fabulous salary of $125 a week at the Essanay. My fellow players were Henry B. Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton and others. After leaving films, I once spent nine months in New York, playing only two weeks.

I had married and my son and daughter came. I knew I would never get anywhere in New York, so I took the hard way to success. I went on a long tour in stock and did not see my wife and babies for five years! Something of my terrible loneliness for them must have gone into my acting. When at last I managed to get home and see my two children, it broke my heart because they did not even recognize me! I heaped their arms with toys and bought them all the ice cream they could eat, but I was still a stranger to them!

Later, I divorced my first wife and obtained the custody of my children. I made up my mind to get some place in the world, so they would enjoy a better childhood than I had. I knew that the movies held promise by them and in 1928 I went on a tour with Viola Dana, hoping to crash the studio gates. The only thing I got from it was a pass to visit the studios.

My first break came when I appeared in Los Angeles, in Whistling In the Dark. I was playing the rôle of a semi-cultured gangster and met Producer Felix Young and Director Tay Garnet at a party given by Lucille Gleason. I was engaged by Mr. Garnett to do a part in a picture called, Okay America.

I tried to land the rôle of the doctor in Rasputin but the studio turned me down because I was typed as a gangster. It was only when they went through the Casting Directory and saw my picture in the rôle of the Reich Chancellor in The Miracle of Verdun, wearing a spade beard and morning clothes, that they called me for the part. That was in June, 1932 and since that time I have played in thirty pictures and starred in Diamond Jim, Crime and Punishment, Sutter's Gold and Meet Nero Wolf. My present picture is Come and Get It, Edna Ferber's story of the lumber barons.

After that I am to do a series of biographical rôles in which I will impersonate such famous characters as Jim Fiske, Allan Pinkerton, Alexander Dumas and Canfield, the great gambler, on the screen. I now have enough assignment to keep me busy for more than a year, working every day! The lean years are past, at last!

I have learned to be more or less of a fatalist. I do not believe that hard work, honesty and having a definite goal in mind will get you to the top. It is all in the breaks you get. Suppose my picture had not been in the casting directory? I would still be, perhaps, outside the studios, looking in and not inside, looking out!

YES. At last the lean years are past, never to return, I hope! My Five Year Plan of saving my money, investing it safely and refusing to play the Hollywood game, will one day let me sit back and thumb my nose at those hungry years. I never want to be forced to bury my pride and haunt the studios, in search of bits, once my days of stardom are gone! I do not want young upstarts looking at me, pitiful, old and washed-up as a star, dependent for a living upon the favors of those who knew me when.

When I was young, passably handsome and had the slender figure of youth, the best I could do was $250 a week, on the stage. Now that my waistline has grown to Zeppelin proportions and my hair is no longer thick and glossy, the movies are trying to make a millionaire out of me. I shall not stand in their way!

[SEAL] HELEN M. LANO.
(My commission expires February 1, 1941.)

I am content and I love my work! I do not long for such things as tiled swimming pools, a string of expensive polo horses, a membership in an expensive golf club or invitations to the great homes of the rich. I suppose my Teutonic blood makes me feel that a comfortable home, a loving wife and three children whom I am no longer a stranger to, is enough for any man to ask of life! I do want to play, to see that my children have every advantage that money can give them. I do not want them to wake up at night, as I have, with the fetid smells of the New York East Side in their nostrils, or the screams of women, being beaten by cursing, drunken husbands, ringing in their ears!

I am sincerely grateful for all that Hollywood has done for me and mine. I have no illusions of greatness or grandeur, and I only hope that the good God will be kind enough to let me live until I can visit the places in the world which I have only read about, do the things I want to do and die, at last, knowing that I have contributed something to the art of the motion picture. My work in coming biographical films will give me an opportunity to put some of the great and colorful characters of American history on the screen. I am, at least, thankful for that!

I ONLY worry about one part of my work as a star in pictures and that is the boys in the publicity department. I am hopeless as what they call copy. All I can do is to buy them bottles of Scotch and let them stimulate their imaginations into making me a great and important man, which I am far from being.

Perhaps I will be far from your ideal of a movie star, one of the gods on Hollywood's glittering Olympus, after you have read this? It is merely the story of a boy, born in poverty, trying to play square with man and God, who at last got the breaks and appreciates the fact that Destiny, Fate, Providence or whatever you wish to call it, is more responsible for my success than any ability of mine.

You may feel that I should live up to tradition and play the Hollywood game but perhaps you have never lain awake all night, with the ghosts of the lean and hungry years leering at you from the shadows and giving you the cue, like a stage prompter whispering your lines, not to let the chance pass you by, to put away something for a rainy day when you are no longer a star of the screen.

But just between you and me, wouldn't I be a sucker to rent a Bel-Air mansion, with a swimming pool, buy imported cars and spend it all on tinsel, glitter and show? I'm still just Guenther Schneider, the boy from New York's East Side, who happened to get the breaks!

Don't read this if you're not interested in making yourself lovelier and more charming. Joan Crawford insists that Beauty is not important to any girl. You can put your more beautiful sisters in the shade, she says. Read her inspiring advice in January SCREEN BOOK.

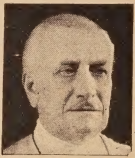
WHAT MILLIONS DO FOR CONSTIPATION

Largely on advice of doctors

Thorough relief in 1 hour



Yes—when you need a laxative DO AS DOCTORS DO. Dr. V. N. of Michigan states: "I have used and prescribed Pluto Water for 40 years." Dr. H. A. O. of Wisconsin writes: "I not only prescribe Pluto Water almost daily—but use it personally."

With Pluto there are no hours of overnight waiting, which allow dangerous poisons to be absorbed by the system, often resulting in that tired feeling—dull headaches—too often causing pimples, boils, colds.

Simply mix 1/5 of a glass of Pluto Water with 4/5 of a glass of hot water. You'll find this mixture pleasant, gentle, quick and thorough. In 1 hour you'll feel like a new person.

Pluto Water is bottled at the famous French Lick Springs, Indiana. It is a non-habit-forming saline mineral water. Two hundred million bottles have already been used. Get Pluto from your druggist—either in the 25c size or the large 50c size which contains three times the quantity.

A Preview of the Wealth of Adventure That Hollywood Readers May Expect as Predicted by
HARRY HAMMOND BEALL
Managing Editor

W. H. Fawcett

THE executive editor of SCREEN BOOK proudly joins with me in announcing that we have prevailed on Wilford Hamilton Fawcett, our president and publisher, who usually confines his literary genius to mastadonic memorandums under the initials WHF, to write with his own picturesque pen each month the final page of SCREEN BOOK.

This feature will start with the January, 1937, issue.

From his treasure house of memory builded through a life rich in exploits and adventure, he will extract rare jewels of exceptional reader thrills, relating experiences with the great and near great, from the movie mansions of Minneapolis to the oases of the Orient.

Our publisher knew the great "Roxy" when that showman was running an ancient theater in Minneapolis, and Jake Wilk, Warner Brothers story head, when the latter was press agent for the old Martin Beck Orpheum in the Minnesota metropolis. You shall read of those "I knew him when" days, redolent with homespun anecdotes.

In fanciful vein he will tell of his first visit to a picture studio to meet D. W. Griffith, just after David Wark had won world acclaim with his "Birth of a Nation."

Happy hours spent one winter in Havana listening to Nicky Arnstein recount experiences with Fannie Brice will be related.

How Jimmie Gleason and the publisher fought the Spanish-American war in the Philippines, one in cavalry, the other in infantry, will bring out previously unpublished incidents of the insular insurrection, fighting the mad Moros in the mountains of Mindanao; and on the island of Jolo where the Sultan of Sulu, often glorified in musical comedy, was personal representative for Mohammed, bearded prophet, who was the inspiring prototype of Trade and Mark Smith, and the House of David boys.

Speeding through space in racing cars driven by America's famed war ace, Eddie Rickenbacker, will have interest all its own to motor and aviation enthusiasts.

Fisticuff fans and hundreds of thousands of admirers of William Harrison (Jack) Dempsey will enjoy perusing the close-up which Publisher Fawcett will give of tours with Dempsey in his last public appearances in the ring.

Big game hunting in British Columbia, Africa and Alaska should intrigue those thrill lovers who sit in their easy chairs and dream of hand-to-hand tussles with Kodiak bears, Nubian lions, and man-eating monsters of forest and desert.

Deep sea fishing in New Zealand with Zane Grey should allure the Izaak Waltons, neophytes and post graduates of reel and rod.

Piscatorial hegiras in northern Minnesota when WHF rowed the boat while Bill Koenig, now general manager at Universal, snagged an eighteen pound northern pike should also furnish fancy fodder for fishing fans.

Entertaining with anecdotes of barracks and bivouacs 700 inmates at Alcatraz, present palatial abode of Al Capone, with troubles as a fight promoter in Minneapolis and St. Paul with Gene Tunney, Bartley Madden, "Tiger" Flowers, Jock Malone and knights of the squared circle; the work, worry and fun of managing the American Olympic trap shooting team that won the British Championship at London, and the world's championship at the Olympic Games in Paris in 1924; all will be related in whimsical Fawcett vein.

Personal contacts with such authors as Sinclair Lewis, Jim Tully, Floyd Gibbons, Arthur Guy Empey and other noted scribes will be packed with interest for avid readers of those writers.

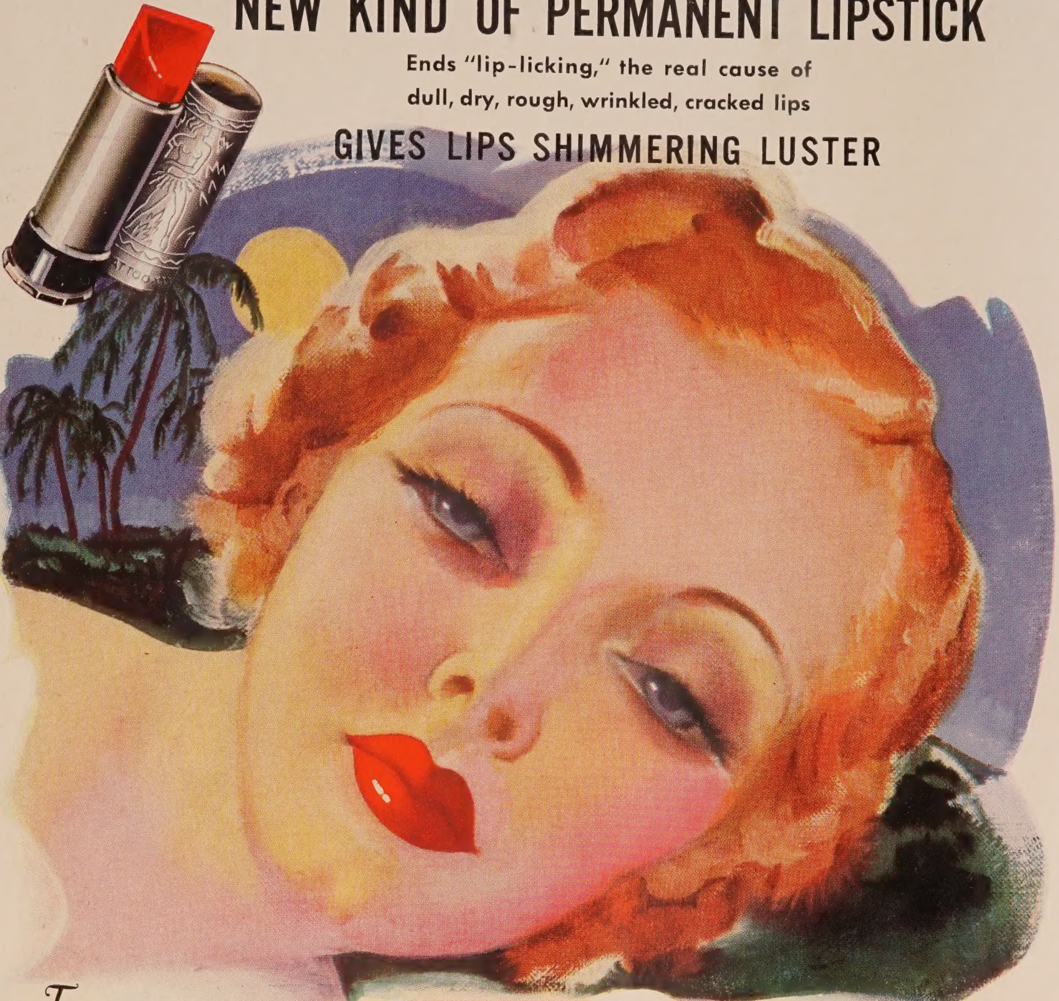
Being defeated by Clark Gable at skeet shooting in a special tournament at Santa Monica staged by Fred Stone shows what a square shooter Clark is, and the publisher will tell about that, too, in plain, unvarnished details.

These are just a few of the treats you may expect when the publisher takes over this page, so next month, be ready folks to give him a great big hand, as those night club masters of ceremonies are always ejaculating.

NEW KIND OF PERMANENT LIPSTICK

Ends "lip-licking," the real cause of dull, dry, rough, wrinkled, cracked lips

GIVES LIPS SHIMMERING LUSTER



Too dry, too indelible lipstick causes many a lovely lady to unconsciously lick her lips . . . thus removing the natural oils from the skin as well as the protective oils from the lipstick. Dull, dry, rough, old-looking lips result.

The New TATTOO is a permanent lipstick . . . its transparent South Sea color stays on longer than necessary . . . but, the New TATTOO contains magical moistening and softening agents that instantly end all desire to lick the lips!

Consequently dryness, roughness and wrinkles quickly disappear, the lips become thrillingly soft and luscious. And instead of having the usual dry, dull, uninteresting look, lips appear temptingly moist, with shimmering luster that's exciting... irresistible!

Too dry, too indelible lipstick does this to lips.

The New TATTOO restores lips to this.
